Pneumonia is particularly a disease of city life and crowded living. With our present knowledge the prospects are hopeful for the control of pneumonia in the future through prevention. This is of special importance to the individual. The avoidance of pneumonia is largely a question of personal precautions that prevent the development of the disease by lessening the predisposition to it.

Men in middle life, particularly those about fifty, must learn during unsettled weather to avoid crowds, especially when on foot and when they have been for a number of hours without eating. Late at night, when for any reason a meal had been missed, crowds are dangerous. If this lesson could be generally learned there would be less pneumonia among the well to do classes. The principal danger comes in crowded street cars, which, if possible, should be avoided at rush hours. It needs to be emphasized that the danger, from overcrowding is greatly enhanced by fatigue and going without food.

In a word, prevention of pneumonia is now much clearer than it was. Like all the other infectious diseases, instead of being a more or less inevitable dispensation, it has come to be recognized as due to certain definite factors which can be greatly lessened by public and individual hygienic regulations.—Journal of the American Medical Association.

THE GREAT PYRAMIDS.

Methods of Building and Wonderful Accuracy of Measurement.

Herodotus thus describes the building of the pyramid of Cheops, and his deductions are probably as correct as those of any archaeologist of today for the modern investigators have had to depend very much on the ancients for their interpretations of inscriptions etc.

"This pyramid was first built in the form of a flight of steps. After the workmen had completed the pyramid in this form they raised the other stones by means of machines, made of short beams, from the ground to the first tier of steps. After the stone was placed there it was raised to the second tier by another machine, for there were as many machines as there were tiers of steps, or perhaps the same machine. If it was easily moved. The highest part of the pyramid was thus finished first, the parts adjoining it were taken next, and the lowest part, that nearest the earth, was taken last." One thing that has been especially noted in the pyramids is the wonderful accuracy of measurement. In the great pyramid of Giza the four sides have a mean error of only six-tenths of an inch and twelve seconds in angle from a perfect square. The construction of this pyramid is thought to have employed 100,000 men for thirty years or more, probably half a century.—Atlanta Constitution.

Profane Golf.

"Do you think golf a suitable game for women?" "I should say not. Why, I saw a man playing once, and all he did was to walk around a field with a club in his hand and stop every few minutes to swear."—Buffalo Express.

Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man, but for one man who can stand prosperity there are a hundred that will stand adversity.—Thomas Carlyle.

MAJESTIC THEATER

Helen Gardner CLEOPATRA

—IN—

The famous story of a woman and a queen portrayed by one of the greatest aggregations of all star actors ever assembled for a moving picture production. Special orchestra music has been arranged for. On account of the great length of this wonderful picture (6,000 feet of film, one hour and forty-five minutes) and the extra expense of bringing this production to Charlevoix direct from the city, while still new, we will be compelled to charge an admission of 15 cents, children 10 cents.

Bass (all kinds)—Unlawful to sell or to take from inland waters, except with hook and line.

Small-mouthed and big-mouthed black bass—Unlawful to take more than 10 in any one day, or have in possession more than 10 at any one time, to take less than 10 inches in length or take in any manner in any of the waters from Feb. 1, to June 15, inclusive.

Game birds—Shall not be shipped by express, freight or baggage, nor in any other manner, but shall be carried only as open hand baggage. May have in possession 30 days after season. Members of club owning land in the state, to whom permits have been issued, may carry 20 ducks as hand baggage.

Hunter's license—Residents hunting protected game birds or animals, other than deer, outside the county in which they reside, must procure license. Fee $1. Persons hunting on their own lands, their minor children and employees are exempted. Resident deer hunter's license $1.50.

Unlawful for non-residents to hunt or kill protected game birds or animals, other than deer, without license. Fee $10. Alien residents (Continued on page 7.)

HELEN KELLER AT BAY VIEW

The Best Known Woman in the History of the World Today.

Climax This Year of Bay View Assembly, Saturday Evening, August Ninth.

The climax of the Bay View season will be the Helen Keller Day, Saturday, August 9. She is the best known woman in the world, for her story has been told in every language, and her wonderful history is without a parallel. Deaf and blind in infancy, she remained in intellectual darkness until she was nearly seven years old. "Up to that time her life was absolute darkness. At ten she learned to speak and, in 1904 graduated from Radcliffe College with distinction. While in college she wrote "The Story of My Life," which has been translated into fifteen languages. Mark Twain said, "The most interesting characters in the modern world are Napoleon and Helen Keller." Only within a year has she appeared on the lecture platform, and the papers, far and wide, have commented on the extraordinary occurrence. She will speak nowhere this summer but at Bay View and the desire to hear her is going to be so large that, to a cold disappointment, seats should be secured early. Her address will be, "The Heart and the Hand; or the Right Use of Our Senses." Her life-long teacher, Mrs. Macy, will give an introductory address. Her lecture is taken from the program and requires a special ticket. General admission 75 cts; reserved seats, $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00. The interurban Charlevoix and Bay View cars will wait until the close of the program to bring over people home.

NICHOLLS WELL PLEASED

Says Charlevoix is Well Equipped to Handle Grand Lodge Meeting.

Charles W. Nicholls, grand Chancellor of the K. of P. of Michigan, was in the city Monday, getting information for his annual report from the books of Keeper of Records and Seal, Will E. Hampton.

While here Mr. Nicholls visited the various hotels in the city, with a view being able to give all information needed at the meeting of the grand lodge in September, when an effort will be made to induce the grand lodge to meet to Charlevoix in 1914.

Mr. Nicholls was well pleased with the accommodations here, and stated that from his point of view Charlevoix was well able to house and entertain the meeting of the grand lodge. An effort among local K. of P.'s will be made to land the annual meeting for 1914.

An Open Letter

To the Merchants, Business Men and Citizens of Charlevoix:

Just a few words of appreciation, also telling you what I want you to do and why.

You have all heard of Pine Point and the most active of you have doubtless watched its growth with interest.

Last year in the series of auctions conducted, a total of sixty-seven lots were sold. About half of these were sold to the people of Charlevoix, the other half to resorters, who do not live here as yet. Since last season seven new cottages have been built. These summer homes vary in price from small, inexpensive, attractive bungalows to a residence costing over $3,000.00. This is an excellent showing in one year for this class of property and I feel that we have made a splendid start and merit the support for which I am going to ask you.

The tourist is the most fitting bird that flies. One resort is just as good to him as another, until he buys a lot, or becomes interested in a place and one tourist who makes investment in a place in Charlevoix is worth more, financially, to the merchants and the town, than twenty who drop in, stop at hotels for a few days and go somewhere else. If you will travel over the various lakes in the northern part of Michigan, you will find many of them much less attractive, with the shores lined with expensive cottages that are occupied year after year. Now, do you suppose that these cottagers just picked out these lots and settled down of their own accord? Emphatically No. Some real estate man who was trying to sell his lots was the first active force that started the tourist to thinking. The next, the people in the town urged the tourist to locate. Friends favorable to the place and other similar factors all combine to terminate in the landing of the beautiful cottage and permanent summer citizen.

With all these facts before you, one cannot ride out over Pine Lake and see its beautiful shore, both North and South and wonder why it is not lined with cottages for at least three or four miles on both sides adjacent to Charlevoix. The answer is that it has not been worked. There certainly is no location that has all of the attractions that a summer cottager wants with the unusually beautiful surroundings and close to the very best transportation by rail and water to the large cities from whence the resorters come. The fact that we have made such a splendid showing at Pine Point in one season clearly proves the desirability of Pine Point as a cottage place. This is but the beginning of cottages along the Pine Lake shore line and it will not be long until summer cottages will be seen several miles towards the east.

Now this is the way I want you to help me. We will probably have a couple of more auctions at Pine Point. Summer tourists do not go to land sales nearly so much by what they read in the papers or circulars as by personal invitation. I want each merchant to urge his customers, friends who are "stopping" at the house and every lady in town to tell her friends and call up the guests at the various hotels that she knows and urge them to attend these two final auctions. Also come yourself and bring friends with you regardless of whether you intend to buy a lot. We have plenty of free transportation both ways, automobiles and boats so that you will be at no expense in coming out to the auction. If all of you help to make these sales a success, it means the location of summer tourists in cottages and building up of Charlevoix. Towns are not made by accident or natural beauty and resources. Few places are so fortunately situated as Charlevoix in having people come of their own accord and it but needs your efforts to make them permanent investors in Charlevoix. Charlevoix can be made the best trading center in this part of Michigan if all the merchants, men, women and children join hands to make it so.

The next auction will be on next Saturday and Sunday afternoon, August 9th and 10th. The automobiles leave the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets from 1:30 to 3:30. The Pottawatamie will haul a load over about 2:45. Please be on hand in time. We give this transportation entirely free and it helps us to handle the crowd easily if you are on time.

Now everybody together help boost Pine Point and Charlevoix.

North Charlevoix Company George W. Fryhofer, Owners of Pine Point Auctioneer.

P. S. I am getting out a circular showing views of all of the cottages built at Pine Point and other pictures of development and scenery. They will be out of the printer's hands this week. Please secure copies of it and hand them and mail them to your friends. It is a credit to Charlevoix.

DIXON PUT UP A SCRAP

And Handed Sheriff Robbins a Package Before Being Arrested.

Sheriff Minus Two Teeth and Carries His Eye in Conventional Black.

Lost, strayed or stolen—one good looking sheriff, makes his home at Boyne Falls, medium height, smooth face, usually wears a soft felt hat and is a driver of a Studebaker car. When last seen was making his way home Saturday evening at Boyne Falls, minus two teeth and eye beautifully decorated in conventional black. Officers of the county seat, and Charlevoix friends desire information as to his whereabouts.

Don't blame Ford—he got it while performing his duty. Saturday night he was called to the electric light plant in his home town to look after Tom Dixon, superintendent, who was alleged to have been partially under the influence of liquor. Dixon objected, strenuously to be placed under arrest. He was in a fighting mood and proceeded to hand the sheriff something. But Sheriff Robbins is no coward and it developed that he can do some fighting when necessity arises. He went after Dixon and finally with the help of onlookers, landed his man in the village bastle.

By Monday morning Dixon was in condition to be arranged before Justice J. A. Davoll. Upon looking his record the justice found that Dixon had been out on suspended sentence for drunk and disorderly. He had signed the pledge and promised to refrain from drinking for a period of six months, and the time limit had not as yet expired. Justice Davoll ordered him committed to the county jail for 30 days on the old charge, and he was brought to this city the same day and placed in jail to serve his sentence. On the expiration of his sentence he will probably be arraigned on the charge of resisting an officer, which means a year at fonia.

Dixon is a man about 30 years of age. He is a good workman, and a bad man while in his cups. But it is hard on the sheriff.

A. O. O. G. PICNIC

To Be Held in Grove on Bert Ingall's Farm South of Town.

The A. O. O. G. will hold a picnic in Bert Ingall's grove, two and one-half miles south of Charlevoix, Friday, August 15. State speaker Stilson will be there and address the crowd that is sure to be present.

A good program will be given by members of the order and others. There will also be a ball game and athletic sports. Everything will be done to entertain those present, and a cordial invitation is extended to all. Bring a well filled basket and have a good time. Remember the date, August 15.

Adjudged Insane.

Robert Sammlers, an old and respected resident of Eveline township, was adjudged insane before Probate Judge Correll, Monday. He was taken the same afternoon to Traverse City by Under-Sheriff Novak, where he will be placed in the hospital for the insane.

PUT YOURSELF IN OUR PLACE

Editor of Courier is Willing to Trade Places With Subscriber.

When You Get a Statement of Your Account, Pay Attention to it.

If someone owed you from a dollar and a half to three dollars and let it drag along six, ten or twelve months, and in some instances a couple of years without saying a word about it, and you had to spend from two cents to a quarter in postage sending bills to him, it would make you sore, wouldn't it. And supposing that several hundred people owed you from a dollar up, and you had to spend from two cents to a quarter in postage on statements to each, how hot would you get under your collar when sent a small per cent of them paid any attention to your statements?

If you want to know what this latter proposition feels like, you will find the editor of this paper perfectly willing to swap places with you for a while. This is an illustration of what we are up against at the present time. During the last two weeks we have sent statements to everyone who owes back subscriptions to the Courier, with a request to call and settle, so that it will enable us to make a settlement of the estate of the late editor of the Courier, Mr. DuBuis. A large number have responded to our request, but a majority have failed to make an effort to see us or in any way pay attention to the statements received by them.

We do not believe in continually harping at our subscribers through the columns of the Courier about delinquent subscriptions. With very few exceptions we consider our subscriptions perfectly good, and were it not necessary at this time to close all outstanding accounts, and the necessity of protection ourselves financially, as well as keeping the postoffice authorities off our necks, we would not object to carrying them on our list indefinitely.

When you receive a statement from us, make an effort to pay it. Don't set down and write us a letter and accuse us of calling you a dead beat, and that you did not think you owed so much, and hundreds of other excuses that we have received so far. Every subscriber in arrears has been sent a statement at least from six to eight times a year, and there is no reason why you should not know to a cent what you owe on your paper.

If you cannot pay now, come to the office and talk the matter over with us. We are sure we can arrange it satisfactorily, but if you refuse to come to us we will be compelled to go to you.

We want to be fair with everyone and don't want anything that is not coming to us. We will meet you half way and even a little more than this, but it is absolutely necessary at this time to make a settlement by note or cash. To those who have already responded to our request to settle, we wish in this manner to express our thanks. You have done us a great favor and we surely hope the time will come some day when we can personally express our appreciation.

FOR WELFARE OF THE CHILD

Pencil Day Receipts Will Go to a Good Cause.

SATURDAY, AUGUST NINTH

Will Be Observed as Pencil Day in City of Charlevoix.

Ladies Will Serve Tea and Sell Home Made Candy—Work Deserves Special Recognition.

Saturday, August 9 will be Pencil Day in Charlevoix, and the proceeds used for child welfare work in Michigan. Mrs. Harry Nicholls will act as chairman, and Mrs. Stanley Bush as secretary.

The following ladies will act as patronesses: Mesdames A. L. Creamer, J. L. Crane, W. E. Hampton, Frank Sears, Nellie Wood, G. W. Crouter, W. R. Barney, G. W. Priest and H. S. Marston. The ladies will serve tea, and home made candy will be sold. It is hoped that the booth will be well patronized as the ladies are making every effort to make the day a great success.

You will be able to get a pencil, a tag, a smile and a thank you all for the same price, and each and every citizen should consider it a privilege to contribute to this worthy cause.

Organized charity has done much to better conditions in families in larger centers and has been of untold value to smaller communities wherever organized. Much of the work of the Child Welfare League is confined to the rural districts, where it is found that there is just as much poverty, cruelty, desertion, illegitimacy and neglect in accordance to the population, as there is in the larger cities. There is something wrong when sixty per cent of the children who are sent to orphan asylums and child placing institutions come from the rural districts of the state.

The trouble lies in the fact that there has been no organized charities with trained social workers to look after people in distress, to know what could be done to hold them together.

The Child Welfare League stands for the home and every effort is made to reestablish broken homes, and to encourage the one remaining parent to keep the family together. Where a mother is left, employment is found for her where she can have one child with her, and the others placed in private boarding homes, supervised by the league. Children needing medical attention are provided for by the league, in case parents are handicapped by poverty.

The work is under the able directorship of Mrs. Cora Lumping, 1207 Chamber of Commerce, Detroit, and any one wishing to report a case, can do so by writing to this address, and immediate attention will be given.

Charlevoix 11, Boyne City 10.

An exciting game of baseball was pulled out at the last grounds Sunday between Charlevoix and Boyne City, Charlevoix winning by a score of 11 to 10.

In the last half of the ninth inning the score was seven to four in favor of the visitors with a full battery of the sphere for three sacks and brought in three runs. He was followed by Dickerson who brought him home on a single. In the ninth the "Mighty Gill", with the score ten to nine, made a two sack and won the game for Charlevoix.

Willis struck out twelve men up to the seventh and then the score keeper forgot to keep the count, but it's worth the price to see Gill hit the ball.

Had a Jolly Time.

Mr. and Mrs. Mosé Bowdish entertained a number of friends and relatives Sunday. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Byron Bowdish and children of East Jordan, James Cook and wife of Marion, Mrs. Lottie Chase and children of Mobile, Mississippi, and Miss Mildred Hutton and Wesley Sudman of East Jordan. An excellent dinner was served and the day spent in a manner that will be long remembered by those present.

Colonel TODHUNTER of Missouri

By RIPLEY D. SAUNDERS

Copyright, 1911, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

A moment later the witness was turned over to the state. The cross examination strengthened rather than shook her testimony for the defense.

Briefly under the questioning of the leading counsel for the defense Colonel Todhunter told of his visit to Lottie May Doggett on the forenoon following the murder of Stamford Tucker.

"Where did you go, Colonel Todhunter," asked Major Dryden, "when you left the Doggetts' house after that visit?"

"I went to a cabin across the road, just a few yards down from the Doggetts' gate, to see Aunt Miranda Ransom, an old colored woman who lived there."

"What was your reason for wanting to see Miranda Ransom that time, Colonel Todhunter?"

"I wanted to engage her to keep a close watch on the girl, Lottie May Doggett, sub. I did not believe that Tom Strickland killed Stamford Tucker, nor did I believe that he was guilty of wronging Lottie May. He himself had told me that the girl confessed to him that Stamford Tucker had been minkin' love to her secretly. I felt sure in my own mind that Stamford Tucker had been killed for wronging Lottie May Doggett, and this would mean that he was killed by some man who loved Lottie May and knew that Stamford Tucker had wronged her or that the girl herself had killed him. I wanted somebody to watch that house, and I knew I could depend on Aunt Miranda Ransom better'n on anybody else."

"Did you see this woman, Miranda Ransom, sub?"

"I did, sub. She promised to keep a close watch on the girl and on the house, and she kept her word. It was through her that I learned the news that sent me away to Ralls county looking for Chickasaw Jesse Bream and Lottie May Doggett, sub."

"Do you mean that she learned of their flight, Colonel Todhunter?"

"Yes, sub. She crept up close enough to overhear what they was sayin' when they met in that clump o' trees between the Doggett house and the Ransoms' cabin, sub. She heard all that went on between 'em, sub. She was waitin' for me when I got home from Colonel Bill Strickland's the night before this trial began, and she told me the whole story."

"What did you do then, Colonel Todhunter?"

"There wasn't but one thing to be done, sub. If Chickasaw Jesse was to be caught and Tom Strickland saved from hell, found guilty of murderin' Stamford Tucker. That one thing was to follow Jesse Bream and Lottie May Doggett without losin' a minute's time and arrest him before he got out of the state, sub."

The witness then confirmed in detail that part of the girl's testimony relating to the capture of Jesse Bream.

"Did this man, Jesse Bream, make a confession of his guilt as being the murderer of Stamford Tucker?"

"Yes, sub. And, furthermore, under oath, he told a mighty strange story of a happenin' that in itself might ha' hung Tom Strickland."

There was a quick stir of heightened dramatic expectancy in the courtroom. Major Gentry Dryden paused until it had subsided.

"What was that strange story, Colonel Todhunter," he asked, "which, as you have just testified, the man Jesse Bream told you and the sheriff of Ralls county under oath?"

"He told me, sub, that Tom Strickland himself appeared on the scene of the murder almost the next moment. 'As I hollered to Stamford Tucker, cussin' him and tellin' him that I was a-goin' to kill him for havin' wronged Lottie May,' said Chickasaw Jesse Bream, 'Stam Tucker drew his gun and dired just the mink I fered. My shot got him, but he'n didn't tech me. When I saw that he was a-layin' still I ran up to his body, looked down and saw that I had plunked him through the head, right between the eyes, and that he was stone dead. Then I turned and started to run down the road to'ards the town of Nineveh."

"I hadn't gone any way hardly when a man came to'ards me on that road. When he saw me he laughed, and the next mink he outis with his gun and dired at me. I was skeered, 'cause I didn't want to be recognized, and I turns and runs straight through the woods, lookin' back once or twice. And that man came to the edge of the woods, and I heard him laugh and then mutter like he was drunk and talkin' to himself, and then he deliberately turned back on the Black Bottoms road and went to'ards town."

"Did Jesse Bream tell you and the sheriff of Ralls county, Colonel Todhunter, that he recognized the man when he thus met after having killed Stamford Tucker?"

"He did, sub."

"What was that man's name?"

"It was Thomas W. Strickland, sub. Chickasaw Jesse Bream cussers 'em."

he saw him plunkin', and he takes his oath that it was Tom Strickland."

"Did Jesse Bream tell you what he did after that encounter?"

"Yes, sub. He says that he lay out in the woods for about an hour and that then he went back on the road and came into town and the next day he went to Oklahoma, not gettin' back here to Nineveh until the day before the trial began, sub."

There was a momentary pause.

"Colonel Todhunter," resumed Major Dryden quietly, "is there any record of this confession?"

"Yes, sub. The confession is written, sworn to and signed by Jesse Bream. It is attested by two competent witnesses. It is in the possession of the sheriff of Ralls county. And the sheriff of Ralls county has just delivered the person of Jesse Bream to the jail authorities here in Nineveh, sub, charged to him, on his own confession, with the murder of Stamford Tucker."

"May it please the court," said Major Dryden, "the defense will next place in evidence this sworn confession of Jesse Bream and ask that the case against Thomas W. Strickland, charged with the murder of Stamford Tucker, be dismissed."

There was a sudden and tensely dramatic stir through the crowded court-

"What are they a-goin' to do to my girl?"

room. It was followed by a triumphant cheer from a group of Tom Strickland's friends near the door.

And twenty minutes later Thomas W. Strickland stood a free man, cleared of the dreadful crime that had been laid to his doing.

But Colonel Todhunter was not among those who first crowded around Tom Strickland with their congratulations. He went instead to where he had seen of "the Doggett almost fairly dead" and, sitting apart within the crowded enclosure after having given his testimony, "like upon the faces of the old man and his granddaughter there rested an expression of pathetic dread."

"What air they a-goin' to do to my girl, Colonel Todhunter?" asked old Doggett piteously. "Tain't all her fault that she done what she done, keepin' her mouth shut about Chickasaw Jesse and then runnin' away with him. She wanted to tell all she knowed, but she was skeered for her life. Colonel Todhunter, I ain't excusin' her none for her own badness. God knows, but the law ain't got no call to punish her along o' Chickasaw Jesse's sin."

The law ain't goin' to punish her, Rafe," replied Colonel Todhunter, "we already made sure just how Lottie May wants. She'd ha' been an accomplice o' Chickasaw Jesse's for not comin' here at first and tellin' what she knew if the truth wasn't plain now that she didn't tell because Chickasaw Jesse threatened to kill her if she did."

And her wantin' to testify in Tom Strickland's behalf and doin' it like she did proves that she was innocent just the minute she was a free agent. I've laid all these facts before the court, Rafe. The law ain't goin' to punish Lottie May."

Old Rafe Doggett bowed his white head as if in prayer.

"Thank the Lord God Almighty!" he spoke at last. "And me and Lottie May won't trouble Nineveh's folks after this day. I'm a-goin' away from here, Colonel Todhunter. I couldn't live here no more to save my life. And Lottie May's a-goin' with me—goin' some where away from here where her mother's shame and hers won't be in everbody's mouth like now in Nineveh."

"You can go any time you want to, Rafe," said Colonel Todhunter. "Th' ain't no charge against Lottie May on the docket of this court. You can go now if you feel like it."

The old man and the young girl moved toward the door.

Colonel Todhunter accompanied them, screening both, as far as lay in his power, from the curious staring of the multitude.

Lottie May spoke no word during their progress. Her face was still tense with the shadow of that dread but late lift from her soul. More than ever did she seem the Lazar of this little Missouri community—a Lazar now going into internment exile.

At the door she turned and looked back into the courtroom. Her eyes rested upon Tom Strickland's face. Mary Todhunter stood at Tom's side. A great joy shone in her eyes. Tom's face glowed with a deep fondness upon this old woman he loved so dearly.

With a little cry of poignant heart-break Lottie May Doggett threw one arm across her grandfather's age-stooped shoulders, seeming to draw him and herself beyond the feeling of that which had so moved her to uncontrollable anguish.

The next moment the door had closed upon the two, shutting them out from Nineveh's vision.

CHAPTER XV.

Colonel Todhunter Confronts Defeat.

DURING a lull in the excited jubilation that followed Tom Strickland's acquittal, and having first congratulated Tom himself, Mrs. Todhunter turned to Colonel Strickland, who stood with her husband a few feet away, Colonel Todhunter having by this time joined the group.

"I feel sure you know how rejoiced I am that Tom has been acquitted," she said, her frank eyes testifying to the truth. "I have always loved him as if he was my own son. But I had to do what I did after that dreadful night of the party at the hotel. The accusation made against him by that girl, Lottie May Doggett, left me no alternative but to forbid him seeing Mary unless he could clear himself of the sin with which the girl herself charged him."

"I know just how you felt, Mrs. Todhunter," replied Colonel Strickland. "It was a terrible situation. Naturally, it hurt us all that Tom was made to appear guilty, but there was the cold fact that Lottie May Doggett publicly declared him guilty, and it seemed incredible that she would do this if he was innocent. And I know now that you are sincerely glad because the truth has come out. You don't have to tell me anything about it, ma'am."

At this moment Mary herself, a great happiness shining in her face, although her eyes were wet with tears, joined the group. Colonel Strickland turned to her with a smile.

"I delivered that message of yours to Tom, Miss Mary," he said. "The message you gave me when he was in the jail. I just wish you could have seen how proud and happy it made him! He needed it mighty bad that day."

Mary blushed rose red. "Please don't remind Tom of my message, Colonel Strickland," she cried in a pretty confusion. "I'll be ashamed to look him in the face again if you do."

"I don't see why you should be," laughed Colonel Strickland. "It just simply proved to Tom at a mighty welcome time that the young lady he loved so dearly loved him in return, so you ought to be proud of it, instead of ashamed."

And at this juncture Colonel Todhunter intervened. "Don't you let that Mary Todhunter fool you, Bill Strickland," he chuckled. "She's as proud of that there love sick message to her sweetheart at such a romantic moment as if it was all in a sentimental story and she was the heroine of the story. And when she and Tom have gone and got married—well, between you and me and the gatepost I'll bet poor Tom never bears the last of it."

Mary blushed furiously as the other laughed.

"When she and Tom are married," repeated Colonel Strickland, his eyes resting fondly on Mary's face. "Doesn't that sound good, though?"

Then he turned politely to Mrs. Todhunter. "When shall it be, Mrs. Todhunter?" he asked. "You and Miss Mary have got to be good now and name an early day. When shall it be?"

But at this alarming question Mary herself gave a little cry of suddenly protest, frantically clutched her mother's arm and fairly dragged Mrs. Todhunter out of range, yet not with entire success, for the latter turned a laughing face back to Colonel Strickland as she was thus conveyed away.

"Never you mind, Colonel Strickland," she made doleful answer. "I'm going to work hard for Tom. I ought to do it, and I will."

That same evening Colonel Todhunter went to confer with the Hon. William J. Strickland at his home concerning the latter's campaign prospects. The outlook was not encouraging.

"Bill," said Colonel Todhunter, "there's just one chance for us. Tom's acquittal may bring about a reaction of public sentiment in your favor if two days is time enough for the news to sink in and create the natural effect. They'll all know of it. The St. Louis and Kansas City papers are full of the excitin' story of his sudden acquittal and every other newspaper in the state will have a lot about it. That's where it may prove a boom-tang for the Yancy gang. They worked up public interest in the case, thinkin' it would ruin you body and soul."

Colonel Strickland shook his head. "It's too late, Thurs," he replied. "I reckon I'll have to stay here. But I ain't worryin' about that. I want to hear now that my campaign fund has been raised, so as to put you out of danger of any loss."

The light of battle was in Colonel Todhunter's eyes.

"I'm thinkin' about your gettin' that there nomination, Bill Strickland," he exclaimed. "Not about the money. Now that we got 'em beat in Tom's case, I'd like to whip 'em straight down the line, sub."

The other laughed, but shook his head. "They've got too big a hulke on us. Everything's fixed now to steal the St. Louis and Kansas City vote for old Steve Yancey, and that'll settle it. The judges and clerks of election are all Yancey crooks, appointed before Bob Peyton, the Yancy chairman of the board of election commissioners in St. Louis, took sick and died and Randolph Carter was named to fill the vacancy, and the St. Louis and Kansas City vote is what's going to beat me."

Colonel Todhunter snorted indignantly. "A Yancey crook overtake me or the other's hiked, sub!" he exclaimed. "And I ain't liked till I b-

SUCCESS

- Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.
- In business most men fail even to get a start, because they lack money.
- The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.
- You can open a savings account in this bank with $1.00 or more. We invite you to do so.

ler "Nuff," sub. Th' ain't time now to do no more on the stump, but I'm a-goin' to send out a mighty big batch o' telegrams to our best workers all over the state and see if we can't make things count the way they ought to count. When I quit fightin' you'll either see the worst whipped man you ever saw in all your born days—or you'll be the Democratic nominee for governor of Mizzourah, Bill Strickland!"

Colonel Strickland's weary eyes were contemplating the speaker with a whimsical envy in their expression.

"I-gad, Thurs," he said, "I never thought I'd begrudge another man his pluck, but I'm doing that with you now, my friend. I'm too tired to fight any longer, old fellow. That's the truth of it. The campaign's over as far as I'm concerned. I don't want to hear anything more but the final results, and I'm going to write my friends in St. Louis not to bother sendin' me anything but that. The truth is, Thurs, this trouble of Tom's has taken something out of my spirit that don't seem to come back."

"I'll come back, Bill," said Colonel Todhunter stoutly. "And you've been standin' the gaff like a gamecock, sub. You've done all a man in your position could ha' done, and your friends will do whatever fightin' remains to be done. You just take it easy, sub."

Tom Strickland entered the room. He looked pale and worn, but happy, and there was a staidier manliness in his face.

"Mother's asking for you and Colonel Todhunter, father," he said. "She wants me to tell you that this isn't any time to be in the politics."

SUGAR REMEDY FOR CROSS EYES

State Dairy and Food Department Analyzes Quack Remedies.

Ensign Remedy Company of Battle Creek, Michigan, Has Many Cure-Alls.

State Dairy and Food Commissioner Helme has had another analysis made this time of an advertised remedy which is alleged to be good for many things. The result of the analysis is given in bulletin No. 23 of the state dairy and food department, together with characteristic comments by the commissioner, as follows:

Advertisements of the Ensign Remedies company at Battle Creek, Michigan, attracted the attention of this department some time ago and an employee was instructed to answer the "ad." The literature sent him in response consisted of two booklets extolling the virtues of the Ensign Remedies.

The Ensign Remedies in these booklets are recommended for all the diseases, mental and physical, that men and women are heir to and then some; the only disease we can think of that is not mentioned in the book being "political itch."

Among the diseases specifically recommended for treatment by the Ensign Remedies are deafness, barbers' itch, gotte, gray hair, bunions, cancer, bow legs, lock jaw, ingrowing toenails, toothache, tuberculosis, smallpox, warts, worms, rheumatism, paralysis, rupture, mumps, toothache, epilepsy, cross eyes, cataract, emaciation and corpulency. The various remedies have all the same outward appearance. Each consists of a small vial holding four drams containing small white pellets about the size of a mustard seed. The price is $1 per vial and six pellets is a dose. The different remedies which are to be taken internally are distinguished from each other by numbers and letters.

A distinguishing feature is the use of internal remedies for mental disease. According to their booklet if you are hateful you should take Remedy 186 A. If you have delusions that you see animals and reptiles, you should take 187 A and B but if you only "see" persons and people then 187 E and F is the proper thing. If you have a religious delusion that you are "lost and damned" the book says take 187 L and M but if you only "despair of your soul's salvation" take 188 E and F.

For stage fright the book recommends 205 A and B. If you are disappointed in love you are also advised to take 205 A and B, but if you are married and your wife is jealous, give her 195 A and B. If the hired man is lazy and lacks ambition, the book recommends 196 A and B. If you have a general tendency to commit suicide take 202 A and B, but if the tendency is to suicide by the razor route, the book advises 202 F and F, but if you prefer the gun route, then the book advises 202 G and H.

What are these remedies that cure everything from cancer to corpulency, from disappointed love to ingrowing toenails. In the literature it is called the "Biochemic Treatment."

Ensign says "whatever is sufficient to build a human body is sufficient to keep it in repair. The booklets say, "The Ensign Remedies are composed of food stuffs and substances necessary in every human body." The booklet also states "These Remedies are to be relied on in the most dangerous ailments. The appropriate remedy will relieve pain more quickly and certainly than the most powerful drug."

The booklet also states, "Remember you are not taking medicine, which will be used if needed and thrown off as waste if it is not."

Our dry analysis sent for the respective cures for appendicitis, hay fever and pneumonia. The analysis of each remedy showed each to be composed of 100 per cent sugar. We doubt the efficacy of sugar as a cure for love sickness where the system is already overworked with sweetness. Perhaps it might do for jealousy or irritable dispositions. Anyhow, if residents of Michigan want to try the sugar cure for all diseases, let us suggest that instead of buying the Ensign Remedies at $1 per vial, which is at the rate of $50 a pound for sugar, that they take as much sugar as can be held on the point of a pen knife three times per day. It would probably accomplish fully as satisfactory results.

WOOD SELLS OUT

Floyd S. Belles Purchases Well Established Electrical Business.

Floyd S. Belles, electrician, who has for some years been employed by the city and later an employee of DeForest H. Wood, purchased the latter's business recently, taking possession August 1.

Mr. Wood, who has been in business here for some time, will locate the latter part of this month at Evansville, Indiana, where he is one of the stockholders of the Service Electric Company, a $40,000 corporation, of which he is secretary. M. W. Swift, who for the past ten or twelve years has been superintendent of the electric light plant at Boyne City, is also a member of corporation, holding the position as treasurer. Evansville is a city of 95,000 inhabitants and with the known ability of the two men from Charlevoix county, the success of the venture is well assured.

Mr. Belles will continue the business in its present quarters, and supply his customers with the best there is in electrical equipment. His ability as a first class workman and reputation as one of Charlevoix's coming young business men will be a great help to him in the increasing the already well established business, he has purchased.

PROGRESSIVE ANIMOSITY.

Reason For the Lad's Downheartedness Somewhat Involved.

He was a very downhearted and disgusted looking boy, with torn clothes and rumpled hair and a few suspicious bumps on his face, so I stopped and asked him what the matter was and whether I could be of any assistance to him.

"Now, yer can't do nothing for me; it's a business trouble," he explained. "Ah! Have you lost your position?" I asked.

"Now, and I wouldn't care if I had. The president of our company is the worst old dunder in New York."

"Does he ill treat you?" I said kindly.

"Now, he doesn't even know me by sight; but he come into the office cross as hounds this mornin' and climbed up the secretary's collar the worst you ever seen."

"But how did that affect you?"

"Why, don't you see?" the boy asked impatiently. "The secretary had to get square somehow, so he jumped on the cashier with both feet, and after the cashier'd thought it over and got good and mad he jumped on the bookkeeper, and the bookkeeper jumped on the entry clerk, and the entry clerk jumped on the bill clerk, and he just sailed in and gimme particular rats. An' there wasn't no one fer me ter jump on, so I thought I'd go out and lick a district messenger."

"Well, couldn't you find one to lick?" I asked.

"Oh, I found him quick enough, but I didn't lick him."

"Why not?"

"'Cause he licked me!"—Puck.

The Cost of High Living.

The student—If I should give you a dime, what would you do with it?

Ophthalmist—Well, first, I would get a hair cut and a shave. After that I would take a Turkish bath, and, while doing the sanitary, I'd order a complete change of clothes, from high hat to shoes. Having dressed, I would go to the best hotel in the city and pay for a year's board and suit of rooms in advance. With a part of the balance I would buy an automobile and several aeroplanes, with complete equipment for one year. Then I would make my will, leaving part of my vast income to my poor relatives, well knowing that such giving for one year would kill even a man of my constitution. However, some of my wealth should go toward building libraries and establishing pension funds and medical factories for dead heroes and bachelors.—Pittsburgh Press.

Elephant's Milk.

A schoolteacher who was giving a lesson on "Food" was interrupted by one of his pupils.

"Please, sir," he said, "Jimmy says he knew a baby that was brought up on elephant's milk, and it gained ten pounds in weight every day."

"James ought not to tell you such rubbish," said the teacher. "Whose baby was it that was brought up on elephant's milk?"

"Please, sir," answered Jimmy, "it was the elephant's."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Had It With Him.

It was after the concert, and the talent was, as usual, being criticised.

"I certainly envy that man who sang the bass solo," ventured a young man.

"Why?" inquired one of the young ladies in astonishment. "I thought he had a very poor voice."

"So did I. But just think of his nerve!"—Exchange.

Worst of the Penalty.

"You are sentenced to a year's imprisonment at Atlanta," said the judge. The prisoner sank back into a chair.

"But the reduction of time will be considered."

"I have feared that out. I don't object to the visit, but I dislike to have to travel so much in warm weather."—Kansas City Journal.

His Experience.

Pension Officer—Well, Michael, so you're living yet?

Michael, aged seventy-five—"Deed, an' I am, sor, an' I always notice that every year I don't die in March I don't die at all that year."—Punch.

Force of Habit.

"Well, so you are now worth millions, eh?"

"Yes; struck it rich."

"Torn yourself away from all the old habits of life, I suppose?"

"No, I cling to a few. I still empty the drip pan of the refrigerator every night."—Pittsburgh Post.

Made Over.

"He is a self made man, isn't he?"

"He was."

"Then he is."

"No, the woman he married didn't like the result he had accomplished, and she has made him over."—Honesty Post.

Might Find Some.

"The eggs of the great auk are worth $1,000 each. The bird is extinct, but its eggs fetch up considerably."

"Um! I think I'll give my child storage plant a thorough overhauling."—Kansas City Journal.

Have you tried them?

A GAME OF BLUFF

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Adrian Oglethorpe, a steady, matter of fact fellow, was engaged to Lucy Ashurst, a butterfly. Oglethorpe was much in love with his fiancée, but on thing about her troubled him very much. After settling his affection upon one girl he had no desire whatever to pay any attention to any other and could not see why Lucy must needs accept the attentions of other men.

One day he remonstrated with her upon what he called flirting after his engagement to him and told her that if she continued it he would break the engagement. A young girl—Lucy, at any rate—is like a child whose ruling passion is to carry disobedience as far as possible without getting a whipping. Lucy let her lover "second," as she called it, to his heart's content with making a reply. While he was "laying down the law" to her—this was also an expression of hers with regard to his lectures—she was laying plans for breaking his injunctions.

During the next few weeks after this "laying down the law" Lucy flirted more than ever. Adrian bore it stoically till he had made up his mind to carry out his threats, then wrote her a note breaking the engagement.

Lucy, who had expected something of the kind and was prepared for it, paid no attention to his note whatever.

That which a child most dreads is "the dark." On the same principle that which an adult most dreads is uncertainty. If Lucy had pleaded with him, upbraided him, even scorned him, he would have been ready for her, but to be left without any notice whatever of his disavowing her was like the child in the dark—it appalled him.

But Oglethorpe was a methodical chap, and as soon as he got on his thinking cap he solved the problem. Either Lucy was ready to break with him for some other man or she was bluffing. If it was for another man the fact would soon be apparent; if she was bluffing that was a game at which two could play. Moreover, if she had replaced him in her affections he was not likely to win her back again, for, he argued, women who crave a multiplicity of lovers are not apt to return to an old one. They must have something new.

Adrian waited for developments. Lucy when under his observation at functions would look lovingly upon her attendant, but Adrian thought she overdid it, that she was doing it for his benefit. Time passed, and he did not hear of her encouraging any particular man. Then, beginning to tire of the estrangement, he began to lay his plans to bring about a more definite situation. He had thus far treated her as an acquaintance, a friend. He now began to bow to her when he met her with extraordinary politeness. Lucy retailed by out-Herodding Herod. If he bowed low to her she returned his civility with a cordiality that might have been gratifying to a stranger, but not to a man to whom she had been engaged.

Then came a period of self reproach to Adrian for his sudden and decided breaking off of the engagement. Had he not placed an insurmountable barrier between him and the girl he loved? She could not seek him. If they were to get together again he must go to her. And what would that involve? Nothing less than an apology for his action and begging her forgiveness.

This is the usual outcome between man and woman, but this is an unusual case. If he succeeded it would mean that, provided he was forgiven, he would marry a woman whose love for admiration would outweigh her love for her husband.

The panic induced by the thought that he had raised an insurmountable barrier between them having been allayed, Adrian determined to play a card that up to this time he would have scorned to play. Indeed, he had never thought of playing it till it had been suggested to him.

"What is the matter between you and Lucy Ashurst?" asked an attractive widow of him one day.

Adrian told her the story.

"That is very easily settled," she said.

"How?"

"You believe the lady is bluffing?"

"I am sure of it."

"Very well. We can soon find that out. Be my cavalier for a while. If she has turned from you to another she will not mind your devotion to me. If she still loves you she will make peace at once."

"It will require some time, I suppose?"

"Not if I know my sex."

During the next function at which these three conspirators met Mr. Oglethorpe devoted himself to the widow, rather, the widow devoted herself to Mr. Oglethorpe.

"Did you see that scared look on her face?" she asked him when they passed Miss Ashurst.

"No. Did you?"

"Certainly. She may not be afraid of you, but she is deathly scared of me. You will hear from her very soon."

And he did. The next day he received a note from Lucy begging him to come and see her. He went and found her penitent. At least she pretended to be penitent, because she supposed by the severe look her lover assumed that he would stand no more fooling. Really she was ready to try the same trick again as soon as she dare take the chance.

We read in an exchange the other day that a man who was afraid of thunder crashed into a hollow log as a place of safety during a recent thunder storm. The thunder rolled, the log panned down in torrents and the old log began to swell up until the poor fellow was wedged in so tight that he could not get out. All his past sins began passing before him. Suddenly he remembered he hadn't paid his subscription to his local paper and he felt so small that he was able to back right out.

A GRAFTED TREE

By ELIZABETH WEED

Farmer Perks was very proud of an apple tree that grew beside the front door of his house. The apples it bore were greenings, and there was usually a bountiful crop. Perks' son, Abel, was engaged to Amanda Squeers, who was a very thrifty and a very shrewd girl. The old man was a widower, with no other children except Abel, and when the father died the son would inherit all his property. But Perks would not either die or give Abel enough on which to be married.

One day the farmer brought home a bough of an apple tree and grafted it on to a limb of his favorite apple tree that pointed directly toward his house. Not long after this a man named Schmitt came to settle an account with the farmer that had been of long standing. The man had put in a culvert for Perks which had been washed away, and Perks, who had been obliged to have the work done over by another man, refused to pay the bill presented by the first. The creditor came after supper in the evening and remained arguing with and threatening Perks with a lawsuit till 10 o'clock. Perks was not well, and the controversy occurred in his bedroom on the second story. Abel was in the house, but at 10 o'clock he went to bed in another part of the house and was soon sound asleep.

When in the morning he went into his father's room the old man was dead. There was evidence that he had been struck on the head with some hard instrument like a poker. Abel called in the neighbors and told them the facts. Schmitt was arrested. But he had evidently prepared himself for the ordeal awaiting him, for he denied having been at Perks' house at all. Indeed, he said he had spent the evening with a man ten miles from Perks' talking about some work both were to do together. The man corroborated Schmitt's statement. Why he did so was never known. But it was supposed that Schmitt made a confidant of him and either worked on his feelings or paid him to save him.

Suspicion then fell on Abel, who inherited his father's estate. He was arrested, but since there was not a scrap of evidence against him, except that he and his father were the only two persons known to be in the house on the night of the murder, the jury hung for a long while, then finally brought in a verdict of acquittal. But his neighbors believed him guilty and refused thereafter to have anything to do with him.

Amanda Squeers alone believed in her lover's innocence and that Schmitt had committed the murder. She had only Abel's word for Schmitt's having been at the house to collect his bill and that Abel had left him with his father when he went to bed. But she knew, apart from her lover's statement, by a woman's intuition, that Schmitt had done the murder. She married Abel and accepted the stigma that rested upon him.

Three years passed. One summer Amanda noticed that the bough Perks had grafted to his apple tree would grow if the sash were left up into a window of the old man's former bedroom. The weather being warm, she propped up the sash, and the bough covered with blossoms, extended a yard or more into the room. One day in midsummer she passed Schmitt's house and said to him:

"Mr. Schmitt, it has been revealed to me who killed my husband's father. That has always been a mystery, and I confess I have always believed you did the deed. Now I know who did it. Come to the house tomorrow afternoon and I will convince you."

Schmitt kept a steady face, but with in he trembled. He did not wish to go to her house, and he dare not stay away. Above all, he felt that he must know if Mrs. Perks had any clue. He did not say to her whether or no he would accept her invitation, but the next afternoon, bracing himself with a strong potion, he started for the house.

Amanda welcomed him at the door, and so cordially that he was persuaded to believe that she had got on to a wrong track and had become convinced of his innocence. He saw no one in the house, and that gave him courage. At any rate, there were no witnesses to what would occur. Amanda chatted with him for a time on ordinary matters, then said:

"Now, if you will follow me I will enable you to prove your innocence of the murder."

She led the way up the staircase and into the room in which the murder had been committed. The window sash was up and the end of a branch of the apple tree extended into the room. On it were several ripe apples.

"The other night," said Amanda, "Mr. Perks appeared to me in a dream. I saw him as vivid and distinct as I see you now. And he said: 'I have caused a bough of my greening apple tree to grow into my bedroom window. If one of the apples it will show within stains of my blood.' Pluck an apple, Mr. Schmitt, and prove your innocence."

Schmitt turned pale, but plucked an apple, though his hand trembled as he did so. Biting into it, he looked at the gap he had left and fell in a swoon on the floor. There were blood red streaks in it.

The graft Farmer Perks had made was from a tree which produced fruit containing streaks similar to those of a blood orange.

FLAT WHEEL PROBLEM.

Danger Spot in Railroad Travel That Should Be Eliminated.

That a flat wheel and brittle rails form a dangerous combination is strikingly shown by statistics published in the current issue of the Railway Age Gazette. The statements of rail breakage due to flat wheels are so astonishing that, coming from a less authoritative source, they would be regarded with suspicion or accepted with the greatest reserve. For example, it is stated that in February of this year a shelled out steel tire wheel on a fast train in Ohio broke two rails in a single run of 200 miles. On a railroad line in New York state a fast train with a flat wheel broke nearly two rails. In January a flat steel rolled wheel on a Minnesota railroad broke nine ninety-pound steel rails in a distance of three miles, and in the same month two flat steel wheels on different tracks of a dining car broke four rails on a South Dakota railroad.

Defective driving wheel tires have also had their part in the breakage of rails. It is stated that a locomotive with a defective tire on one of its driving wheels broke more than 100 rails on one trip and an equal number on the return trip. Some of the rails were found to have had inherent defects, but in most cases a contributory cause was the extreme brittleness of the rails, a subject to which railroad managers and steel rail manufacturers are now giving attention with the aim of producing a rail less liable to breakage.

The flat wheel problem, however, is a more difficult one, as it has been shown that one application of a flat tire causing a wheel to slide on the rail may produce flatness. Constant watchfulness is the only safeguard that appears, and the safety of railroad passengers depends to a large extent on the thoroughness with which this is employed. The speed and heavy trains put a tremendous strain on wheels and rails which they are unable to withstand under certain conditions. Here is the great danger spot in railroading which must be eliminated before railroad travel can be regarded as reasonably safe.

SWEEPING HARBOR BOTTOMS

New System of Finding Obstructions in Ship Channels.

Nearly a hundred flammable rocks, ancient wrecks and other ocean bottom obstructions that have for centuries taken their toll of human life and dollars in ship disasters have been discovered in the past few months by the United States coast and geodetic survey at harbor entrances and in many frequented waters of the United States through the use of the new wire drag.

This simple device, simple at least in its operation, has saved and will save uncounted millions of dollars and numberless lives. Already it has been used to sweep the entrances to the Panama canal on the Pacific side, in preparation for the opening of this great waterway, and one dangerous rock obstruction, heretofore unknown and uncharted, has been discovered. This was in the path way of shipping through a main approach. Had it been found by the costly expedient of running a great ship upon it the world might have had another horror.

Through the old method of sounding with a lead and line it was impossible to find rocks, wreck spars and other similar obstructions, because the lead, even if it struck these bodies, standing perpendicularly in the water, would slip from them and find a bottom level, maybe twenty or a hundred feet below. With the wire drag even the point of an abandoned or lost keel anchor can be found immediately. The new drag consists of a long wire carried horizontally through the water and kept taut and evenly stretched at any given depth by an arrangement of weights and buoys.

Before the advent of the wire drag the annual average toll of the sea in ships was approximately 1,000—about 400 steamships and well over 600 sailing vessels. There is no accurate count of the lives and dollars lost. Vessels only damaged are not included in the list. How much of this has been saved or will be saved can only be estimated.

Blankets of Bark.

Blankets grow on trees in Ecuador, and while the idea of an all wool, fresh from the forest, best covering might give insomnia and a headache to the child of civilization who likes to snuggle comfortably under several layers of down and wool, the natives find it all right, as in fact it is. When an Ecuador Indian wants a blanket he hunk up a demajagon tree and cuts from it a five or six foot section of the peculiarly soft, thick bark. This is draped, and beaten until the flexibility of the sheet is much increased. The rough gray exterior is next peeled off and the sheet dried in the sun. The result is a blanket, soft, light and fairly warm, of an attractive cream color. It may be rolled into a compact bundle without hurt and with ordinary usage will last for several years.

Unbreakable Glass.

The strengthening of glass in recent French experiments consists of a thin sheet of celluloid between two layers of glass, each covered by a sheet of glass. Perfect adhesion is given by submitting the whole to a heavy pressure. The compound glass is perfectly transparent and when struck a heavy blow with a hammer, stone or other object is simply cracked locally, with no flying about of sharp fragments. Such glass should lessen injuries in accidents to automobiles, railway carriages, etc.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

DELICIOUS NEW PEAS.

SPRING peas, though they are grown only in warmer latitudes, may now be had in the markets. These vegetables form a welcome addition to the meat, and, though they are a little indigestible, if the hull is chewed before they are swallowed they are nutritious.

When fresh the pods of peas are green and crisp.

A Savory Combination.

Peas With Onions.—Take a little butter and flour and make a sauce in a saucepan. Cook until it bubbles. Add three cupfuls of green peas, a little parsley and half a dozen small white pickled onions that have been browned in the butter before the flour is added. Let them boil with half a pint of water, then cover and simmer half an hour. Remove the parsley and add an egg yolk beaten with half a teaspoonful of sugar and a scant tablespoonful of butter. Toss the saucepan until all the ingredients are blended thoroughly, and then turn into a vegetable dish.

An Omelet.

Peas With Eggs.—Take four eggs, one teaspoonful of salt, a sprinkle of pepper, one teaspoonful of flour, two tablespoonfuls of butter, four tablespoonfuls of cream, one-half teaspoonful of sugar, one-half pint of green peas. Whip the eggs very light and season with salt and pepper. Melt butter in omelet pan. Cook the peas, if canned, six minutes. In evening add sugar and salt. Make an omelet of eggs. Cook until a delicate brown on the bottom and set in a hot oven to cook top. The cooking of the omelet takes but three minutes.

A Seasonable Salad.

Green Pea Salad.—Take three or four hard boiled eggs, cut them lengthwise and remove the yolks. Crumble the yolks into rather large pieces, season with salt and pepper and toss them lightly about in melted butter. Mix with a cup of well seasoned cold peas. Sprinkle a little salt and white pepper on the whites, put a spoonful of the peas in each and cover with mayonnaise. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves.

STRAWBERRY DESSERTS.

Dainty strawberry desserts in various forms are suggested here. Often when the fruit is not in the best condition ways of preparing it for table so that its defects will not be obvious are required. Some hints of that sort may be gleaned from these recipes.

Tempting Sweets.

Strawberries and Orange Juice.—To prepare this dish orange juice is pressed from the orange over the fruit, just as you would squeeze a lemon over fish. A delicious way of serving strawberries left over from luncheon or from dinner is to pile them in a pyramid, after having taken away the stalks, and pour gently over it a syrup made with sugar and boiling hot water, adding two tablespoonfuls of raspberry syrup. Leave it in a cool place all night. It will be a charming dish for next morning's breakfast table.

Charlotte of Strawberries.—For this make a charlotte by lining a mold with red currant jelly, keeping it on ice the while. Then slick all round it strawberries cut in pieces, putting the red side next the mold. Crush one-half pound of strawberries with half their weight of powdered sugar, add one ounce of gelatin dissolved in very little water, whip a gill of cream, adding all the above when it begins to stiffen. Fill the center of the mold with this and let it set.

A Fruit Salad.

Strawberries and Lettuce.—When the berries are very acid they may be combined with lettuce to form a breakfast salad. Have them thoroughly drained, and then heap each portion to be served in cups made of delicately green tender leaves from head lettuce. Serve with a sweet salad dressing made piquant with lemon or grapefruit juice or a French dressing, or heap whipped cream, sweetened to taste, over them and serve.

Toothsome Pudding.

Strawberry and Custard Pudding.—Take three eggs, a pint of milk, a little powdered cinnamon two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and strawber-

The Dispute Has Been Existing For a Good Number of Years.

Walloon Lake Water Case Heard in Circuit Court Before Judge Lamb of Cadillac—Now Under Adjudication.

For a number of years a dispute has existed between Walloon Lake residents and the residents at Petoskey, who own or are interested in the water power on Bear river, which is the outlet of Walloon Lake, and flows into Petoskey.

In the early days Bear river was used for running logs as well as for water power, and operators on the river in the past have cleaned out and deepened the outlet until there came a time when a dam was erected in the river at its mouth in 1888. The water was then manipulated by the Petoskey interests, loggers, fishermen, etc. until they finally purchased the land at the mouth of the river, tore out the dam, and built another in 1900. A flash-board was built in it by which manipulation of water was continued to suit the convenience of those using the water for power purposes at Petoskey.

In the meantime Walloon lake had become a favorite summer resort and valuable cottages, docks, boat houses and other improvements along the shore had been erected with reference to the then water level of the lake. This resulted in a litigation in which the people owning property along the lake shore sought to restrain those controlling the outlet of the lake. In 1910 a decision was reached by the supreme court, requiring the Petoskey people to cease manipulations of the water with flashboards and ordered the flashboards removed. This was done and the dam widened and reconstructed into a narrow flume, which so greatly lowered the waters of the lake as to leave the docks, boat houses and other improvements high and dry. Besides this, the flume was so narrow that when the water had run off, the uniform level of the lake was not maintained.

This resulted in another action brought by the resorters against the owners of the outlet, requiring them to so construct the outlet as to restore the lake to its natural level. This action was brought to a hearing in 1910, and the differences between the parties adjusted by the resorters buying from the Petoskey owners the lands bordering and controlling the outlet of the lake.

Following this the resorters proceeded to reconstruct the dam, raising the water 18 inches and widening the outlet.

Then the Petoskey interests, who had owned the land bordering on the outlet joined, with the owners of some lowlands, bringing another action by injunction requiring the resorters to construct the dam so as to lower the water in the lake 28 inches, pleading that the water was so high that it was flooding land bordering on the lake.

The evidence on this last issue was taken before Judge Lamb of Cadillac last week at Charlevoix, the hearing beginning August 4, and ending Friday night. On Saturday Judge Lamb and the parties with their attorneys, visited the different points on the lake that had been under discussion during the week and the case is now submitted to Judge Lamb for determination. It is said that should the injunction be granted the waters of the lake will be so low as to make a sand beach of more than 100 feet in width. The shore owners, who have constructed their properties with the water level that has prevailed since 1888 would be left this distance from the water's edge and would be obliged to rebuild all their properties along the shore. The estimated valuation of the resort properties that would be directly or indirectly effected by this change is $75,000.

JOHN C. KETCHAM

Worthy Master of the State Grange Will Speak at the East Jordan Fair.

Thursday, September 11, will be "School Day" at the Charlevoix County Fair at East Jordan, and it is planned to make this one of the best features of the fair this year. John C. Ketcham, worthy master of the state grange, has been secured as the principal speaker of the occasion. The management is indeed fortunate in being able to secure Mr. Ketcham for a place on their program, as he is decidedly a "live wire." Grangers from all over the county are planning to hear Mr. Ketcham's address.

SHIPMENTS HEAVY

Hortons Bay on Pine Lake Raises Large Quantities of Farm Produce.

People are beginning to realize that this country is raising stuff on the farms, thus creating a demand for shipping facilities. So well is this demonstrated that the shipments by water from the post of Hortons Bay on Pine Lake amount to more than those from Boyne City. This includes fruit and other farm produce of all kinds, besides the incoming goods that are supplied there for home consumption. When we take into consideration the relative size of the two places it makes the comparison seem all the more remarkable. — Boyne City Times.

MANY LETTERS NOT CALLED FOR

Many People Are Neglecting to File Their Forwarding Address.

Leave Town and Neatly Tell the Postmaster Where to Send Mail and Thereby Delayed.

"The advertised letter list is as big a mystery to me as it is to you," said an employee of the local post office recently. "I have thought over it but have never been able to solve it."

Walk into the postoffice any day and you will see a list of advertised letters a foot long on a bulletin board. The lists are changed every week. Names remain on the board for only two weeks. Then to the dead letter office go these letters.

The local postoffice receives about 100 letters each month which have to be advertised. Now and then one of the total is called for but the greater majority go to the dead letter office.

Some of the letters which come here are for individuals who have lived in Charlevoix for a short time or who have visited here. They leave town and leave no forwarding address and consequently fail to get the letters which their friends or relatives wrote to them.

HAY FEVER SEASON ON

Hundreds of Sufferers Rush to This Section of the State for Relief.

The hay fever season is on. During the last four days all trains coming into Charlevoix have been heavily loaded, due to the rush of these rag weed sufferers to the north. In fact, the hay fever season has started out in a most remarkable manner.

In addition to the hay fever sufferers, others have been driven north by the heat waves, and conditions appear exceedingly bright in Charlevoix and nearby places at this stage of the game.

Change of Time.

Instead of two trips a day as was run up to August 4, the running time on the Str. City of Boyne has been changed, and three trips between Boyne City and Charlevoix will be made during August, the month of heavy traffic between the two towns. The boat will leave Charlevoix until further notice at 8:45 a. m., 1:15 and 5:30 p. m. Special rates will be made the boat leaving at 1:15 for the round trip.

RETURNS WERE VERY GOOD

Pencil Day Workers Met With Success in Their Efforts.

Interest in Local Charity Work Greatly Increased—Receipts $188.67.

On Saturday last the National Child Welfare League held its "Pencil Day" in Charlevoix, and it was a success, thanks to the generosity of the local merchants, citizens, hotel keepers and summer visitors, $188.67 was taken in from the sale of pencils. About the only expense connected with sale was the buying of the pencils, the placing of the posters in the show windows and a few minor expenses.

It was through the kindness of the merchants that the prizes, five in number, were awarded to the children having the largest amounts in their banks. The committee wish to express their appreciation and thanks for every favor, and for the cheerful way that the people responded in buying pencils. And they also wish to thank those who donated work and material for the day.

Mrs. Harry Nicholls has been appointed to lead the local league here, and will choose league members to serve with her during the coming year, to work and assist any distress cases which may be reported to them. Names of members and an outline of their plans will be published at a later date.

The National Child Welfare League has cared for 75 family cases in Michigan during the last three months. This represents about three hundred children who have been provided with medical attention and clothing. Too much cannot be said for what the league has accomplished, but they cannot do it alone, and every citizen should consider himself or herself a member of the league and give them aid and information that will help the cause along.

GOES TO HOWELL

Rev. B. Atchison Has One Speedy Work While in Charlevoix.

Rev. B. Atchison, for the past 20 months pastor of the Baptist church of this city, closes his services here Sunday, August 17, and will accept a call at Howell, Michigan.

Rev. Atchison has been a true, faithful and loyal teacher of the bible, and earnest and sincere in his efforts to bring others under influence of its teaching. It is to be regretted that he is to depart from the excellent work he has been doing here, yet it is to his best interests to do so.

Friday evening a number of friends and members of the church gathered at his home, where a very pleasant evening was spent. Upon their departure the guest expressed their regrets of his departure, and although he and his family will be absent, they will not be forgotten, and as they enter upon their new field of labor, it is hoped by their host of friends here that will receive God's richest blessings.

Services at the church will be announced at a later date, and it is expected a new pastor, will be chosen in a short time.

Christian Science Lecture.

The Christian Science Society of Charlevoix have booked another one of their instructive lectures for Sunday, August 17, at the Charlevoix Theater. Hicknell Young, C. S. B., member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Mass., will deliver the lecture on Christian Science. Every one is cordially invited to be present and hear this speaker. Mr. Young is the dean of the lecture bureau and has had charge of the work in Europe for a number of years. The lecture will begin at 8:30 p. m. sharp.

Moonlight Excursion.

The young people of the Baptist church will give a "Moonlight Boat Excursion" on Friday evening, August 15, to East Jordan and return on the Steamer Beaver. The boat will leave promptly at seven o'clock and will stop at East Jordan about one hour.

DROWNED IN TRAVERSE BAY

Hal Souter Saves Girl Friend and Chum From Death Last Friday.

Loses Own Life in Struggle With Waves—Tragedy Occurs at Harbor Point.

Hal Souter, 19 years of age, porter at the Harbor Point club house, gave up his life Friday in efforts that were successful in saving the lives of his girl friend, Miss Tressa Miller of Detroit, and his chum, Arthur Cook of Globeville, Michigan.

These young people, with several other employees of the club house, went in bathing Friday evening on the bay side of the Point. Miss Miller went beyond her depth, and her cries for help attracted Cook, who swam to her rescue. He held her up a short time, but was unequal to the task, and welcomed the assistance of Souter, who swam to the spot where the struggle was taking place. Souter was an expert swimmer, but the task of keeping his two friends above water was too much for him, and he was nearly exhausted, when the engineer at the club house swam out to relieve him of his double burden.

Souter told them not to mind him, saying he could take care of himself. These were the last words that were ever heard from his lips, and in the turmoil he was forgotten. After two hours of hard work, physicians revived Miss Miller and Cook, and it was then that Souter's body was seen floating ashore. Physicians worked three hours over him, but failed in their attempts to revive him.

Hundreds of people witnessed the events leading up to the tragedy, but failed to perceive the distress of Souter, and he died valiantly, presumably being taken by a cramp.

On Saturday another drowning was narrowly averted in the waters of Crooked Lake. Mabel, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clare Ruggles, fell off the dock and was seen floating on the water by Miss Florence Jessop of Champaign, Illinois. Miss Jessop leaped into the water, seized the child and kept her afloat until help arrived. A physician quickly revived the little girl, but how long she had been in the water is not known.

ADVENTURE STORIES

By Rex Beach are Now Being Published Serially in the Courier.

The Courier has secured the right to publish Rex Beach's Adventure Short Stories in a series. There are nine stories and each one is as popular with the short-story lover as any of this noted author's long stories of the Alaskan country.

"The Shyness of Shorty" is the first of the series and will be found on page three of this issue. Next week the story "The Colonel and the Horse Thief" will be run and each week an advertising plate will be printed announcing the one to be published the following week.

These stories are one of the features the Courier has prepared for its readers and they will be found deeply interesting to all lovers of adventure literature.

Majestic Theatre Overhauled.

During the past week the Majestic Theater has undergone several repairs and vital improvements. The management has complied with the state fire warden's orders in every detail. New ventilators are now installed. The seating capacity has been re-arranged and more seats, making them more comfortable to sit in. The picture curtain has been recently set back further on the stage, greatly improving the view from the front part of the popular play house.

HERE IN SEPTEMBER

Charlevoix to Entertain State Superintendents of the Poor.

A. J. Dole of Bellaire and Mayor A. E. Cross of East Jordan, were in the city Tuesday arranging for the meeting of State Association of Superintendents of the Poor, which will take place here on September 9, 10 and 11.

It was the opinion of both of these gentlemen that Charlevoix was the logical meeting point of northern Michigan for events of this nature. Hotel accommodations were arranged for the housing of one hundred and fifty members of the association and their families, and other preparations for the big event arranged for.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Services Will Be Held Morning and Evening During Month of August.

Next Sunday, August 17, Rev. David C. Huntington arch-deacon of this diocese will take charge of the services in the Episcopal church, corner State and Clinton streets.

On Sunday, August 24, the Right Rev. D. S. Tuttle, presiding bishop of the church will be here in the morning and conduct the 11:00 o'clock services. Rev. Tuttle is the highest church official and his coming should be a treat to all members. Services will be held in the church in the evening at 7:30.

Every Sunday in August services will be held in the morning and evening.

AUTO ACCIDENT SATURDAY NIGHT

Cars Collide in Turning Corner Off Petoskey Avenue on Meech Street.

Both Cars Were Damaged in Crash—No One Was Thrown Out of Car.

Last Saturday night while returning home from Petoskey a Pierce-Arrow car owned by H. S. Stranas, a resort, and driven by Carl Lindberg and the Apperson car owned and driven by William Meyers of this city met in a collision on the corner at Meech Street and Petoskey Avenue.

The Pierce-Arrow car was in the lead on its return from Petoskey and slowed down to make the turn at the corner when the Apperson car rounded the corner and its front springs and frame rammed the former car, breaking through the door of wool chest, and smashed a spoke in the left rear wheel. The tail light and left rear fender were also badly damaged in the compact.

The Apperson car received a broken radiator, the front fenders and head lights were smashed and the frame slightly twisted. Had both cars been speeding a tragedy might have resulted. Both cars stopped as soon as the crash occurred.

The Pierce-Arrow car was occupied by H. S. Stranas and party of five people, while the Apperson car was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Grover Genett and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gloessinger with the driver, William Meyers.

MAY PAY TUITION

School Boards Now Able to Save Some Children Long Walks.

Heretofore a school district has not been permitted to pay tuition for students who had not completed the eighth grade, as long as the district was maintaining a school. Under the law which will go into effect August 14, the district board may pay tuition for those children who reside nearer a schoolhouse in another district than their own. Many boys and girls have been compelled to walk several miles further to their own district schoolhouse than a neighboring one because the township boards refused to change the boundaries.

COMING

UNITED DOCTORS SPECIALIST
Will Make Their Regular Visit To Charlevoix, Baker on Monday, August 26, 10:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. - Remarkable Success of These Treated Physicians in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases.

The United Doctors, licensed by the State of Michigan for the treatment of deformities and all nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this visit, consultation, examination and advice free of charge.

These Doctors are among America's leading stomach and nerve specialists, and are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases of the blood, liver, stomach, intestines, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys, or bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bed-wetting, tape worms, leg ulcers, weak lungs, and those afflicted with long standing, deep seated chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of other physicians, should not fail to call. Deafness has often been cured in sixty days.

According to their system no more operations for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, goiter, piles, etc. By their method these diseases are treated without operation or hypodermic injection. They were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife, with blood and with pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

If you have kidney or bladder troubles bring a two ounce bottle of your urine for chemical analysis and microscopic examination. Worn-out and run-down men or women, no matter what your ailment may be, no matter what you have been told, or the experiment you have had with other physicians, settle it forever in your mind. If your case is incurable they will tell you so. Consult them upon this visit. It costs you nothing.

Married ladies must come with their husbands and minors with their parents.

NOT ONLY IN CHARLEVOIX

Similar Cases Occur Daily in This Vicinity.

Not only here in Charlevoix but in our neighboring towns, the same good story is heard. An encouraging instance from Boyne City is given here and will be read by us with great interest.

Frank Belmont, 25 N. Lake street, Boyne City, Michigan, says: "I can certainly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, for I have been greatly relieved by them. I suffered for months from lameness and pain in my back and was hardly able to stoop or lift. I could not rest well at night, owing to too frequent passages of the kidney secretions. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved the lameness and soreness in my back and I can rest much better at night. I feel like a different person."

The above is not an isolated case. Mr. Belmont is only one of many in this vicinity who have gratefully endorsed Doan's. If your back aches-if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy-ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Belmont had. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co. Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface. We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Dr. Williams' Catarrh Cure. Send for circular free.

GOOD CROP YEAR

Everything Gives Promise of a Bumper Yield This Season.

Those who have had occasion to travel over Charlevoix county report that the crop conditions were never better than they are now. There has been just enough rain to keep vegetation in motion all the time and no burning sun to turn the meadows and pastures brown.

The best wheat crop in many years is reported and oats are of a high average yield. Corn is coming on in grand style and if the season is long enough there will be a bumper crop of this great farm staple.

There is also noticed all over this region an increased interest in the work of farming and new methods are being put into vogue that will greatly enhance the profits of the farms.

With a big fruit crop in all sections of the county and a large yield of farm products in general, there is no danger that this section will be pinched financially the coming fall and winter.

Common Council

Concil Chambers, Aug. 11, 1913. The common council for the city of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Nichols presiding.

Aldermen present, Priest, See, Barney, Cartier, Powers and Shapton. Absent, none.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

A committee from the Charlevoix Summer Home Association appeared before the council asking for an extension of the water main on Ferry Ave. which is needed principally for fire protection.

Moved by Ald. Powers and seconded by Ald. Barney that Arthur Karshake be rebated $25.00 of his license fee for conducting a Roller Skating Rink. Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Priest, See, Barney, Cartier, Powers and Shapton. Nays, none.

Moved by Ald. See and seconded by Ald. Priest that the city engineer prepare plans, plans, specifications and estimates of cost for installing proper traps for the catch basins on Dixon Ave.

Motion carried. There being no further business the council adjourned.

E. J. Hiller, City Clerk.

LEWIS POSTMASTER

Took Possession of the Boyne City Postoffice last Monday.

For the second time in the history of Boyne City, the postoffice is in the hands of a democrat. Since 1888, fifteen years ago, R. E. Newville has presided there as postmaster. During the four years previous, when the democrats held sway at Washington, A. F. Herron served in that capacity.

The new official, William J. Lewis, has been a resident of the city for the past 33 years. His coming to that city marked the arrival of one of the staunchest democrats Charlevoix county has ever known, and it is agreed by all who know him that no better citizen could have been chosen to represent his party in the official capacity which he has begun to fill.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

for the Month of August as Reported by Secretary of State Martindale.

The average estimated yield per acre of wheat in the state is 15.05, in the southern counties 11.76, in the central counties 11.81, in the northern counties 14.77 and in the upper peninsula 18.88 bushels. Crop correspondents, quite generally, report wheat of fairly good quality. The estimates at present indicate that the state yield will be very close to 12,000,000 bushels. The per cent of plowing done for wheat in the state is 18, in the southern counties 16, in the central counties 20 and in the northern counties 19.

RYE

The average estimated yield per acre in the state is 13.32, in the southern counties 13.43, in the central counties 13.54, in the northern counties 13.72 and in the upper peninsula 18.71 bushels.

CORN

The condition of corn as compared with an average is 87 in the state, 83 in the southern counties, 92 in the central counties, 90 in the northern counties and 80 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 70 in the state and northern counties, 74 in the southern counties, 62 in the central counties and 72 in the upper peninsula.

BEANS

The Shyness of Shorty

By REX BEACH

PROLOGUE.

As a teller of adventure tales Rex Beach is without an equal in America. Years of experience as a miner in Alaska made him familiar with a little known quarter of the globe where life flows at full tide; consequently his stories are not only intensely interesting, but they are absolutely true to nature. Most of his characters are real people, changed somewhat to suit the motives of the particular story in which they appear. He has been in many an Alaskan gold rush and has had many narrow escapes. One of the stories in this series describes a frightful experience in a blizzard in an Alaskan pass. Beach participated in a trip of this very character and barely escaped being frozen to death. One of the Indians who accompanied him died of exposure. Beach made his first great hit with "The Spoilers," a remarkably interesting tale of life near the arctic circle, and this was followed by "The Barrier" and "The Silver Horde." His Adventure Stories are varied in character and full of thrilling incidents and humorous episodes. In appearance he resembles a college football player, being six feet two inches tall and weighing 200 pounds.

BALLEY smoked morosely as he scanned the dusty trail leading down across the "bottom" and away over the dry, gray prairie, toward the hazy mountains in the west. He called grimly into the silence of the house, and his speech held the surliness of his attitude: "Hot Joy! Bar X outfit coming Git supper."

A Chinaman appeared in the door and gazed at the six mule team descending the distant gully to the ford. "Jesse, one man, hey? All right," and he slid quietly back to the kitchen. Whatever might be said, or rather, whatever might be suspected, of Balley's roadhouse—for people did not run to words conjecture in this country—it was known that he boasted a good cook, and this atoned for a catalogue of shortcomings. So it waxed popular among the hards of the big cattle ranges near by. Those given to idle talk held that Balley acted strangely at times, and rumor painted occasional black dolings at the hacenda, squatting vulture-like above the ford, but it was nobody's business, and he kept a good cook.

Balley did not recall the face that greeted him from above the three spans as they swung in front of his corral, but the brand on their flanks was the Bar X, so he nodded with as near an approach to hospitality as he permitted.

It was a large face, strong featured and rugged, balanced on wide, square shoulders, yet some oddness of posture held the gaze of the other till the stranger clambered over the wheel to the ground. Then Balley removed his brier and heaved tempestuously in the throes of great and silent mirth.

It was a dwarf. The head of a Titan, the body of a whisky barrel, rolling ludicrously on the hay-bunches of a bug, presented so startling a sight that even Hot Joy, appearing around the corner, cackled shrilly. His laughter rose to a shriek of dismay, however, as the little man made at him with the rush and roar of a cannon ball. In Balley's amazed eyes he seemed to bounce galvanically, landing on Joy's back with such vicious suddenness that the breath died from him in a squawk of terror. Then, seizing his cue, he kicked and belabored the prostrate Celestial in feverish silence. He desisted and rolled across the porch to Balley. Staring truculently up at the landlord, he spoke for the first time.

"Was I right in supposing that something amissed ye?"

"No, sir; I reckon you're mistaken. I ain't observed anything frivolous yet."

"Glad of it," said the little man. "I don't like a feller to hog a joke all by himself. Some of the Bar X boys took to absorbing humor out of my shape when I first went to work, but they're sort of educated out of it now. I got an eye from one and a finger off of another. The last one donated a ear."

Balley readily conceived this man as a bad antagonist, for the heavy corded neck had split buttons from the blue shirt, and he glimpsed a chest hairy and round as a drum, while the brown arms shewed knots, and hardened.

"Let's liquor," he said and led the way into the big, low room serving as bar, dining and living room. From the rear came vicious clatterings and slammings of pots, mingled with oriental lamentations, indicating an arduous body rather than a chastened spirit.

"Don't see ye often," he continued, with a touch of bewilderment.

"No, the old man don't lemme get away much. He knows that dwellings close to the ground, as I do. I pine for spiritual elevation," with a melting glance at the bottles behind the bar, doing much to explain the size of his first drink.

"Like it, do ye?" questioned Balley, indicating the shelf.

"Well, not exactly. Booze is like air—I need it. It makes a new man out of me and usually ends by getting both me and the new one laid off."

"Didn't hear nothing of the wedding over at Los Inecos, did ye?"

"No. Whose wedding?"

"Ross Turney, the new sheriff."

"Ye don't say? Him that's been elected on purpose to round up the Tremper gang, hey? Who's his antagonist?"

"Old man Miller's gal. He's celebrating his election by getting splashed. I been expecting of 'em across this way tonight, but I guess they took the Black Bluff trail. Ye heard what he said, didn't ye? Claims that in side of ninety days he'll rid the country of the Tremper and give the reward to his wife for a bridal present. Five thousand dollars on 'em, ye know."

Balley grinned evilly and continued: "Say, Marsh Tremper 'll ride up to his house some night and make him eat his own gun in front of his bride, see if he don't. Then there'll be cause for an inquest and an election." He spoke with what struck the tremor of his unnecessary vent.

"Dunno," said the other. "Turney's a brash young feller, I hear, but he's game. Tain't any of my business, though, and I don't want none of his contrab. I'm violently addicted to peace and quiet. I am. Guess I'll un-bitch."

As the saddened Joy lit candles in the front room there came the rattle of wheels without, and a buckboard stopped in the bar of light from the door. Balley's anxiety was replaced by a mass of listless surprise as the voice of Ross Turney came to him:

"Hello, there, Balley! Are we in time for supper? If not, I'll start an inspection with that Boser of yours. He's got to turn out the snoringest supper of the season tonight. It isn't every day your shack is honored by a bride. Mr. Balley, this is my wife, since 10 o'clock 'n' m." He introduced, a blushing, happy girl, evidently in the grasp of many emotions. "We'll stay all night, I guess."

"Sure," said Balley. "I'll show ye a room," and he led them up beneath the low roof where an unusual cleanliness betrayed the industry of Joy.

The two men returned and drank to the bride, Turney with the reckless lightness that distinguished him, Balley sullen and watchful.

"Got another outfit here, haven't you?" questioned the bridegroom. "Who is it?"

Before answer could be made, from the kitchen arose a tortured howl and the smashing of dishes, mingled with stormy rumblings. The door burst inward, and an agonized Joy fled, dapping out into the night, while behind him rolled the caricature from Bar X.

"Just—stopped for a drink of water," boomed the dwarf, then paused at the twitching face of the sheriff.

He swelled ominously, like a great pigeon, purple and congested with rage. Strutting to the newcomer, he glared insolently up into his smiling face.

"What are ye laughing at, ye snave-tail?" His hands were clenched till his arms showed tense and rigid, and the cords in his neck were thickly swollen.

"Lemme in on it! I'm strong on humor. What in h—l ails ye?" he yelled. In a fury, as the tall young man gazed fixedly, and the glasses rattled at the bellow from the barreled-up lungs.

"I'm not laughing at you," said the sheriff.

"Oh, ain't ye?" mocked the man of peace. "Well, take care that ye don't, ye big wart, or I'll trample them new clothes and browse around on some of your features. I'll take ye apart till ye look like cat feed. Guess ye don't know who I am, do ye? I'm—"

"Who is this man, Ross?" came the anxious voice of the bride, descending the stairs.

The little man spun like a dancer and, spying the girl, blushed to the color of a prickly pear, then stammered painfully, while the sweat stood out under the labor of his discomfort.

"Just 'Shorty,' miss," he finally quavered. "Pain 'Shorty' of the Bar X—or a miserable, crawling worm for disturbing of ye." He rolled his eyes helplessly at Balley while he sopped with his crumpled sombrero at the glistening perspiration.

"Why didn't ye tell me?" he whispered ferociously at the host, and the volume of his query carried to Joy hiding out in the night.

"Mr. Shorty," said the sheriff gravely, "let me introduce my wife, Mrs. Turney."

The bride smiled sweetly at the tremulous little man, who broke and fled to a high bench in the darkest corner, where he dangled his short legs in a silent ecstasy of bashfulness.

"I reckon I'll have to rope that Chink, then blindfold and back him into the kitchen, if we git any supper," said Balley, disappearing.

Later the Chinaman stole in to set the table, but he worked with hostile and fatal energy, a fearful eye always upon the dim bulk in the corner, and at a fanned move he shook with an agony of apprehension. Backing and sidling, he finally announced the meal, prepared to stampee nady at notice.

During the supper Shorty ate ravenously of whatever lay to his hand, but asked no favors. The agony of his shyness paralyzed his huge vocal muscles till speech became a labor quite impossible.

To a pleasant remark of the bride he responded, but no sound issued; then, breathing heavily into his larynx, the reply roared upon them like a burst of thunder, seriously threatening the gravity of the meal. He retired abruptly into moist and self-conscious silence, fearful of feasting his eyes on this disturbing loveliness.

As soon as compatible with decency he slipped back to his bunk in the shed behind and lay staring into the darkness, picturing the amazing occurrences of the evening. At the memory of her level glances he felt a tremor and sighed ecstatically, prickling with a new, strange emotion. He lay till far into the night, wakeful and absorbed. He was able to grasp the fact but dimly that all this dazzling perfection was for one man. Were it not monstrously impossible he supposed other men in other lands knew other ladies as beautiful, and it furthermore grew upon him blankly, in the thick gloom, that in all this world of women any sweetest and beauty to moderate of it was for the unshapen dwarf of the Bar X outfit. All his life he had fought furiously to uphold the empty shell of his dignity in the eyes of his comrades, yet always morbidly conscious of the difference in his body. Whisky had been his solace, his sweetheart. It changed him, raised and belittled him into the likeness of other men, and now as he pondered he was aware of a consuming thirst engendered by the heat of his earlier emotions. Undoubtedly it must be quenched.

He rose and stole quietly out into the big front room. Perhaps the years of free life in the open and broad suspension of walls; perhaps he felt his conduct would not brook discovery; perhaps habit prompted him to take the two heavy coils from his trousers and thrust them inside his trousers band.

He slipped across the room, silent and cower-like, its blackness broken by the window squares of starry sky. Till he felt the paucity of glassware behind the bar.

"Here's to her," it hurred delightedly.

"Here's to the groom." It tingled more alluringly.

"I'll drink what I can and get back to the bunk before it works," he thought, and the darkness veiled the measure of his potations.

He started at a noise on the stairway. His senses, not yet dulled, detected a stealthy tread—not the careless step of a man-unafraid, but the

— Everybody wants to succeed; nobody courts failure. And still but comparatively few men lay the foundations for success.

— In business most men fail even to get a start, because they lack money.

— The only way for the wage earner to have money when he needs it is by steadily saving a part of his income. In a few years the fund becomes considerable, if deposits are made regularly in a good bank paying 4 per cent interest.

continuous rustle and hint of a marauder. Every nerve bristled to keenest alertness as the faint occasional sounds approached, passed the open end of the bar where he crouched, leading on to the window. Then a match flared, and the darkness rushed out as a candle wick spluttered.

Shorty stretched on thiose, brought his eye to the level of the bar and gazed upon the horrid head of Balley. He sighed thankfully, but watched with interest his strange behavior.

"He's signaling," mused Shorty. "How he gets through quick. I'm going full." The fumes of the liquor were beating at his senses, and he knew that soon he would move with difficulty.

The man, however, showed no intention of leaving, for, his signals completed, he blew out the light, first listening for any sound from above; then his figure loomed black and immobile against the dim starlight of the window.

"Oh, Lord, I got to set down!" and the watcher squatted upon the floor, bracing against the wall. His dull perceptions were suddenly acute to detect shuffling footsteps on the porch and the cautious unbarring of the door.

"Getting late for visitors," he thought as he entered a blissful doze. "When they're tired I'll turn in."

HER SUITORS

They Wouldn't Be Refused

By ELEANOR TREADWELL

Miss Marguerite Ashton, a young lady of Chicago, was left alone in the world at nineteen by the death of father and mother with a fortune of two millions.
Miss Ashton's brother had died several years before the others; consequently all her father's property descended to her. He had left the management of the estate to a young man he had brought up in his business, Edmund Warfield, in whose hands he felt that it would be perfectly safe and his daughter would reap the benefit of every cent. For Warfield was not only a man of excellent business judgment, but perfectly honest and honorable.
At the time of Mr. Ashton's death Warfield was in his prime, being thirty-five years old.

The Ashtons were of the newly rich.
Mr. Ashton having made the bulk of his fortune in a large real estate speculation shortly before his death. His daughter had no knowledge of the world or of society. There was no near relative with whom she could make her home, and she did not relish living alone. It was natural, therefore, that she should wish to see something of the world, and, being invited to join a party going abroad, she decided to avail herself of the opportunity.

After visiting the principal cities of western Europe Miss Ashton found herself in Rome at the most expensive hotel there. She was still the unsophis-ticated Chicago girl, but her surroundings had changed. This difference for her did not consist in the vast field of antiquity about her, for, although fairly educated, a girl of twenty is not likely to be versed in the literature that has been handed down to us from ancient Rome. What was new to Miss Ashton was the collection of persons from all parts of the world she found in the Eternal City. Though she obtained no entrée into Roman society, she was thrown in with tourists of every variety.

Rome, too, has its share of adventurers. Wherever is the American with his farrowed dollars to spend there is the adventurer, and no class is so susceptible of affording plunder for dissolute foreigners as American heirs-esses.

Miss Ashton could not long remain in one place without attracting the attention of these cornerants. She was simply itself. When visiting the every head was craned forward, every eye and ear open.

golden house of Nero—and the guide showed her a ruined apartment as the emperor's smoking room—she did not stop to consider that some fifteen centuries had elapsed after Nero's time before tobacco was introduced into Europe. When inspecting tableware exhumed from Pompeii and the guide showed her certain dishes from which he told her the Pompeians drank their coffee it did not occur to her that a similar period had elapsed before Europe had begun to enjoy that beverage. It is not strange that a girl so easily deceived in these matters should put faith in any man who claimed that he loved her.

Miss Ashton spent a winter in Rome, and when spring came she had received a number of propositions of marriage. There are many princes in Italy, for every one descended from an ancient ruler of one of the formerly independent principalities of what is now United Italy bears the title of prince or princess. Among Miss Ashton's train of suitors were a prince, an English earl, a German baron and a French marquis.

It was fortunate for Miss Ashton that there were so many of these suitors, for they balanced one another. Had there been but one it is quite probable that by persistence he might have won the prize. The prince poured into her ear tales of his beautiful home in Sicily, where they could dream the happy hours away. The earl pictured his estates in Hereford, England, dand-led with mortgaged; the baron discussed his Westphalia, Germany. The marquis spoke eloquently of his chateau on the banks of the Loire that had been the home of kings and had descended to him through thirteen generations.

To this nobleman the young lady said that she could not think of marrying into the thirteenth generation, since that was an unlucky number.

Miss Ashton after her father's death, became used to looking upon Edmund Warfield as a sort of manager for anything, irrespective of finances, that she could not manage herself. He had made all the arrangements for her trip.
He had heard not a word from her since her departure till one day he received a cablegram: "Do please come to Rome at once. I am all tangled up."

"Though she did not know it, Marguerite Ashton had been an object of interest to Warfield from the time she was five years old and used to climb on his lap to listen to stories. He would tell her. She was to him the daughter of the man who had given him his opportunity for his life's work.
He was busy at the time he received the cablegram, and it was difficult for him to leave Chicago. Nevertheless he sailed at once for Naples and in a few hours after his arrival in Italy was in Rome.

"Well, Margie, what is it?" he asked as soon as the two had settled down to business.

"I'll tell you. I can't imagine how it happened that so many men should have fallen in love with me at once.
I suppose it's the Italian air or something, but it's so. And the worst of it is that none of them will be refused. There's Prince Bolozzi. I've told him again and again that I can't love him, and he threatens to jump into the Tiber. Baron Becker says if I won't go with him to his estates in Westphalia as his wife his life will hereafter be one dark cloud. Earl Bid-dleton pleaded his cause so pathetically that I couldn't help saying 'Yes.' I've half promised the marquis, and, indeed, there isn't one of them I'm not partly committed to."

"I see no way out of it for you," said Warfield, "but to go into a betrudal bankruptcy. However, I'll make inquiries about these gentlemen and report to you if any of them bears a good reputation. If so and you wish to marry him I'll help you out with the others—which as your guardian I have a right to do—and you can be wedded to the man of your choice whenever you like."

"There isn't any of them the man of my choice."

"Well, then, we'll have to get rid of the lot."

"How can that be done without the prince jumping into the Tiber and the marquis?"

"We'll have them locked up till they get over it."

"Oh, my goodness gracious! I could never look them in the face again."
"It would be just as well that you shouldn't. However, my dear Margie, having brought me over here to get you out of your difficulty, perhaps you'd better leave the matter to me."

"That's just what I'd like—that is, if you don't mind such an awful job."

"It won't be so hard for me as it would for you. Don't see any of them till tomorrow afternoon. Then I'll fix it all up so that you won't have any more trouble. Write each of them a note asking him to call here tomorrow at 3 p. m. to receive your final answer."

"All at once? Great heavens, I couldn't do that! They would kill me another."

Warfield persisted and went away with a note for each of the suitors, which he posted at once.

The next afternoon Warfield called before the others. He exacted a promise from Marguerite that she would hear him out in any statement he might make, though he was obliged to assure her that nothing harsh should be said to any of them.

The prince arrived at ten minutes before the appointed hour and was required to wait below. The marquis came next and the baron next. All were in the hotel at 3, and a few minutes later all received a summons to Miss Ashton's private parlor. Scarcely had one entered before there was a rap at the door and another stood at the opening. There was no time for conversation since they came so near together. Some of them recognized others as rivals, and they glared mutually.
When they had all been admitted Warfield, who was formally introduced to them, said:

"Gentlemen, Miss Ashton has desired me to announce to you that, having been honored by a proposition of marriage from each and all of you, she has considered your propositions and come to a conclusion."

The speaker paused and cleared his throat, while the visitors were visibly agitated with expectancy.

Miss Ashton looked from her advocate to the men, whom she expected to either kill one another or commit suicide if refused, like a frightened bird. Warfield proceeded:

"Having carefully weighed the matter in her mind, Miss Ashton has decided to bestow her hand on—"

Every head was craned forward, every eye and ear open.

"Myself."

There was a rumbling of voices similar to that accompanying an earthquake. In another moment Warfield turned toward Marguerite and asked:
"Do you confirm what I have said?"

"Yes, I do," exclaimed the girl as if she were casting off a burden.

The suitors withdrew in a body, to separate as soon as possible, leaving Warfield and Marguerite together.

"How did you know, that?" asked the latter.

"Know what?"

"Why, that I liked you better than any of them?"

Warfield who was amazed at the revelation, was about to reply "I didn't," but instead he said, "A little and whispered to my ear."

At least a dozen farmers of the up-to-date variety, in the vicinity of Charlevoix, have told the reporter during the past week that they had the "best field of corn in the county." This is a pretty good indication that the corn crop, as a whole, will be a good one this year.

Work at the fair grounds at East Jordan is being forwarded to get the grounds in readiness for the coming county fair, which is only five weeks away. Good progress is being made with the new educational and fine arts building, now in process of construction.

Now that the farmers are beginning to reap the harvest the fruits of their labors are becoming evident. From all appearances the crops in this part of Michigan will be the largest ever harvested. The "onts" crop, just being harvested, is the best ever garnered in the county while the prospects for corn and potatoes are excellent.

County Clerk Lewis is mailing out to the several firms in the county blanks which they are required by a new law to file with office, in which they shall give the names of the firm and the length of the copartnership. This law was passed May 2, 1913, and goes into effect August 15. There is a stiff fine attached if this is not done.

Marriages licenses issued this week are: Ray Argetsinger, age 27, of Boyne City and Ethel W. Anderson, age 21, of Wilson township; Raymond Seymore, age 18 and Lotie Thompson, age 19, both of Charlevoix; George Rhiness, age 21 and Ruby Fry, aged 17, both of Boyne City; Harry Houston, age 19, of Clarion and Florence Padgett, age 20, of Maucelona.

Another auction is to be held on Holy Island. All who attended the sale last year, remember with pleasure the delightful day spent there. It is an ideal place for an outing and picnic. Those who attend this sale either Saturday or Sunday, whether they are interested in buying or not will find the trip well worth taking. The sales will be conducted by George W. Fryhofer, auctioneer for I. B. McLean, owner.

"A certain writer has said that no newspaper which took truth for its standard would make a pecuniary success. The press might return the compliment by remarking that the minister who told the truth about his congregation, alive or dead, would occupy the pulpit not much longer than on Sunday afterward. The press and clergy go hand in hand with the white brush, rosy spectacles magnifying little virtues and kindly throwing little deformities into oblivion. The pulpit, the pen and the gravestones are partners in saint-making."

Enjoyable Trip.
Seven local nimrods left Friday evening on the Str. Arbutus on a fishing trip to the north shore, returning Tuesday morning. The party consisted of R. A. Emrey, W. E. Parvulee, George Stafford, Amos Webster, Olaf Nordrum, Roy Ripley and James Bogart. They visited Naubinway, E. Pauvette, High Island, Beaver Island and other points on the trip. Fishing was reported good, several good catches being made, and the boys also picked and brought home a quantity of blueberries.

Camp Meeting.
The Church of God is holding its annual camp meeting on the camp grounds. Able ministers are present and are revealing the Gospel in many new lights. A store, boarding house and a horse barn are located on the grounds for the accommodation of those desirous of remaining there throughout the meetings. Feed for horses can be secured on the grounds. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend. Meetings will be held on grounds south of town, near Adams Lake.

Loses Valuable Horse.
Last Friday morning about 4:00 a. m., a valuable horse owned by Fred Swanson was struck by a bolt of lightning which snuffed out the animal's life instantly. The horse was out in the open at the time and only one slight mark was distinguished on the horse's body. The animal was insured with Myrtie Young & Son.

Coal Combustion.
There is enough explosive energy in a grateful of coal, if it could be liberated and controlled, to hurl a thousand pound projectile through a foot of solid steel. But there can be no explosion without oxygen, and the coal in the grate will not burn faster than the supply of air which reaches it will permit. If the coal could be furnished all at once with enough air to effect its complete combustion it would explode with as great violence as if it were so much dynamite.

BETTER LOOK UP THE LAW

Jakway Law on Packing Fruit Effective on August 14, 1913.

No More Filling Center of the Packages With Cull Product or Small Fruit.

On August 14, the January law, which was passed by the last legislature, will become effective, and it will be well for the fruit growers and dealers to post up on the provisions of the measure. This bill was passed for the purpose of securing an honest price for fruit and the proper filling of the box and can. The fruit packed in the future must be of uniform size, color and free from disfiguring diseases to the amount of ninety per cent, but an allowance is made for natural deterioration while in transit. It also does away with the filling of packages of fruit with fine specimens and the filling of the balance of the basket, box or barrel with fruit of inferior quality. Not less than twenty per cent of the contents of the package can be of smaller size than the top layer and the packer get away with it under the law. It will be interesting to note how the law works out in the state and how many will fail to observe it and get into trouble. The custom of putting any kind of inferior fruit in the middle of a package by certain growers led to the passage of the bill in order that the Michigan fruit could be brought up to the grade of the western product. The future of the fruit industry of the state depends upon the successful working of this law, for it is necessary to regulate dishonest packers in order to secure and keep a market and establish a reputation for the Michigan product. There has been a wonderful change in methods of packing in this state during the past two years, but there is still room for improvement in many directions, and it is expected that this bill will be the means of securing a uniform grade of fruit in this region.

The observance of this law by the growers will mean much to the region in the way of establishing a reputation for the local fruit. The law applies to the ones who sell fruit on the market as well as the grower and the same penalties are applied.

MAKING THE FARM PAY

B. C. C.

AFTER considerable experience in diversified farming on a piece of forty acres in the Chicago district I can recommend a dairy of eight or ten cows as the basis of operations on a small farm. It is taken for granted that a hired man will be kept for the principal work of it if the owner is prepared to devote his time and energies to the proposition.

For three years my dairy of ten cows has paid $100 to $125 a month. It took considerable time to grade on from a lot of scums that returned $2 to $30 a month to cows that can be depended on for about four gallons of milk each.

There is something in market for all this. Private customers, hotel restaurants and homes are desirable. Our sales are all by the gallon and a part of the product is furnished in the form of cream. We use a small separator. The place is two miles from an active little town, where there is a ready cash market for milk and cream, butter, eggs, poultry, etc. It is also possible to obtain a few acres in abundance and this is an excellent kind of food for children and pigs.

When milk was measurably low we made butter, for which we had private customers. With prices on the present basis we prefer to sell milk and cream.

One hundred dollars a month pays the wages and all the living expenses.

The richest areas are the hillsides of the lowlands. Undrained they cost in taxes and breed mosquitoes. The drained they will lift the mortgage on the farm or build the bank account.—Kansas Farmer.

FIGHTING GRAIN SMUT.

German Hot Water Treatment Found Effective in Tests.

In a recent German report on experiments on control of base smut of barley and wheat with the hot water treatment, the author gives an account of tests made in treating barley and wheat before planting with one or two solutions in tepid water, followed by immersion in water at from 50 to 55 degrees C. for from five to ten minutes.

The results were practically always favorable as regards a lower percentage of infection of the plants when compared with those from untreated seed, while the percentage of germination was not affected.

Photograph by United States department of agriculture.

tion was but slightly or not at all affected, except in case of the higher temperatures or longer treatments. Winter wheat steeped for four hours at 25 degrees and then dipped into water for ten minutes at 52 degrees gave a germination of from 85 to 90 per cent and no infection. Summer wheat under similar treatment gave 90 per cent germination and 0.25 per cent infection, while barley gave, respectively, 93 per cent and 0.25 per cent. This seems on the whole the best treatment used. The yield was very little affected by the treatments.

READING FOR THE BEE MAN.

By buying in quantities as much as 40 per cent may be saved on bee supplies.

Ammonia applied to the wound made by a bee-sting will usually afford immediate relief.

When working in the apiary it is best to carry along a light box to put all the bits of comb in.

It is a good plan to keep all vegetation down around the hives so that it will not interfere with the flight of the working bees, their hives and the feeding group.

Recorded purely from a mechanical standpoint, the window frame superior in structure than some others, but in its adaptation to the economical production of fancy honey it is very effective. — Expenses. There are then left for profit such items as boxes, poultry and eggs, honey, fruit and vegetables. It is bad policy to keep cows of any but high quality. The law of selection needs to be kept in force. It costs no more to feed and handle an animal that yields five gallons of milk daily than one producing three gallons. It does not pay to keep cows that produce less than four gallons a day.

Ten or twelve cows are not too many for a farm of forty acres, and they will handle many other interests that will distribute the labor evenly through the day. Operating in this way on a small farm there ought to be twenty-five hogs, 200 chickens and 100 ducks and geese to market every fall, in addition to 200 to 300 head of a considerable number of calves, a considerable number of vegetable.

There is work enough for an average family on a very few acres, while the intensive principle is followed. A good family can live on a few acres of corn, wheat, potatoes and a few acres of fruit, making a profitable season's work for a family. The farm is for a family, and it will take some time to handle these crops. Add ten acres of alfalfa for a dairy, and ten or forty gallons of milk to market every day and the family will have a good cash from morning till night.

The teaching manure heap on the farm furnishes the breeding pot for a bounteous crop of flies at the cost of low production in the house. The manure ought to be rejuvenating the soil. — Farm and Fireside.

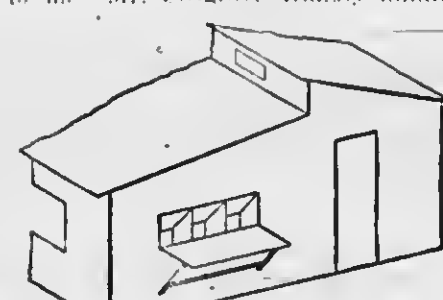

FIVE MUSCLE SAVER.

Platform For Unloading Grain For Faulty Does the Trick.

When it comes to unloading grain for faulty does the trick. I have seen, says a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker, the arrangement of the grain bin was something new, at least to me. Mr. Cosgrove frankly admits that he doesn't enjoy lifting bags of grain as well as he did fifteen years ago, so he has simply cut that form of activity right out of his chicken business.

To accomplish this he has built his grain bin in one end of the henhouse, with a horizontal door opening out and downward. A pair of hinged brackets hold this door in a level position just at the height of the door of his business wagon. When the wagon load of grain comes home from the station it is backed up to this platform and dumped into the bin without lifting. A narrow weather strip across the top and some patent rollers the rest of the way down kept out all driving storms.

PLATFORM FOR UNLOADING GRAIN.

Grubs That Afflict Sheep.
"What causes some of my sheep to hold their heads to one side, like bugs that have blind staggers?" asks an Indiana reader of Farm and Fireside. The answer is:

"The presence of gadfly grubs in the upper passages of the nostrils and head is a common cause of staggers in sheep, and the affected animal will hold its head to one side or constantly try to throw its head back over its spine. In such sheep there is usually a discharge from the nostrils, and this may cause coughing or sneezing. There is no specific remedy for this condition, but sheep usually manage to withstand the trouble if generously fed. The important thing is to prevent the depositing of gadfly larvae in the nostrils of sheep during fly time in the summer. This may be managed by daubing pine tar on the sheep's nose during the time when flies cause stinging."

Alsike For Wet Land.
Alsike will grow on land that is too wet and sour for red clover, and with timothy makes a good feed. Stock do not relish it as they do red clover when green, but eat it readily when cured. Being a perennial and producing seed every year, alsike will never need reseeding. Sow about six pounds of alsike seed to the acre. — Farm and Fireside.

"Hogging Off" Corn.
A. D. Wilson, superintendent of the Minnesota farmers' institute, observes that there is no better way to fatten hogs, with profit to the owner, than to turn them loose in the corn field and let them pick the corn themselves. This is what is called "hogging off" corn.

NOVEL ROTARY PUMP.

Ingenious Arrangement of Spur Gears Handles Mud and Gravel.

At the Iowa State college a new and simple rotary pump has recently been put through thorough tests which showed it to be of great efficiency, says Popular Mechanics.

This pump has only two moving parts, an outside annular gear and an inside spur gear. The main shaft extends through the back of the pump, carrying a driving pulley on its outer end and connecting with the large gear. It is the only part that requires packing.

The spur gear is mounted on a stud opposite the large gear. There is a cruciform shaped projection dividing the space between the two gears. By reversing the direction of rotation the intake pipe may be used as an outlet.

When the water enters the pump it is carried around by the pockets formed by the teeth in the large gear and the cruciform shaped projection. As it reaches the outlet port the two gears come into mesh on the upper side and force it out.

Tests have been made at speeds varying from 200 to 450 revolutions per minute with heads of from thirty to 150 feet. The highest efficiency was reached at 400 revolutions per minute and was 76.3 per cent. The discharge of water per revolution was about the same at all stages of efficiency. At the highest it was about one-quarter gallon, after deducting leakage. The pump has been successfully used in a stone quarry, drawing water which was mixed with mud and fine gravel.

GIANT TESTING MACHINE.

Largest Cable in the World Torn Asunder With Apparent Ease.

It took a pull of 261 tons to break the largest hoisting cable in the world when sections were tested recently in the 80,000 pound testing machine of the Fritz engineering laboratory at Lehigh university. The tests were conducted by Lehigh's civil engineering department in the presence of representatives of the manufacturers of the cable, of the Spanish-American Iron and Steel company, which has been using the steel rope in the Pennsylvania Steel company's Mayard mines in Cuba.

Special precautions were taken to prevent the operators of the testing machine from being struck by the shower of flying steel when the cable was torn asunder. Three tests were made, all highly satisfactory. A portion of the cable that had been in use for a year and a half withstood a pull of nearly 300 tons.

The construction of this cable was without precedent in ropemaking. It consists of six strands, each of nine wires, twisted around an independent wire rope center, this center having six strands of nineteen wires each, twisted around a hemp core. The finished cable was 7.810 feet long and weighed 125,320 pounds.

At the mines in Cuba cars with a capacity of 200,000 pounds of ore are lowered by means of this cable down an inclined plane 6,800 feet long. Recently it was decided to ascertain the strength of the great rope after its year and a half of service as compared with the strength of parties not worn, and three pieces from the main cable, each about twenty feet in length, were shipped to the Lehigh works of Lehigh university. There special jacks were placed on the ends to make possible the tests in the giant Rhode machine at Lehigh university.

Electric Light Carbons From Tar.

Carbons of high grade are now to be obtained from tar, according to a process invented by a Swedish firm. The powdered carbon will be pressed to form electric light carbons of large size, for electric arc lamps. The method is based on the fact that finely divided carbon makes up a large percentage of the composition of tar and is what gives the black color, this being due to the carbon particles suspended in an otherwise dense and transparent yellowish brown liquid. A process is used for separating the carbon from the liquid, and it can then be molded into any desired shape. —Scientific American.

Hardening Soft Iron.

To harden soft iron rivet it with water and scatter over its surface powdered yellow prussiate of potash, says Blacksmith and Wheelwright. Then heat to a cherry red heat, which causes the potash to melt and coat the surface of the soft iron. Then immerse quickly in cold water and repeat the operation. A white heat must not be used, as this would not harden but oxidize the iron. Care must be used not to use red prussiate of potash instead of the yellow. It will not answer.

Removing Iodine Stains.

A good way to chemically remove iodine stains from the hands or linen is to wash the stains in a strong solution of hyposulphite of sodium, known as "hypo," which is procurable at any photographic supply dealer's or drug store. There is no danger of using too strong a solution, but the best results are obtained with a mixture of one ounce of hypo to two ounces of water.

SUGAR BEETS
The condition of sugar beets as compared with an average is 89 in the state, 97 in the southern and northern counties, 90 in the central counties and 95 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 82 in the state and southern counties, 70 in the central counties, 80 in the northern counties and 91 in the upper peninsula.

WHEAT AND FORAGE
The yield per acre of hay and forage in tons is 0.98 in the state, 0.95 in the southern counties, 0.94 in the central counties, 0.97 in the northern counties and 1.41 in the upper peninsula.

PASTURE
The condition of pasture as compared with an average is 73 in the state, 61 in the southern counties, 77 in the central counties, 81 in the northern counties and 88 in the upper peninsula. One year ago the condition was 92 in the state and southern counties, 94 in the central counties, 93 in the northern counties and 93 in the upper peninsula.

APPLES
The weather this season has been rather unfavorable for apples, early in the season heavy frosts did considerable damage and the long continued drought caused a very heavy June drop and also caused the fruit to be smaller in size than usual, especially in unsprayed orchards. The prospect for an average crop is 58 in the state, 47 in the southern counties, 61 in the central counties, 50 in the northern counties and 91 in the upper peninsula. The winter varieties that promise best, are in their order: Northern Spy, Baldwin, Greening, Ben Davis, Wagener, Russet, Tolman Sweet and Tompkins King. Of the early sorts the most promising are Dutchess, Wealthy, Red Astrachan, Yellow Transparent, Maiden Blush, Fameuse, Early Harvest and Fall Tipple.

PEACHES
The prospect for an average crop of peaches in the Michigan Fruit Belt is 54 per cent, and in the state 53. One year ago the prospect was 18 and 11 respectively. The varieties that promise best, are in their order: Elberta, Crawford, Hill's Cull, New Proctor, Kalamazoo, Gold Drop, Barnard and Crosby.

TOOK FIRST AT APPLE SHOW

Western Michigan Apples Again Show Their Superiority.

Attention of Entire United States Now Centered Upon This Section.

Western Michigan apples took first prize at the apple show held in Cleveland during the convention of the National Apple Shippers' association. There were sixty-four varieties shown from this section of the state by the Western Michigan Development bureau, which was the largest display made by any locality in the country. The apples were picked in their present state of development, and made such an impression upon the president of the association that he expressed a desire to buy all the apples grown in western Michigan. This is one more proof of the superiority of the Western Michigan product, and when the fruit is carefully selected the taking of first prizes at any of the shows in the country is only a matter of form and does not require any strenuous effort.

It is a certainty that the attention of the entire United States is centered upon this section as the real home of good fruit, and with a little care and attention on the part of the growers to the packing and marketing end of the business, it is only a question of a short time before western Michigan will occupy the same position in the public mind in the fruit business as the Hood River country did only a short time ago.

It is a generally acknowledged fact that the finest fruit in the world is grown here, but the careless manner in which it has been handled in the past has held the region back as to reputation as a fruit center. Now that the new fruit

MANY SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS PROVIDED FOR ENTERTAINMENT OF FAIR VISITORS

Beachy, The Noted Aviator, To Make Two Flights A Day—Spectacular "Battle In The Clouds" Another Feature.

With no intention to detract from the many contests in every department of the West Michigan State Fair, not forgetting that more information which will feed the progressive mind, may be gained in one day at the fair than in a full month elsewhere, we are just now reminded that the fair that fails to provide special entertainment for the visitor is a serious disappointment to a very large percent of the thousands who enjoy a week at the fair. The fair at Grand Rapids has been especially fortunate in securing under contract the Derby Trolley, the most noted of all trolleys, who will make two flights every afternoon. Derby's carries with him in one flight, each day, an Aeronaught who will ride to a height of 300 feet when he will leap from the machine, with space and speed, his arm where he carries it until reaching earth when he releases it and sails to safety. This has been described as being so thrilling and death-defying, that strong men hide their eyes, anticipating the fatal fall which does not happen. The "Battle in the Clouds" what is it? It is new. It is one half century in advance of our day. It is the Climax of Pyrotechnics and Spectacular Production. It is what it claims to be, a Battle in the Cloud or perhaps better defined, an attack from behind the clouds upon the unsuspecting and sleeping city. The city has enjoyed a festival day, when sports and features of fun and frolic have made them tired and have gone to quiet rest. It is now that the bombardment from the cloud rains fire and death healing missiles in the very heart of the sleeping populace. Thus attacked, the defenseless city, where but a moment before all was splendor, quiet and contentment, is now converted into chaotic devastation. When the smoke of battle clears away, the victory is celebrated by a pyrotechnical display and fire works of the newest and most expensive kind, costing $50,000 each night will be burned to the delight of the man who has paid just 50 cents to see the Fair through the day, with its hundreds of points of interest, and has staid to enjoy his first evening at the Grand Rapids Fair.

The importance of this feature is better understood when you know that Grand Rapids gets the identical spectacle which has entertained New York City for one week, and is just in time to open here on Monday night. The features here mentioned do not enumerate all the special entertainment provided, there are twelve shows and riding devices, six vaudeville acts, Lady thing from an altitude of 50 feet into a tank of water, twelve harness races and the "Better Babies Contest" beside everything that has hitherto made the Fair Big. Special trains are being arranged for so that visitors who must return will be afforded the opportunity.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

Boys City Visited by Bad Storm Friday Night—Nobody Killed or Injured.

One of the most severe electrical storms experienced in the last ten years visited Boys City last Friday evening. The lightning flashes were almost continuous and the thunder most severe shortly before 4 o'clock.

A bolt of lightning struck the house of George Bailey, burning out the telephone and electric wires. Although the members of the family were badly frightened, no other damage was done. This is the third time the house has been a target of electric bolts.

So far Charlevoix has been very fortunate, suffering from no severe storms, although there has been a heavy downfall of rain on several occasions.

packing law is soon to become effective this trouble will be done away with, and all that the growers will have to do in order to firmly establish the reputation of Western Michigan as the leading fruit center of the nation, is to strictly adhere to the provisions of the law and the merits of the goods they raise will take care of themselves in the markets of the world.

The hoons won at Cleveland will go a great way toward making the buyers of the country look in this direction for their fancy stock in the future.

HOLD TWO OFFICES

Township Board Members Can Now Serve as School Officers.

After August 14, township boards will no longer have the right to remove school officers, the power resting entirely in the hands of the superintendent of public instruction. As this change takes away the principal reason for the incompatibility of members of the township board and school boards. Attorney General Grant Fellows rules that one person can hold offices on both boards. Thus the township clerk, supervisor and justice of peace can now also serve on the school boards.

The offices of township treasurer and school district treasurer are still held to be incompatible, however. A township treasurer may serve as director, moderator or trustee of a school district but not as its treasurer.

TIME NECESSARY TO GROW ALFALFA

Charlevoix County Farmers Should Heed M. A. C. Man's Advice.

Says Large Quantity of Fine Manure Should be Used as Top Dressing.

Prof. L. R. Taft, of the M. A. C., has written a letter to J. H. Goldie, secretary of the Otsego County Improvement association, regarding the preparation of land for growing alfalfa. His advice is just as applicable to Charlevoix county farmers as to farmers in Otsego county and the letter is published here with:

"I would say that reports from all parts of Michigan indicate that fully nine-tenths of the soils require the application of lime in order to grow this crop with any degree of success, and on the sandy soils that have been cropped for five years or more the cases where it is not needed are few indeed. While it is true that when an abundance of lime has been supplied and when the land is new or has been heavily manured, alfalfa will grow without inoculation, it is because there is an abundance of nitrogen in the soil for the first two or three years, and as the plants can get it from the soil they do not need to have the assistance of the bacteria, but at the same time if they were present it would be possible for the plants to obtain a large part of the nitrogen from the air, and this would both enable the plants to make a better growth, but it would help to conserve the fertility of the soil. The question has been studied very carefully by the men connected with the soils department and the crops department of the agricultural colleges of Michigan and the other states, and they are unanimously of the opinion that either the seed or soil should be inoculated. This is based not only on careful experiments conducted at the different colleges and by the United States department of agriculture, but as the result of inspecting hundreds and thousands of alfalfa fields, grown with or without inoculation, as well as on reports received from farmers in all parts of the country, so that these opinions should have much weight.

"Considering the small cost of the material for inoculating alfalfa seed it would seem unwise to attempt to grow this crop without inoculating the seed, and especially upon the lighter soils of Otsego county the benefit would be very marked. I would suggest moreover, that as much fine manure as can possibly be spared from other crops be used for topdressing alfalfa land, making the application whenever possible several weeks before the seed is to be sown and dragging it in. This will tend to kill all weed seeds and greatly increase the chances for obtaining a stand of alfalfa.

"I would suggest that all persons intending to grow alfalfa or who are now growing this crop, write to Dean R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan, and obtain a copy of the alfalfa bulletin issued by the Michigan Experiment station."

PLANT CLOSES DOWN

East Jordan Cooperaage Company Suspends Operations Indefinitely.

On Tuesday of last week the large plant of the East Jordan Cooperaage company at East Jordan closed down for a time, the length of which is uncertain.

The plant is owned by Grief Bros., who are the largest manufacturers of nail kegs in the world and have a score of plants in different localities. The plant is one of the best managed and equipped in the country and has run almost continuously for the past two years, giving employment to nearly 50 men, with a pay roll amounting to some $3,500 to $4,000 per month.

The cause of the shut-down is the condition of the market resulting from the proposed tariff changes.

TO TEST TEACHERS

August Examinations Will Include Agriculture, Oral Arithmetic and Language.

When the prospective teachers of this county appear on August 14 to take the annual state fall examination, they will find the usual list of subjects increased by agriculture. Last year this important subject was introduced in the eighth grade throughout the state and the eighth graders were required to pass an examination upon it. Now it becomes a part of the teachers' examination as well.

So successful was the innovation of oral language and arithmetic work in the teachers' examination in April, that it will be continued. A long list of varied subjects will be presented from which each teacher must choose a topic and talk on the same for at least two minutes. Mental arithmetic problems requiring both visualization and rapid thinking will also be given. The answers will be given orally instead of writing them down. As the state course of study, which is now mandatory, insists upon mental arithmetic and oral language work, this work is to be included in examinations hereafter.

MURDER AND SUICIDE

Petty Quarrel in Wood Caller's Camp Leads to Double Tragedy.

Last week over in Ward's timber occurred a murder and suicide, which started from a petty quarrel. Wm. Hamilton, aged about 25 and unmarried, some time ago became involved in a quarrel with one Wm. Holtbrook over a game of cards, and both being hot-headed Kentuckians, the matter would not down. Friday as they were on their way to work the quarrel was renewed and Hamilton pulled a revolver and shot Holtbrook through the left side.

The shot was fired in a frenzy of rage and as soon as Hamilton saw that he had probably killed Holtbrook, he turned the gun on himself and fired, the shot being almost instantly fatal.

Holtbrook walked to his home and was taken to Grayling to a hospital, where he died the next day.

DECISION IN LIQUOR CASE

Interesting One Has Been Handed Down by Judge Mayne.

IS OF STATE WIDE INTEREST

Saloon is Done Away With in Village of Fife Lake.

Action of Council is Upset—Decision Involves Some Very Interesting Legal Points in Liquor Question.

An interesting decision has just been filed by Judge Mayne in the case of George G. Correll, prosecuting attorney of Grand Traverse county, relator against the council of the village of Fife Lake et al. respondents.

One Miller Hobbs has been keeping a saloon in the village for two or three years, and filed his application the present year with the council with the Michigan Bonding & Surety company as surety upon his bond. The statute provides that when a majority of the qualified electors of any township, village or city equal to a majority of the votes cast for governor at the last general election, shall file a petition protesting against the acceptance of the bonds offered by any individual, firm or corporation proposing to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors at retail, it shall be unlawful for such township, village or city to accept such bonds. This statute referring to surety company bonds.

Such a protest was filed by the required number of electors. It appeared that there were 48 signatures to the petition and that no question was raised as to forty-five of them being upon the poll list of the village and having voted. It appeared in evidence that 32 electors of the village voted for governor at the election last fall, and that there were 48 signers to the petition of protest whose names were on the poll list of the village, and in regard to 45 of them no evidence was offered that their names were improperly upon the poll list, so that the requisite number was held by the judge to have signed the petition of protest.

At the same meeting at which the petition of protest was filed there was another petition also filed comprising a majority of the electors of the village as shown by the last state election favoring the acceptance of a surety company bond, and on this second petition were the names of eight of the signers of the first named petition, and it was claimed by the attorney for the respondents that those names should have been deducted from the names on the first mentioned petition, in which case there would not be sufficient names left upon the petition of protest, but there was evidence to show that this first named petition was circulated at a date prior to the first mentioned petition, and the judge held that any names that might be upon both petitions should not be deducted from the petition of protest. The relator prayed in his petition that a writ of mandamus be issued by the circuit court directing the council to meet and vacate its proceedings accepting the liquor bond for the present year. The bond having been accepted by the village council and the county treasurer having issued license or red card to Mr. Hobbs, they are also asked to show cause why the writ of mandamus should not be allowed.

The court ordered the writ of mandamus to issue as prayed for by the prosecuting attorney in the case, and the council to be required to meet and vacate their action, thus doing away with the saloon in the village of Fife Lake during the present year.

Some very interesting legal points were involved in the case, and it is probable that it may be taken to the supreme court for review.

LARGEST IN STATE

Alfalfa Field Owned by Henry Richardi at Bellaire, Antrim County.

The largest alfalfa field in Michigan is on Henry Richardi's farm just east of Bellaire. At present it comprises 140 acres and next year it will be increased to 200 acres when the sixty acres now in beans will be sowed to alfalfa.

The fitting of this immense field for alfalfa has been a big undertaking, several men and teams having been employed there constantly all summer.

The work of seeding was completed last week and already the 60 acres first sown looks like a velvety green carpet and the little plants have roots three or more inches in length.

If this big field turns out as well as present appearance, would indicate it will prove a veritable gold mine to Mr. Richardi and a great benefit to the community.

Emmet County Fair.

September 10 to 19 are the dates set this year for the Emmet county fair, to be held on its grounds at Petoskey. Special prizes will be given for the best basket of apples, and three prizes, head by $25 is offered for the best bushel of corn. The race program is an excellent one, and special inducements are offered to poultry fanciers.

SELECTION OF A CANDIDATE

Care and Discretion Should be Used in New District.

Says Cheboygan Democrat, Recognized Organ of that Party.

According to the statements of the Cheboygan Democrat, the recognized organ of that party in northern Michigan, it behooves the members of the various parties interested in the selection of a candidate to represent the new district in congress to use every care and discretion that no mistake be made through which the republican nominee be defeated in the election. In its comment the Democrat says:

"Cheboygan is now in the new congressional district created by the last legislature, composed of the extreme northern part of the lower peninsula, and the southern part of the upper peninsula, composed largely of its agricultural and timber districts, some such a country as that composing the southern half of this district, though not so well developed in its agricultural resources but with similar ends and aims.

"In the upper peninsula the republican party is largely impregnated with Bull Moose liberal proclivities, while the Democracy has many powerful reactionaries, or stand pat Democrats. In the lower half the Republicans in control of things are largely reactionaries, while the Democrats are progressive as a rule. Hence the complexion of the next representative from this district is not a sure thing, for while he may be either a Democrat, a Republican or Bull Moose, the party designated will be less of consideration than the kind of a party man he may be, for there is little difference between some kinds of Progressives, and Democrats, and Republicans, there being more difference between the various kinds of party men than the various parties."

It's Always the Case

Did you ever think of it? Suppose every business man took the interest in the upbuilding of his town the newspaper man does. He works for a hundred and one things for the general good. Imagine a newspaper man's feelings when some lame, springhalt kind of a fellow—and every town has them—reproaches him because he don't boom things enough. Nine times out of ten the same fellow has never paid up from the counter in the store at which he trades.

Have you tried them?—The Courier want adds

FIRST DROWNING OF SEASON IN OYSTER BAY SATURDAY NIGHT

Harry DuPont, Knot Sawyer at Cooper's Shingle Mill, Falls Overboard While on Trip Across Lake—Did Not Come to Surface After Striking Water—Body Was Recovered Wednesday Morning.

The first drowning of the season in this vicinity occurred about 11:30 o'clock Saturday evening while Harry DuPont and several others were returning to Cooper's shingle mill at Oyster Bay, after a visit to Charlevoix and Petoskey.

It had been the custom of the employees at the mill to come to Charlevoix on Saturday afternoons. On the day the accident occurred Frank Woodford, Dick Cooper, Glenn Pangborn, his father, and DuPont came over from the bay in the afternoon, and DuPont and two other members of the party went to Petoskey to do some trading and attend to other business. They returned on the last "dummy" and were met at the railroad dock by Oscar Mason and his gasoline boat, the "Chub," Mason having been previously engaged to take them back to Oyster Bay.

The party went aboard the boat about 11 o'clock and started on their trip across the lake. From what can be learned, the boat had entered the bay and would have reached the dock in a short time, when one of the party started to take up a collection to pay Mason for making the trip. DuPont had been sitting on the deck in the bow of the boat most of the time since leaving the railroad dock. Upon being asked for his share of the expense he arose to his feet to get the money from his pocket. Whether he stumbled upon arising or the boat rolled, is not certain, but in either event he fell overboard.

The boat was immediately checked down and swung around. Upon reaching the location where DuPont fell overboard, no trace of him was found and it is stated by those who were watching, that he never came to the surface after striking the water.

Sunday morning, the life savers were notified and they immediately proceeded to the scene of the accident and worked the entire forenoon in an effort to recover the body, but were unable to do so. In the afternoon the mill crew renewed the search, but with no success. The effort was continued through Monday until about 9 o'clock Tuesday morning, when the lake became too rough to work.

About 11 o'clock Wednesday morning the body was found a short distance from where the accident occurred by Frank Woodford, who was trolling, and towed to the mill dock. Coroner Wilkinson was notified, who ordered the body taken to Sec's undertaking parlor, where an inquest will be held.

The drowning occurred shortly after the turn was made into the bay, near the west shore. At this point water is from 25 to 30 feet deep, with a marl bottom.

Harry DuPont was about 35 years of age, and a knot Sawyer by trade. Previous to coming to Cooper's mill, he had been employed at East Jordan and had made his home at that place. He leaves a wife and six children, the oldest being 13 years. For some time his family had been with him, living in a tent near where he worked. One of the purposes of the trip to Petoskey was to purchase necessities for his family, and it was noticed when he boarded the boat that his arms were laden with packages intended for them.

Those who were intimately acquainted with him state he was a hard and industrious worker, and well spoken of by his employers. He was a member of the M. W. of A. The accident is a sad one, as he left his little family in bad shape financially. Tuesday, the bereaved wife and children were removed to their home at East Jordan.

NEW LAW HITS EVERYWHERE

Regulations For Weights and Measures Took Effect August 15.

Commissioner Helme Calls Attention to Bottomless Peck Measure.

The last legislature passed a new weight and measure law, placing its operation in charge of the state dairy and food department. This law took effect August 15. Under the law the state dairy and food commissioner becomes superintendent of weights and measures for the state and his deputies become inspectors of weights and measures. He is also given authority by the law to prescribe rules and regulations for weights and measures in the state.

"One of the greatest abuses in the state is the so-called bottomless peck measure," says Commissioner Helme. "This measure is about the size of a stovepipe in diameter and the ostensible object of this small diameter is so that it can be slipped into a paper bag and the commodities measured will be in the bag on the withdrawal of the measure. This measure contains the same number of cubic inches that the ordinary flat peck measure contains, but owing to its peculiar shape, in the measuring of commodities, like apples or potatoes, it is impossible to get a peck of those commodities in this measure. A bushel of potatoes under the Michigan law weighs 50 pounds and a peck of potatoes should therefore weigh 15 pounds, but in the bottomless peck measure only 12 pounds of average size potatoes can be placed. The use of this measure gives the dealer five pecks to every bushel. The use of this measure has been condemned by other states and on and after Aug. 15 its use in Michigan will become illegal under the regulations that will be issued by the state superintendent of weights and measures.

"It has been customary throughout the state for grocers to sell dry beans and like commodities in a tin quart measure. This tin quart measure holds a liquid quart which is about 60 cubic inches less than a dry quart measure holds. As a result a bushel of beans which contains 32 quarts when measured out to the consumer in a tin quart measure will measure 37 quarts and the consumer is therefore deprived of five quarts of beans on every bushel he buys. After Aug. 15 all commodities not liquid must be sold by dry measure, a quart of which contains 67 1/2 cubic inches. Under regulations to be issued by the superintendent of weights and measures, the use of liquid measures in selling dry commodities is prohibited and a failure to observe this law will invite prosecution."

What has been done about an inspector of weights and measures in Charlevoix? "Fully sixty per cent of the weights and measures in Charlevoix are not right," declared a prominent business man recently. However, this same fact is true of a large number of other towns in the state. "Many stores use measures for measuring out dry products when they are meant only for liquid measure. Some follow these practices intentionally, others are not aware that their equipment is not up to the standard."

"Coal is always dealt out to purchasers in sacks instead of actual weight. Possibly the number of sacks will average up to the proper weight, but every day conditions change so rapidly that there is no way for the consumer to know the actual amount he is getting unless he is presented with a weight bill stating the amount as registered by standard scales."

Under the terms of the new state law, there is no doubt but there will be an inspector of weights and measures visit every city and town in the state and confiscate all defective weights and measures, and it will be well in the meantime for merchants to carefully look over their equipment.

VIOLENTLY INSANE

Oscar McLaughlin of Torch Lake Loses Mind at Camp Meeting

Singing gospel songs and uttering fervent prayers, Oscar McLaughlin of Torch Lake was taken to the county jail Sunday evening violently insane.

Mr. McLaughlin had been attending the camp meeting held by the members of the Church of God on their grounds south of town near Adams Lake, when his mind became totally unbalanced. He was at once taken into custody and brought to this city to be taken care of. Upon being taken into custody, he became very violent and it required the united efforts of several officers to place him in a cell at the county jail.

Sheriff Chapin of Antrim county was notified and arrived Monday to take charge of the prisoner, and returned to Bellaire with him in custody on the evening train.

Northern District Fair.

This year the Northern District Fair, an affair instituted originally and conducted by newspaper men, will be held at Cadillac, September 16 to 19. Everything along the line of new thrills are promised—airplane flights, acrobats, marvelous contortion acts, good horse races, fine exhibits of farm products, stock and poultry. In short, they promise something every minute.

JUMPED INTO LAKE MICHIGAN

Aged Davenport Man Takes Life Enroute to Wequetonsing.

J. W. Whittaker's Mind Became Unbalanced While on Trip in Search of Health.

Up to the present time no trace has been found of J. W. Whittaker of Davenport, Iowa, who disappeared on the steamer Manitou enroute from Chicago to Charlevoix on Monday of last week.

Officers of the transportation line hushed the matter up while they instituted a silent search, but this proved fruitless, and Thursday morning they gave the story to the public. They are firmly convinced that Whittaker took his own life by leaping from the boat into the waters of Lake Michigan.

Whittaker was on his way to Wequetonsing for his health. He was about 73 years old, and his mind was evidently unbalanced, although it was not thought possible he would take his life.

While on the Manitou, Whittaker suddenly became possessed with the hallucination that he was on the top of a 25 story building, which was being undermined by water and threatened to fall. Several times he appeared on the point of leaping into the lake, but each time was restrained, and a bell boy was set to watch him. All day Monday his condition appeared bad, but at times later in the day began to talk rationally on various topics. He persisted on remaining on deck, however, and seated himself along side the rail with the bell boy in attendance. Thinking there was little danger of Whittaker making way with himself, the bell boy went to another part of the boat on an errand, and upon returning, found that Whittaker had disappeared. Nor could he be located on the Manitou, which was searched from stern to stern.

His wife, who was with him, left the boat at Harbor Springs the guest of friends. That her husband drowned in Lake Michigan appears to be the only solution to the mystery, and it is expected that his body will float ashore at some lake port unless picked up by some boat.

RECORD ALMOST UNPRECEDENTED

Charlevoix's Health Conditions Has No Equal in State.

TYPHOID - CHOLERA INFANTUM

Neither of Above Disease Have Been Reported For Long Period of Time.

Pure Water and Clean Milk Both Responsible For Prevailing Excellent Health Conditions—Low Death Rate.

Water free from contamination and clean milk are responsible for the excellent health conditions in Charlevoix, according to City Health Officer Dr. R. B. Armstrong, to whom not a case of typhoid fever has been reported for over three years and to whose attention not a case of cholera infantum has been called during the past twelve months. This record is almost unprecedented, and speaks wonders, not only for the water supply, but for the care taken by the dairymen and dealers who supply the residents of Charlevoix with milk.

Health records all over the country show that 50 per cent of the typhoid fever cases come from impure water, 25 per cent from unclean milk, and the other 25 per cent from other causes, many of which are untraceable. The excellent sewer system which extends over the entire portion of our city, and the good drainage of the unserved portion the outskirts, leave the city's water supply, which is taken from deep wells at the mouth of the channel, absolutely uncontaminated.

Probably but very few if any other cities in the United States have passed through a period of three years without at least one case of typhoid being reported, and it is believed that in this direction Charlevoix heads the list of having an absolutely clean bill of health.

Cholera infantum is a disease most prevalent among bottle fed babies. The fact that there is not at present nor has there been a case in the city, speaks praise for the producers and dealers, who live up to the regulations relative to cleanliness at the stables, proper cooling and icing of the product, and sanitary methods in handling. Of course this sanitary condition has not come in some instances without a fight on the part of the city board of health and its officers. Rigid inspections have been frequently made, and the actions taken backed by the ordinance enacted by the city council and state law.

Charlevoix with her low death rate and entire absence from contagious and communicable diseases is attracting the attention of health officers from other cities in the state, who look upon conditions here as almost a miracle.

RESORTERS ARE SHORT

Says Record and Attributes Reason to Change of Railroad Rates.

It is frequently asked: "Are there as many summer visitors in Petoskey as there were a year ago at this time?" The question is a difficult one to answer and it is hardly to be wondered at that both negative and affirmative replies should be given. However, the prevailing opinion appears to be that there are not as many resorters here this year as last and this, in spite of the fact that weather conditions this season have been decidedly in our favor. The eastern resorts are crowded, particularly the seaside resorts, while the Wisconsin resorts claim this is their banner year. While it is possible to advance various reasons for this diminution of our summer business, the "Record" is of the opinion that the abolition of the summer tourist rate by the railroads is the principal cause of it. Well, if the railroads can stand it, we can.—Petoskey Record.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a running sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammation of the mucous surface. BOOZE SHIPPERS UP AGAINST IT

 day August 15, 1913.

Provisions and Penalties on Shipping Wet Goods Into Dry Territory.

Agents of the railroads as well as express company managers are confronted with the necessity of exercising extreme caution in the transportation of liquor into dry territory with the enforcement of the Pray law, enacted by the last legislature and effective August 15.

The Pray law was framed and introduced for the Michigan Anti-Saloon league to make effective the Webb interstate liquor shipment law enacted by the last session of congress. The object is to prevent the shipment and possession of liquor for illegal sale.

Liquor shipment into dry territory have been large and are bound to be curtailed by the Pray law because of the stringent conditions attached to the transportation of the wet goods.

"The Pray law and its requirements just came to our attention," said one of the express managers.
 "It will surely knock a hole in the express shipments of liquor. We are not going to take any chances on the measure, and it is so strict that it looks like the business of the wholesale men and will be greatly decreased. I think the beer business will be hurt more than the whiskey and wine trade."

Section 2 of the new law makes it unlawful for any person to consign, ship or transport in any manner whatsoever, or deliver any liquors, excepting those for medicinal, sacramental, chemical or scientific purposes, to any person in any township, municipality or county where, by law, either local or statewide in its operations the manufacture and sale of such liquors for beverage purposes is prohibited, or for any person residing in such prohibited territory to receive any such liquors without placing upon the outside of the package complete information.

The name and address of the con-signor, kind and quantity of liquor contained and the statement that either such liquors are medicinal or family use, must appear. If any false statement is made regarding the shipment of the package, the consignee or the consignor will be deemed guilty of violating the act.

Express, railroad and other transportation companies are obliged to keep a public record of all liquor shipments. This part of the law makes it possible where any person is suspected of running a blind tiger, to ascertain at the freight and express offices, how much liquor is being shipped to that person. The record required of the transportation companies is open to the public inspection and is prima facie evidence of the facts. The law also prevents the delivery of liquor by express and freight agents to minors. The person shipping or receiving liquors is required to sign his true name in all cases. The word "person" used through the act includes any individual, firm, co-partnership or corporation or any combination of individuals.

When convicted for violation of the law is procured, the violator can be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than $100, not more than $500 and the costs of the prosecution, or imprisonment in the county jail for not less than 60 days nor more than six months, or both fine and imprisonment, according to the discretion of the judge.

Friends of Richard Williams Help Him Celebrate 80th Birthday.

Sunday, August 17, was the 80th birthday of Richard Williams of Ironton and a number of friends and relatives dropped in on him to remind him that even at his advanced age his friends were many, and wished him many happy years to come. After hand shaking and congratulations, fully 75 people sat down to a bountiful dinner under the shade of the apple trees.

He was the recipient of many useful presents besides $20.00 in money. Mr. Williams is spry and active for a man of his age, and it is hoped that the event can be repeated on his future birthdays.

FLY NETS

PESTERED CATTLE

Anything you can do to keep flies, mosquitoes and other insects away from your cattle or horses, means money in your pocket. Cattle never do as well when they are bothered with flies—they use up a lot of vitality in fighting them. Horses also lose flesh and strength from the same cause and cannot do the work they ought to do. Use Atlas Fly Oil—it's harmless to the skin and hair and flies, mosquitoes, midges and other insects will cease to find their living off your stock. Try it.
 It costs but little and saves you much more than it costs. Sprayers to use it with 50c each.

THEATRICAL

"Sacrificing a big salary, her home in New York city and her parents whom she loves dearly, Miss Helene Guilbert, portraying
 the role of Marie Louise Voysin (the thief in "The Thief" is traveling across the continent, playing one night stands, rushing for trains at the close of the last act and drawing a pay check each Saturday night of a size she passed several years ago, to deliver her sex a message—a great message—based on Commandment No. 7.

"For three years Miss Guilbert has been playing the title role in "The Thief." Two years ago her employers offered her the stellar part at a much larger salary in a new play, which had been assured a year's run in Gotham. Miss Guilbert's reply was "no." She would continue with "The Thief" until every city and town in the country had seen the play. She expects to complete the big task next June.

"Helene Guilbert was born for the part she plays. For a producer of emotional drama, to find her equal would be a difficult task.

"The Thief" is the road success of the century. Packed houses have greeted the production whenever
 C. S. Primrose has offered it and it will continue to be a success as long as Miss Guilbert remains in the leading role. Staged in three acts, with a cast of but six persons all of them stars—"The Thief" held its audience spellbound at the Racine theatre, Sunday afternoon and night and those who occupied seats at other performances would be delighted to hear that Mr. Primrose had decided to play a return engagement."—Racine Journal News, December 9, 1912. "The Thief" will appear at Charlevoix theatre, Friday, August 22.

The Girl and the Stampede.

In introducing to the public "The Girl and the Stampede" the producers, Messrs. Norton & Lambert have gone into every detail of the construction. A large cyclorama painting representing the great plains of Wyoming is from the brush of the noted German artist, Carl Hubanbauch and is truly a masterpiece. The spectator at the rise of the curtain is immediately transferred into the atmosphere of the west, where for over two hours you sit in rapt attention, suppressing a fear here, roaring with laughter there, as the story is told in an effective way by a company of high class New York actors under the personal direction of the author Mr. Victor Lambert. This meritorious production will be seen at the Charlevoix theatre, Saturday
 August 23.

"THE COLONEL and the HORSE THIEF"

In the teeth of our fire, however, being satisfied with what they'd done, and the horses safely brought out three comrades dripping up the bank to where we lay taking pot shots at every bunch of feathers that approached the opposite bank.

We got Harrett's arm into a sling, and as Martha's hurt wasn't serious we lost no time in getting away.

"They simply heat us to it," complained Barrell as we rode south. "You all had just started when young Long their grabs the sack and ducks through the crowd, and the whole bunch turns loose on us at once. We wasn't expecting anything so early in the game, and they winged me the first clatter. I thought sure it was off with me when I got this bullet in the shoulder, but I used the gun in my left hand and broke for the nearest pony."

"They got me, too, before I saw what was up," added Martin. "But I tore out of there like a jack rabbit. It was all done so quick that the first thing I knew I'd straddled my horse and was making tracks. What a thought then! I thought I was a dishonored enough for a trick like that!"

Then Barrell spoke up and says: "Boys, as far as the coin goes we're not out and injured. We just made a Mexican stand off—lost our money, but saved our lives—and mighty lucky at that from appearances. What I want to know now is how we're all going to get home, clean across the state of Texas, without a dollar in the outfit and no assets but our guns and the dogs."

"That was a sure tough proposition, and we had left it pretty out of calculations. We'd bet every bean on that race, not seeing how we could lose. In them days there wasn't a railroad in that section, ranches weren't scattering, and people weren't giving plunk tens to every stranger that rode up, especially when they were as hard-looking as we were."

"We're got to eat, and so's the horses," says Hollis. "But no rancher is going to welcome with open arms as disreputable an outfit as we are—two men shot up and the rest of us with out holding, grub, money or explanations. There's what we need—explanations. Don't exactly see how we're going to explain our fix to the honest lay diggers either. Everybody I think some sheriff is after us, and two to one they'll put some officer on our trail, and we'll have more trouble. I believe I've had all I want for awhile."

"I'll tell you how we'll work it," I says. "One of us'll be the sheriff of Guadalupe county, back home, with three deputies, bringing back a prisoner that we've chased across the state. We'll ride up to a ranch and demand lodging for ourselves and prisoner in the name of the state of Texas and say that we'll pay with vouchers on the county in the morning."

"No, sir; not for me!" says Martin. "I'm not going in for forgery. It's all right to practice a little mild deception on our old brothers, as we figured on doing, but I'm not going to try to dupe the state of Texas. Our troubles would only be starting if we began that game."

"Your plan's all right, kid," says Bennett to me. "You be the terrible desperado that I'm bringing home after in a bloody fight where you wounded Martin and me and 'most escaped. You'll have every rancher's wife giving you flowers and weeping over your youth and kissing you goodby. In the morning, when we're ready to go and I'm about to fix up the vouchers for our host, you break away and ride like the devil. We'll all tear off a few shots and follow in a hurry, leaving the farmer hoping that the villain is recaptured and the girls tearfully praying that the gallant and misguided youth escapes."

It seemed to be about our only resort, as the country was full of bad men, and we were liable to get turned down cold if we didn't have some story, so we decided to try it on.

We rode up to a ranch 'bout dark that night, me between the others, with my hands tied behind me, and Jim called the owner out.

"I want a night's lodging for my deputies, and our prisoner," he says. "I'm the sheriff of Guadalupe county, and I'll fix up the bill in the morning."

"Come in! Come in!" the feller says, calling a man for the horses. "Glad to accommodate you. Who's your prisoner?"

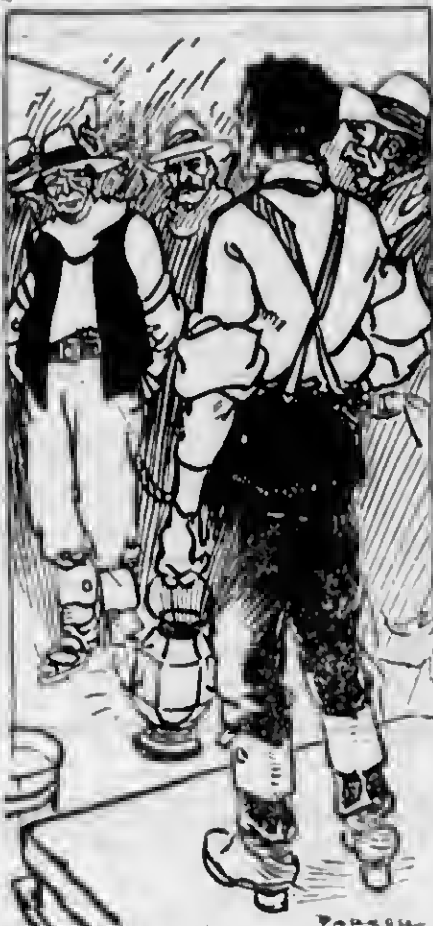

"That's Texas Charlie that robbed the Bank of Euclid single handed," answers Jim. "He give us a long run clean across the state, but we got him just as he was getting over into the Llan Territory. Fought like a tiger."

It worked fine. The feller, whose name was Morgan, give us a good lay-out for the night, and a bully breakfast next morning.

That desperado game was simply great. The other fellers attended to the horses, and I just sat around looking vicious and had my grub brought to me, while the women acted sorrowful and fed me pie and watermelon pickles.

When we was ready to leave next morning Jim says: "Now, Mr. Morgan, I'll fix up them vouchers with you," and, giving me the wink, I let out a yell, and, jabbing the spurs into Black Hawk, we cleared the fence and was off like a puff of dust with the rest of 'em shooting and screaming after me like mad."

Say, it was lovely, and when the boys overtook me, out of sight of the house, Morgan would have been astonished to see the sheriff, his posse and the terrible desperado doubled up in their saddles laughing fit to bust. Well, sir, we never had a blitch in the proceedings for five days, and I was getting to feel a sort of pride in my record as a bank robber, forger, horse thief and murderer, according to the way Bennett presented it. He certainly was the boss bar of the range.

We had a story framed up that painted me as the idealistic young tough the Lone Star had ever produced, and it never failed to get me all the attention there was in the house.

One night we came to the best looking place we'd seen, and in answer to Jim's summons, out walked an old man, followed by two of the prettiest girls I ever saw, who joined their father in welcoming us in.

"Glad to be of assistance to you, Mr. Sheriff," he said. "My name is Purdy, sir—Colonel Purdy, as you may have heard; in the Mexican war special mention three times for distinguished conduct. These are my daughters, Mr. Annabel and Marie." As we went in he continued: "You say you had a hard time getting your prisoner? He looks young for a criminal. What's he wanted for?"

Somehow when I saw those girls blushing and looking behind their father I didn't care to have my crimes made out any blacker'n necessary, and I tried to give Jim the high sign to let me off easy—just make it forgery or arson—but he was looking at the ladies, and, evidently believing in the strength of a good impression, he said: "Well, yes; he's young, but they never was a old man with half his crimes. He's wanted for a good many things in different places, but I went after him for horse stealing and murder. Killed a rancher and his little daughter, then set fire to the house and ran off a bunch of stock."

"Oh, oh! How dreadful!" shuddered the girls, backing off, with horrified glances at me.

I tried to get near Jim to step on his foot, but the old man was glaring at me something awful.

"Come to observe him closely, he has a depraved face," says he. "He looks the thorough criminal in every feature; dead to every decent impulse, I s'pose."

In those days I was considered a pretty handsome feller, too, and I knew I had Jim beat before the draw on looks, but he continues making matters worse.

"Yes, and he's desperate, too—one of the worst I ever see. We had an awful fight with him up here on the line of the territory. He shot Martin and me before we got him. You see, I wanted to take him alive, and so I took chances on getting hurt."

"Thank you, miss; my arm does ache considerable. Of course if you'd just as soon dress it—Oh, no; I'm no braver'n anybody else, I guess! Nice of you to say so, anyhow." And he went grinning out into the kitchen with the girls to fix up his arm.

The old man insisted on having my feet bound together and me fastened to a chair and said: "Yes, yes, I know you can watch him, but you're in my house now, and I feel a share of the responsibility upon me. I've had experience with desperate characters, and I'm going to be sure that this young reprobate don't escape his just punishment. Are you sure you don't need more help getting him home? I'll go with you if—"

"Thank you," interrupted Hollis. "We've chased the scoundrel 400 miles, and I reckon, now we've got him, we can keep him."

At supper Jim, with his arm in a new sling, sat between the two girls, who cooed over him and took turns feeding him till it made me sick.

The old man had a plunger move my chair up to the foot of the table and bring me a plate of coarse grub after they all finished eating.

He had tied my ankles to the lower rung of the chair himself, and when I says to the nigger, "Those cords have plunk stopped my circulation; just ease 'em up a little," he went straight up.

"Don't you touch them knots, Sam!" he roared. "I know how to secure a man, and don't you try any of your games in my house either, you young scound. I'd never forgive myself if you escaped."

I ate everything I could reach, which wasn't much, and when I asked for the butter he glared at me and said: "Butter's too good for horse thieves. Eat what's before you."

Every time I'd catch the eye of one of the girls and kind of grin and look enticing she'd shiver and tell Jim that the marks of my depravity stood out on my face like waris on a toad.

Jim and the boys would all grin like idiots and invent a new crime for me. They put it to the old man so strong that when he turned in he chained me to Sam, the cross eyed nigger that good behind me at supper, and made us sleep on the floor.

I told Sam that I cut a man's throat once because he snored, and that nigger never closed an eye all night. I was trying to get even with somebody.

After breakfast, when it came time to leave, Donnelly untied my feet and let me out into the yard, where the girls were hanging around the colonel and Jim, who was preparing to settle up.

As we rode up the evening before I had noticed that we turned in from the road through a lane and that the fence was too high to jump, so when I threw my leg over Black Hawk I hit Donnelly a swat in the neck, and as he did a stage fall I swept through the gate and down the lane.

The old man cut the halter off one of his Mexican warwhoops and broke through the house on the rim, appearing at the front door with his shotgun just as I checked up to make the turn on to the main road.

As I swung around, doubled over the horse's neck, he let drive with his old blunderbuss, and I caught two backshots in my right arm where you see them marks.

I had sense enough to hang on and ride for my life, because I knew the old rater would reckon it a pleasure to put an end to such a wretch as me if he got half a chance.

I heard him howl: "Come on, boys! We'll get him yet!" And over my shoulder I saw him jump one of his loose horses standing in the yard and come tearing down the lane, ahead of the blunderbuss, and passing, his white hair streaming and the shotgun waving aloft as though obtaining an array of greasers at the head of his regiment.

From the way he drew away from the boys I wouldn't have placed any money that he was wrong, either.

I've always wondered how the old man ever got through that war with only three recommendations to the government.

He certainly kept good horses, too, for in five minutes we'd left the posse behind, and I saw him mauling his horse into range, reloading as he came.

As I threw the quilt into the mare with my good arm I allowed I'd had about all the horse stealing I wanted for awhile.

The old devil finally saw he was losing ground in spite of his best efforts and let me have both barrels. I heard the shot patter on the hard road behind me and hoped he'd quit and go home, but I'm blamed if he didn't chase me five miles farther before turning back in hopes I'd east a stone or something would happen to me.

I believe I was on the only horse in Texas that could have outrun the colonel and his char morning.

About noon I stopped at a blacksmith's shop, half dead with pain, and had my arm dressed and a big jolt of whiskey.

As the posse rode up to me, sitting in the sun by the lathered flanks of my horse and nursing my arm, Jim yells out: "Here he is! Surround him, boys! You're our prisoner!"

"No; I'm blamed if I am!" I says. "You'll have to get another desperado. After this I'm the sheriff!"

Berry Shipper at Manistee Deals Out Short Measure of Berries.

This Practice Will be Ruin of Western Michigan Region if Not Stopped.

A fraud such as that reported in a Milwaukee dispatch last week should be summarily prosecuted. In this case a Manistee shipper sent seven crates of red raspberries to Milwaukee packed with a titration of half pint boxes turned up, so that, though the crates look perfectly filled, there were only thin layers of berries in them. The reputation of all of our fruit shippers is injured and the whole Western Michigan region suffers when a fraud such as this occurs. Advertised as "the worst fraud yet in fruit shipping," this method will go all over the country, and it will require much honest packing to make up for it. More confiscation of the seven crates, it appears to us, is not punishment enough.

One fact that lends a slightly different view to the episode, however, is that boys picking and packing the fruit have been known to play just such tricks as these in order to make their picking easier. Only a short time ago a shipper discovered that his boys were putting sand in the bottom of their boxes in order to save time in picking. Several eral crates were thus made up by the boys; but through the weight of the boxes, the shipper caught the fraud and no damage was done. It is just possible that such a solution would account for the bottom side up boxes found in Milwaukee; but even if that were the case the shipper would be in large measure responsible, and as the evil effect of the thing would be no less than in the case of fraud by the shipper, so the shipper's responsibility would be no less.—Manistee News.

BY BICKNELL YOUNG, C. S. B.

Bicknell Young C. S. B., a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship delivered a lecture Sunday afternoon on Christian Science at the Charlevoix Theatre under the auspices of the Christian Science Society. Mr. Young was introduced by R. W. Kane, an Attorney of this city. Mr. Kane said:

Friends:—It is my pleasant duty to bid you welcome, on behalf of the Christian Science Society of Charlevoix to the mental treat in store for you in the lecture you are to listen to this afternoon. The gentleman who is to address us comes fully accredited and well equipped to speak on the great subject which he will discuss.

"But why a lecture on Christian Science?" some one may ask. Several answers can be given to this question and among them this. History teaches that every great movement for the betterment of man, in its earlier stages at least, has met with determined resistance. From some because of superstition and sheer ignorance of the principles and objects of the movements from others, because of misconceptions and misunderstandings of its spirit and trend; and from still others, because they were satisfied with things as they were and did not want any change, who deliberately shut their eyes to all proofs and stopped their ears to all arguments as to the merits of the movement and its ultimate influence on the destiny of the race. Christian Science has not escaped this ordeal. Its radical stand for the supremacy of spirit made it peculiarly susceptible to misconception in an age steeped and submerged in materialism, and aroused against it intense opposition. Gradually, however, at first; then more rapidly; and then with leaps and bounds, the cause gained headway, until now its adherents are numbered by the thousands and its organizations encircle the globe. Meantime, the battle between Christian Science and the materialistic thought has been waged unceasingly, and while the fierceness of the onslaughts of the opposition, has to a degree, abated, and the active opposition seems to be assuming milder forms, it has by no means ceased; nor is the popular thought, as yet, widely intelligent on this subject. There is still about a large amount of misconception and misunderstanding as to what Christian Science really is. As one of the means to meet this emergency and to remedy this condition, the Board of Lectureship of the Mother church, the First Church of Christ Scientists of Boston, Massachusetts, has been established. The members of this Board go here and there as they are called, in the attempt to dissipate this misconception by giving the public authoritative information as to what Christian Science is and what it is not. This mission is not to proselyte. They do not argue with nor labor with men to become Christian Scientists, but are content to truly state what Christian Science is and what it stands for and stop there, trusting to the power of truth to vindicate and enforce the message they bring.

We have with us a member of this Board of Lectureship, Mr. Hicknell Young C. S. B. of Chicago, Ill. who will speak to us on the subject.

And now I take great pleasure in presenting Mr. Young to this large and intelligent audience.

It is an encouraging fact that however early our views may differ upon this or that subject, there is always in our nature an impulse toward them all, one chord which responds to Christian Science, and that is the universal desire to prolong existence or, better still, to attain satisfaction and be sure of its continuity. Even the creatures beneath our feet want to live, and strive to do so, so that this instinct has come to be expressed in the axiom, "Self preservation is the first law of nature."

Seeking Knowledge

It will perhaps be admitted that this may mean more than appears on the surface. So far as it can be analyzed this instinct exists without any volition on the part of the creature to know. It is a blind, unreasoning instinct, and in the discussion of the profoundest thoughts of philosophy and religion it serves as a common meeting ground. It is this desire which responds to religious truth. It may be likened to the soil wherein the seed, being sown, finds nourishment and spring forth as ideas which were at once the scientific nature of Christianity and the sacred character of Science.

Such facts are not transcendental in the common application of that word. They are, however, not material, and for this reason systems of education founded largely or wholly upon material evidence find themselves at variance with Christian Science and naturally oppose it. This is not to be wondered at because even the basic idea of Christian Science education is revolutionary. In this, always, but spiritual facts are demonstrable and, therefore, in their true nature, scientific.

ation, based upon the sense of the naturalness of both good and evil. Accepting the evidence of the material senses as true, such systems are necessarily involved in insurmountable difficulties. The moment they endeavor to explain a first great cause they are contradictory. Allowing that the first cause of all things is human experience to the same source, they pollute their conception of that source and the whole resulting thought is darkened. Christian Science shows unmistakably that an infinite cause which all scientists and philosophers have tried to ignore, creed, acknowledge, must necessarily be perfect, for any imperfection in infinity would imply infinite imperfection which is an impossible proposition to either religion or science. The fact is that a first great cause is infinite Intelligence, and Intelligence has Intelligence could be the one infinite cause. It should not be here for any thinker to understand that infinite Intelligence is necessarily infinite Wisdom, and one must inevitably concede that infinite Wisdom is infinite energy to do everything in the right way, at all times, and on all experiments whatsoever. This thought of God which is the only correct one that is possible, does away with the old idea of primary mistakes which have to be subsequently corrected, and thereby dissipates the notion that God incurs blame for a whole lot of things in the universe which man must afterwards correct. Enlightenment, Not Belief

This also disposes of a good many other things; It gives us enlightenment instead of belief; it shows that all things exist, and that the Infinite Cause has provided for their perfection and maintains that perfection. It is not possible to even think of God as less than perfect, and if one follows out that thought, it is not possible to conceive of a creation as less than perfect; consequently the theory of fallen man is an incorrect one. The first chapter of Genesis, but in the later chapters in which human thought, trying to account for its material evidence, turns away from God and says, "God created man of dust," is a very old error. Man is infinitely credited with having created that which infinitely could not know—the finite. Now Christian Science comes to relieve human beings of these beliefs which have darkened their minds, and to give them a true understanding; it starts with the perfection of being as the right standard for thought and investigation, and it proves by unmistakable results that when people maintain the right thought, they gain the right results; they gain spiritually in an immeasurable degree; they gain immorally, as thousands of people testify, in an immeasurable degree; they gain immorally in the true basis of morality, in the gaining of a glorious conviction all this which they have never been able to attain through any other teaching that they have ever known. Why? Because instead of relying upon belief, one can have the truth of his own soul, which he can test his thought and his action.

The Bible says that there is such a thing as a Day of Judgment, and Christian Science says that there is such a thing as a Day of Judgment, but that it is altogether different from the Day of Judgment which we are told of in the Bible. We suppose that it is not a certain time in which all people will be brought before some great King in a distant place to be judged for what they have or have not done, but that the Day of Judgment is a "Day of Mind and Health" with "Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, tells us, "hourly and continually," and that it is right within one's own domain of thought. If this is so, it is thinking of his Day of Judgment, and can take every thought that comes to him to that throne every moment, and say, "Is that thought correct? Is it according to Principle?" Is it right? If it is, it is right. If it is wrong, he is to have power and action and operate universally, would it bless all mankind? There is his Day of Judgment; it is not a remote time, nor is it to be postponed to an uncertain future. We are to see things as they are, and to see these things he says also that he must gain this standard, and, in order to do this he must understand God; he must know what God is, and he must have no judge of Judgment, no power to judge, no Principle with which to discern and Compare: Between good and evil, Christianity Science shows us that we can gain this right way of thinking: That it is so natural and easy that every person spontaneously feels that it is just exactly the right thing to do, he only wants to know about it, and thus every person who has been a Christian says, "This makes me a better Christian" and every person who has not been a Christian says, "Now I know why I must be a Christian. I cannot delay since there is nothing else to be."

The meaning of "Divinity" can be better understood something like the meaning of the word "Infinity," when we remember that the first great Cause, the one God, must be immense and all-inclusive, and also that we are on a ladder of the eternally increasing of God, the divine, infinite Intelligence, which in "Christian Science" is still better explained through the use of the words "Divine Mind." If we would be Immense, that is, that we would be in the image of that one God who is eternal, Eternal life, then, is to be attained, not by going to some other place, nor by suffering some great disaster, but by understanding and imitating those who can reveal and illustrate eternity.

The Caucasian, the universe necessarily the life and power of it. If we would live we must awake more and more in the image of the God who is Life. Still very often retaining the superstitions which the world has called up, because of wrong education we have apt to think it an impossible requirement when we are admonished to be like God. The picture of some extraordinarily wonderful person, in the same sense that human beings are persons, is still to be called up, arising in the imagination, and we are apt to think, "How can I be so great and wonderful as that?" But here Christian Science comes to the rescue and shows that the naturalness of Truth is its availability. If we had not the power of suggestion, we could easily have discerned something which would have made the word "good" more clear to us. In "Science and Health" we read, "God is natural good." If we accept that statement we shall not find it so hard to make the effort to be like God, for, for only one thing is striving to be like good, striving to be the image of good, the very expression of good, and if in this connection we should have any doubt about his ability to discern good, he can ask himself whether his thought, if it ripened into action, would be the expression of good. The analysis of Christian Science is clearly shown that no experience is good for anybody unless it is also good for everybody, because it is infinite and all-pervading. Christian Science gives us these facts and corrects many of our old philosophical and ethical views, for neither philosophy nor ethics can do justice upon the idea of primary infinite perfection.

X. Hope in Old Systems

All systems of education accept the evidence of the senses as to man's being and destiny, and in so doing tend to perpetuate the destructive conditions of human experience. One of the most serious errors also coincide with such teaching for they inculcate the idea that when evil has finally overcome a human being and destroyed him, then he will be immortal. None of these systems hold out the hope that there is a way of escape from evidence of the destruction of evil and the triumph of the human being, but on the contrary all agree in accepting the evidence of the senses which indicate the destruction of man and the triumph of evil.

Whereas the Bible may be thought of as Christian Science from the standpoint of old education, it has the unquestionable advantage of being logical, and consistent. It shows unmistakably that a human being, however much of a sinner he may be, can be saved, and not destroyed, and that it is the proper business of both science and religion to heal him of his disease and to redeem him from his sins so unmistakably that both the healing and the redemption shall appear. One who

One who is a sinner needs equally to be healed as one who is not. It is to heal the one and redeem the other, if it be not a knowledge that from the standpoint of God there is nothing wrong with the universe nor with man, or from that standpoint mere physical perils are to be assuredly removed from the sick man. It turns his mawward from the constant thought of his diseases to the facts of his real being. In the same way the sickening sinners need to be brought to the hope of salvation, but to the immediate attainment of it, at least in some measure. It encourages and greatly helps either a sick man or a sinner to find out that sin and disease are not sustained by natural cause, and are not sustained by natural power or law.

Kingdom of Heaven Natural
 "The world has tried for centuries to theorize itself into happiness. How many have succeeded? Look down and up the centuries. See how many have attained; practically none. All have failed. Yet ambitious men have known given them happiness? Has all the wealth that mining industry and other means have enabled people to accumulate given those people happiness? Have they been able to attain happiness in any way that was actually permanent? Have they seen anything like the kingdom of heaven? They have not, because it is not to be attained in these ways; and still the Kingdom of Heaven is not a dream, it is not a wish. Everything that is true is natural; the only God there is a natural god, always at hand, willing to save, more than willing, always ready; the only thing that needs to happen is that he himself be got himself to understand, to be free, open, receptive, to let thought explain and define the nature of Deity, and by means of thought to find that he himself is being redeemed."

—first from superstition.

Sometimes it has been considered a dreadful thing that one should feel the presence of God and that someone can really think about these great questions: What is God? What is Law? Where is Heaven? How can I be atoned? We have been brought and presumed on, or felt, and not been able to understand it. So we are the unchristian to understand God; if we are to understand God, we must be to understand to know something of His law, and to rest in the assurance of His power and dominion, then we are christians, but not otherwise. We are told, by few people, comparatively speaking, maintaining human thought and experience, and divine ideas which are other than the human face, but they are not new, therefore not and unchristian.

For new, interesting and practical. The facts are what they are to us, and the Christian can once in a while use the facts, and never gives us anything else, and it shows us that the facts are all that any human being needs in order to be delivered from any kind of trouble, it makes no difference what that is; and it shows us that the Christian's "Christianity" consists in apprehending and making practical the divine facts which characterized both the thought and actions of Christ Jesus. It has generally been supposed there was something mysterious about the Redeemer, or that at any rate we were to be redeemed by some mysterious personality. Is this true? Jesus declared that that which was to redeem mankind always had existed and was available to mankind in any age if mankind would but understand it.

What then is the Christ that is to save us, if we are all to be saved through Him? Christ? He is that man that was with Jesus the Christ which enabled him to save others, enables the disciples to save others, from what? From something that God has inflicted them with? Man's sin? Man's iniquity? Man's carnal death? No, was to save them from that which God never gave them at all. That which God had taken from them—they did not need to be saved from—that which human ignorance allotted to the human race, that which the human race had committed against himself and gave well from.

thought through power, through ideas that reveal God's power, and from these things until those things shall be no more, and step by step weakening mure up the image of good, we shall find eventually that we are human but naturally divine; and that is the goal. Now it is to be done right where we are. It is no use to put it off. We cannot afford to postpone anything at all, because there is no time for that. Otherwise, it is something that we ought to enjoy at this instant; and it is true that it is appearing more and more through the demonstrations of Jesus, the man Jesus said to his disciples when he came forth, "I go to him that sent me forth, of those to whom they went accepted the word which was preached, than hell and good; otherwise 'Let your peace return unto you and shake the dust from your feet from your feet'; nevertheless the Kingdom of God has come nigh unto them."

"Nevertheless, whatever happens to any human being, the demonstration of Christian Science little by little is bringing the Kingdom of God here, because the Kingdom of God is not the kingdom of Mind, the kingdom of intelligent power, the kingdom of omnipotent Love, and that kingdom comes first, the one which begins even in some slight degree to awaken an interest in Christian Science, even though it be but an interest sufficient to read something, or hear something, or to consider whether it be true—all the Kingdom of God is manifesting unto them, and it will be manifesting to all, until the Kingdom of God, when it once comes, no man now knows how to go away.

Now, Christian Science has come to bring that Kingdom to us all, and to unite us on the basis of pure Christianity; to give not a theoretical, but a personal Saviour, and when One Christ is revealed, in which Jesus manifested, which constituted His Mind and power and all the incentive of his action and all the rule of his life, the same Christ which is Infinite Truth revealed in the ideas which even now you and I are contemplating, that Christ in himself are not human—but divine.

When St. John said 'God is love,' he only said something that is true, that always was true; the idea itself could not have originated in St. John; he discovered it, or rather saw it clearly that he set it forth in a simple expression which has never been equaled.

“God of love”: that is only one idea of what God is, but that idea is one with God; it has its origin in God, in infinity; it exists by the power and presence of God, and to the extent that you and I entertain it we know it, it is God with us and Christ within us. The other idea of Christ, When Truth comes to us more and more through the lens which reveal it, these ideas have power, natural power; they originated in that which is power; they are sustained by that which is power. Is it such a thing that the idea of Christ, in prophesying the coming of Jesus saw that when that clear discernment of God should appear among men, it would manifest itself as God, that would be “God with us,”—imagine the same ideas which constituted him, the same ideas, in our hearts or minds—and they do so to the extent—for they are now being born—are they not God with us? Are we not God because forsooth in all these ages we have been told things like this? That the only super-naturally believed or predicted things are true? Can we not see that the Infinite Mind is being revealed to men now in Christian Science?

Christian Science Explains
 Nobody has been asked to believe in Christian Science, and nobody ever will be asked to believe it, for Christian Science does not advocate a proselyting process, but explains divine Principle. I should no more think of urging a person to believe in Christian Science than I should think of asking him to believe in the multiplication table. Neither one nor the other is in the realm of belief. We are not giving Christian Science lectures for the purpose of asking people to believe in it; we are giving Christian Science lectures because we want to help mankind and we want to help mankind because we want to help ourselves, and have realized that the best way to help ourselves is to help others. No human being can be selfish and everlastingly immortal. For one to attain immortality, which is the natural heritage that God has provided for all, one must have to be unselfish. Jesus did not voice a more religious affirmation but a selfless necessity when he gave the rule, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The apostle said, "Dearly thyself and follow."

Christians generally, but not very generally, recognize the necessity of a Christian Science explanation and makes it not only possible but clear. It is generally supposed to mean loss, whereas it means achievement. It means recognition and manifestation of the divinity which God gives to man. In spiritual one is not thinking of himself, if he were there would be no selfhood. It is finding the truth of being, and in that, peace and power and perfect love are expressed as well as self-denial in the words, "I and my Father are one."

Self-abnegation enables one to do good and it is therefore a joyful occupation. It establishes liberty, which is the only way to good, and where there is nothing but slavery in evil. God alone is infinite. Evil is not only finite but destructive. "The glorious liberty of the children of God" is to be found in the only wisdom that gives God this kind of power, which is the only real power, is not limited in its results. It overcomes disease as well as sins, and yet God, who is this power, has seemed so distant and unnatural to us that when one is told that there is a power that can

He told that Christian Science heals disease through the power of God, and he is apt to doubt it, and perhaps even discredit the healing until it is proved to him, and then when the proof of the healing is offered, he is apt to believe that it is brought about in some other way.

God and Power One

It takes a great deal of instruction to convince the average human being that the word "God" does not mean something remote or inaccessible, which we can think certain of, but which we cannot see. We have to learn that God is everywhere.

power because God and power are one. They are God with us, and therefore power with us. We can think of God, and as a result of that fact we think of them a great deal too much. Nevertheless, so long as that is our tendency, it ought not to be difficult for us to recognize that the true thought of what God is may affect our bodies, since some kind of thought is doing something to our bodies all the time. We walk because of mind; and talk and think,
and wink our eyes, because of mind,
and do everything else we are doing because of mind, and we do absolutely nothing because of matter, for matter cannot think nor talk nor walk by itself when thought is ab-

Because the human body seems to have sensatolity it is supposed that there is some kind of an intelligence within it giving sensation, consequently many systems of divining only material phenomena and drawing conclusions only from such observations have located mind in the body, and the religious systems have followed suit. The intelligence, spirit, cannot be soul and spirit in the body; yet no kind of investigation has ever revealed any intelligence or spirit or soul in any human body. Actually the words "soul intelligence, spirit, cannot be" pluralized. They refer to infinity. They serve to express to us the full meaning of the word "God", and when we grasp their service in this connection, we realize that the intelligence is enough intelligence for everybody, and that an infinite Soul or Spirit, is enough for everybody and that it could not possibly be in any one body, and the human body is not the place to acquire the knowledge which as his intelligence begins to reflect the divine intelligence, and at the same time reflects the intelligence of spirit which is God, and hence of Thoroughly

To further understand the intricate relationship between the mind and the body, we should remember that it is impossible that there could be a mind in matter, that what is governing the human body ordinarily speaking, is not a mind inside of it but the great mind of God, which is entirely outside of the body. All the functions of the body are carried on because of that which is not confined to the human body but reflected in the human consciousness, which is the human mind. Thousands of us may entertain the same thought, but that thought were to originate in one's brain it would be confined to that person and could never become a thought, and the other person would be obliged to have a different one. We can see from this that even human experience shows the utter impossibility of confining the mind in blankness to either the brain or body. Yet so general is the belief that mind has its source in the brain cells that when the brain of the human being is injured the mind is injured, and the mind is believed to be greater than human belief or material systems interferences.

The human body never gets ill because of any inherent capacity to do so. To put it exactly as it is, the human body does not know enough to get sick. It is the mind that suffers. In Science and Health and in other works, Mrs. Eddy has most clearly set forth the fact that it is the human or mortal sense of things that is sick. In other words, you cannot be the sufferer, and she has enabled thousands of people through her books to prove that immaterial mind heals. The objection made to this is that if mind is the healer, you cannot have thought without a thinker and, therefore, this contention is based upon the supposition that a person is a thinker by means of a mind. Science and Health shows that Mind is infinite, cannot be contained, and therefore that a person is not a thinker. The divine Mind is the primary and only thinker, and it is through the will of Mind which Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health declares to be the fully Mind of man, then what we call our mind will be so purified and released from all materiality that the presence of good in healing the sick is as well as in saving the sinners.

Foundation of Evil
The fact that God did not and could not take part in any evil thing is a necessity in Christian Science. The fact that God did not and could not take part in any evil thing is not a metaphysical or a philosophical. Almost every system of philosophy and religion has striven to do that, and yet evil has come on. The Christian Science explanation of evil is the only one that explains the obvious fact that anything which is not a conceivable part of God's creation is not a conceivable part of God's creation. The Christian Science explanation of evil is the only one that explains the obvious fact that anything which is not a conceivable part of God's creation is not a conceivable part of God's creation. The Christian Science explanation of evil is the only one that explains the obvious fact that anything which is not a conceivable part of God's creation is not a conceivable part of God's creation.

The action of the Trains in human consciousness has not been explained by dual systems. Christian Science alone offers an explanation, and when this explanation is not found satisfactory in the because the mental nature of the mind is not explained by dual systems. Really all science is purely mental. We do not go to schools or colleges to acquire anything more than enough of ideas. In view of the experience of all educational institutions which deal wholly with ideas, it is not surprising that the Christian Science should have been found purely scientific, since it deals wholly with the purest ideas that can be entertained by a human being. This efficacy in healing disease is only justified because of a lack of better explanation on the part of general humanity.

Mr. Eddy's Discovery
If a human being uninstructed by Christian Science should hear of a wonderful machine to which he could entrust his soul and have it work for his behalf to remove his evil tendencies and any of his diseases, he could be lost in adulation at this extraordinary invention and he could exclaim "What a wonderful scientific discovery!" It goes without saying that no such machine has been discovered or will be, for the machine that discovers and removes disease should be regarded by ny mechanical means. There was something, however, discovered in the year 1866 by a lone New England woman whose thought was clear enough to perceive facts far more scientific than any which had been revealed through the evidence of the senses, and who was strong enough of purpose to set forth these thoughts in such a way that they have been discerned and accepted, which was of the greater importance to the human race than any other discovery that has ever been made. Christian Science as given to the world by Mary Baker Eddy is not so scientific because it is not material or material, and it has the advantage of treating the diseases considered incurable as a thing which is not material or mechanical thing could do.

One who really apprehends anything of Truth knows that it is mental and that being without beginning or end or any kind of measurement, it must be progressive in our experience. The application of it cannot be complete, because it is from the very nature of it that it is progressive. The perception of today is but the stepping-stone to the greater understanding of tomorrow. The thought which contains the healing process of Christian Science is not a scientific because of its progressive nature, on the contrary it is more scientific than account since it is more spontaneous and original. The divine power we apprehend is more and more, means are necessary to the very acme of originality. There is no limit to the possibilities of the enlightenment which the study and practice of Christian Science attains. The reason for this is that it is possible in the mental processes of Christian Science healing,

All essentially religious experiences belong to Christian Science, though we have no material rites, we have a baptism which is thus spoken of in Science and Health, page 241: "The baptism of Spirit, the baptism of the mind, the baptism of flesh, signifies that the pure heart sees God and are approaching spiritual life and its demonstration", and although we have no material life of communion, yet communion is the spiritual life. The religious experience of a Christian Scientist, for in its true meaning it is the recognition of the unity of God and man, and at the same time, some of the most constant and increasing proof of that unity Christian Science feeling rests upon no other basis than this. It does not consist of the transmission of thoughts. No Christian Science practitioner would think of transmitting thoughts. Christian Science teaches that there is one Mind, and that the theory that thoughts can be sent from one person to another is consequently false. The phenomena of the divine Mind are direct from the divine Mind.

The most that the Christian Science practitioner does for a patient is to reveal to him Omnipotence and omnipresence of the divine Mind, and the availability of that Mind in the thoughts which constitute a Christian Science prayer or treatment. While Christian Science is not a religion, it is a way of life, and it is worth while if it were what is ordinarily associated with that term, to be the true mentality which Jesus taught and practised. It is the Christ within. To suppose that Christianity is anything else is destined to make any one who has had proofs of this Science, for he knows that nothing but Omnipotence would be equal to the task of healing the thousands of people which have been healed in Christian Science.

Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, through the Light which was promised when Jesus said "He will send you the Comforter, even the spirit of truth, to abide within you forever." It is this knowledge of the impersonal, all-pervading Christ Truth which constitutes both the Science and the Christianity of Christian Science. If Mrs. Eddy had been a Scientist, she would have been a Scientist, hundreds of thousands of people could not say, as they now say, that they are grateful for Christian Science. "Oh, wonderful medicine, that I did for mankind," is to discern the method of Christian Science, by means of which any person can begin the transforming process of Science. It is the knowledge of the points at which one does exercise some degree of the true relationship of God and man, by recognizing the personal unity and availing oneself

We are apt to think of revelation as a flash of inspired upon man by God, but a more accurate understanding of the word shows that its meaning is best apprehended when the individuals are spiritualized, that Mary Baker Eddy was inspired by the Father of Spirits, and that the truth of Christian Science cannot be doubted, and yet that inspiration, that revelation, required first receptivity.

It was the readiness, this unselfish responsiveness to divine Mind which characterized her whole career and made her the leader of the most far-reaching religious and scientific movement that the world has known. It was the same readiness which has made of Christianity a science resulting in such untold benefits to mankind that thousands of people spontaneously reverence and love the name of the Discoverer and the name of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy.

underably exemplified in all of those instances where spiritual-mindedness characterized man. In Christ Jesus, it was his very nature, and he was the perfect type of the Christ Idea. St. John in Revelation says: "Behold I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he will be with me, and we will be one." It takes on the limits of human belief and the tendency to outline the infinite blessings of the infinite Mind. "It shows us that we are not to be limited by the limitations of such a limited way as the material sense require, and that Solomon, in praying for wisdom rather than for special things, did the very thing that we should do, and that we should have all property and success—Jesus gave the final rule when he said: But rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added."

A Good School.

A splendid reputation for thorough work and the production of successful graduates maintained for more than fifty years, and increased efficiency in the adoption of the newest and best methods for office training, have combined to keep the well known Detroit Business University, located in the New University Building at 65 West Grand River, right in the front rank as the leader of such schools in this state. This fine old school is just now enjoying greater prosperity than ever as a result of the present progressive management under the presidency of Mr. E. Leroy Shaw. Interested readers should secure a copy of its latest catalogue.—Adv.

No Better in World.

Considering the numerous destructive storms of the present season this immediate section has fared very well so far. Again, in the matter of precipitation, we have been signally blessed, having had an abundance of rain, when in so many localities there has been havoc wrought by drought. This leads one to conclude that Michigan is one of the best of states and that Charlevoix one of the best of counties.

RESTORING OF THE FERTILITY

Of Badly Exhausted Soils is Not a Simple Matter.

Nothing Better Than Soy Beans or Cow Peas For Early Summer Seeding.

Restoring of the fertility of light or badly exhausted soils is not a simple matter. The addition of plant food is not the only requirement, for the physical condition of the soil itself needs to be changed and put in such a state as to favor beneficial bacterial and chemical action as a means of making plant food available. To most soils of this character there is no cheaper or more efficient method of improvement than by the incorporation of vegetable matter.

The addition of organic matter is of benefit to soils in several ways. It improves the physical condition, making it possible to keep them in better tilth, improves the drainage, increases the waterholding capacity, aerates the soil and presents more favorable conditions for bacteria which elaborate plant food and put it in a form that may be used. Light, sandy soils and stiff clays are most benefited by the addition of organic matter, but practically all soils can be improved in this way.

Barren soil contains a large amount of organic matter and its application is a most excellent means of improving soil fertility; however, few farmers have enough to go very far in putting their soils in the condition they should be. It is necessary to depend largely upon green manure crops for this purpose. In choosing crops for plowing under it is well to select some leguminous crop, if possible, as these will, when well inoculated with nitrogen-fixing bacteria, be able to secure most of their nitrogen from the air and in the end build up the nitrogen content of the soil.

The following suggestions as to choice of crops and methods of culture may be of value. Whenever possible red clover should be seeded with small grain for turning under. Under certain conditions, at least, clover may be seeded with comparatively little risk and without extra expense in the preparation of the seed bed, and there is no crop that is more valuable for green manuring purposes.

For early spring seeding, field peas and oats, at the rate of 15 bushels each per acre may be used. The peas should be seeded rather deeply as early in the spring as possible, and the oats seeded about a week later. The success of this crop will depend largely upon the date of seeding. The crop may be plowed under as soon as the oats are heading and the field summer fallowed for wheat or rye, or under favorable moisture conditions the crop may be plowed under somewhat earlier for corn or other late planted crops.

For early summer seeding there is nothing better than soy beans or cow peas, which are both legumes. They should be planted from the 10th to the last of June, preferably in rows about 28 inches apart, and cultivated the same as field beans. About three pecks of seed are required per acre. Attention should be given to the inoculation with nitrogen-bacteria when growing these crops for the first time in the field. This may be done by applying soil from a field which has previously produced the same crop or by using the Nitro-Culture manufactured by the College for inoculating the seed. The crop should be plowed under about the time of the first frosts or as the leaves begin to turn yellow and fall off, or they may be plowed under during the latter part of August, to be followed by fall seeded grain. The best crop for seeding in late summer for green manuring is the hairy or winter vetch and rye. The vetch is a legume. The seeding may be done from the 10th to the 20th of August on a specially prepared seed bed or in a cultivated crop at the last cultivation. A half-bushel of vetch seed, per acre, should be used with three pecks of rye to hold the vetch up. Again, the inoculation is important, as this is a new crop in most sections of the state. The same means of securing inoculation as suggested above may be used. It is also well to re-seed the same field to vetch two or three years, as the inoculation is apt to become more thorough each year. When this is done the expense of seeding may be lessened by simply disking the ground to cover the seeds that have been sown.

If it is desired to follow the vetch and rye with a spring crop the plowing should be done before the rye has made too large a growth and becomes dry and woody. Another legume that may be used for plowing under is sweet clover. This may be seeded in early spring or in August, the latter time probably being preferable. The crop is especially suited to soils in a very low state of fertility. What is said above in regard to the inoculation and reseedling of the vetch will apply to this crop.

Crimson clover is also used some in southwestern Michigan as a green manuring crop. This should be seeded in the fore part of August, at the rate of 18-20 pounds per acre. Under favorable conditions it should make a good crop for turning under the following season. Many attempts to grow crimson clover in Michigan have resulted in winter killing, although many of these failures may have been due to late seeding. The crop does not, however, have an important place in this state as a green manuring crop as those mentioned above.

MORE TEACHERS THAN SCHOOLS

Says Commissioner J. H. Milford Regarding Charlevoix County.

Prospects Were Never So Bright For Successful School Year.

More teachers than schools give the prospect of the brightest year educationally in this history of Charlevoix county. This is the opinion of J. H. Milford, county school commissioner.

"More than 20 teachers, Charlevoix county people, will be unable to secure positions in this county this year," said Mr. Milford. "The surplus of teachers is accounted for in two ways: First, the county normal is graduating annually an increasing number of teachers; second, the teachers' examination last spring was exceptionally easy. Practically all of those who took this examination found no difficulty in making the required standing. They found the questions easy. The examination papers were prepared by the state departments, and reports from all over the state are to the same effect—that the candidates for teachers' licenses found the questions easy to answer. I have on file more than 100 applications from teachers outside of Charlevoix seeking positions with us."

"Schools in Charlevoix county will not open on the same date. They will vary from the first to the third Monday in September. The date of opening is left to each individual school board. Some of the schools have an eight months' term, others will run nine months. "The school being erected in Boyne City is the only new school building in the county."

"The county normal will open September 15, and the prospects are that it will have from 12 to 14 pupils. It had 12 last year. Jessie M. Himes, who has been at the head of the school for the past eight years, will be principal again this year."

"The prospect for a good year in the schools of this county were never so bright as at the present time. More school officers have consulted me this year than previously, in regard to getting teachers. I have been able to do more for them because of the large number of teachers available. This year enables us to shift teachers from schools where they found the work too heavy, to positions which they were more suited. We look for much better results during the coming school year."

ALFALFA GROWING IN MICHIGAN

Method Used by Joseph Gerber, of Freemont, Michigan.

LAND SHOULD BE LIMED

Also Well Drained and Plowed Deep in the Fall.

Use Best Seed Obtainable and Sow as Early in June as You Can—Inoculate Seeds.

Select a good piece of ground that is well drained, plow deeply in the fall, and in the spring fill up as good as you can, making a good seed bed. The land should be limed. If you can get ground limestone, use two or three tons per acre. Burned lime may be used, say one ton per acre. Agricultural lime is the easiest to apply and gives quicker results than the ground limestone.

After applying the limestone, harrow it in well and if the land is weedy, cultivate often until all weeds are destroyed. Sow the seed as early in June as you can. Use the best seed you can secure and try to get seed grown on dry land. Irrigated grown seeds does not do as well as that grown on dry land.

Sow 20 pounds alfalfa seed per acre, and 5 pounds medium clover seed per acre, making 25 bushels seed per acre. I find it pays to sow one-half of this way of the field and the other half the other way, as we get it on more evenly. It is also better to sow by hand with a broadcast seeder, as the drill puts it in too deep and in rows, while it is better to have it evenly distributed over the ground. After sowing, harrow to cover seed lightly, with a spiked, toothed harrow.

Many people ask why I put the medium clover with the alfalfa. I do this for several reasons: First, it comes up so thickly it helps to keep down the weeds. Second, the red clover is sure to grow and finally find it helps to shade the ground for the young alfalfa plants and makes a good thick stand to help shade the ground during the dry time we almost always get in July and August.

The first crop of alfalfa does not get very thick, but by having the clover with it we get a good crop of hay. The second crop is light, and the third crop a good heavy one, as the clover comes on for second crop by that time. The second year we have the same result, and the third year the clover is all gone and the alfalfa is strong enough to give a good crop alone. It does not take any longer to mow a good crop than it does a light one and takes no more time to rake it. We can all well afford to handle it, as we get about twice as much and the hay is almost as good mixed as the pure alfalfa would be.

If you have never raised alfalfa, it is best to inoculate the seed. This can be done by sending to the Agricultural College for the alfalfa culture, which costs 25 cents. This is enough for one bushel of seed. A still better way is to get some soil from an alfalfa field and sprinkle five hundred pounds over each acre of your field. This should be done on a cloudy day or in the evening. If done when the sun is hot it is liable to kill the bacteria. If put on in the evening and dragged over they will get deep enough in the ground by morning to protect themselves from the sun's rays. If you cannot get soil from an alfalfa field, and can find a sweet clover patch where you can get the soil, it is just as good, because the bacteria is the same as on alfalfa. Some people sow sweet clover to inoculate the soil, plowing it under when it has a good start, and then sow their alfalfa. This is a good plan when the soil is sandy and rather light. Sweet clover will grow where nothing else will. Sandy soil can be built up in that way so that alfalfa will grow. It does well, because the ground is inoculated and it has the sweet clover to feed upon until it gets a good root, when it will grow if the soil is not too poor and is not acid.

It is well to use lime on alfalfa fields where there is no time in the soil. Sandy land is usually deficient in lime. You can make no mistake even if you use lime on all soils.

Some sow alfalfa seed with their clover, say about one-fourth as much as of clover, and in this way get their land inoculated so that they can get alfalfa to grow when they seed it. Others sow some sweet clover seed with their alfalfa and get inoculated in that way. The sweet clover will die out in about two years if it is not allowed to go to seed, but the alfalfa will continue to grow as long as its roots stay in the ground, if not crowded out by June grass, which is the worst thing to keep out of alfalfa that we have to contend with in this state.

The first season after alfalfa is sown, if the weather is favorable, it will begin to bloom in about six weeks. As soon as blossoms are seen it is best to clip it and leave the clippings on the ground as they fertilize the soil and protect the roots.

Sometimes it is necessary to clip twice the first year, but do not clip too late. Leave a good stand to protect it through the winter. The proper time to cut it for hay is when it begins to blossom. Then examine the crown of the root and if it shows buds starting, cut at once, for if you leave it too long the young shoots will come up and will be clipped by the mower. In that case, the next crop is retarded as new ones have to start. We always cut down only as much as can be put into cock. If the weather is good we cut, ted it over once or twice until the grass is wilted, then rake and cock up as soon as we can.

We leave the alfalfa in the cock for three or four days, when, if dry, we put it into the barn. Although it may be a little soft, it will keep all right. The reason we put it up green is to retain the leaves, as they are the best part of the hay. If left until it is dry, the leaves break off and the best is lost. Do not get the alfalfa dry enough to draw in from the windrow, for if you do you will lose most of the leaves.

NEW GAME WARDEN BOAT

Will Be Under Charge of Cap. S. M.
Rose of This City.

Cruiser is Fifty Feet Long and Modern in Every Respect.

Michigan Patrol No. 4, the new gasoline cruiser which the game warden department of Michigan has just purchased, arrived in the city Saturday morning from Detroit, under charge of Capt. S. M. Rose.

The cruiser is fifty feet long, with ten and one-half foot beam. She is propelled by a six-cylinder one hundred horse power Niagara engine, and is capable of from 14 to 15 miles per hour. She has accommodations for eight people and her fittings are modern throughout. Electric lights from a storage plant supplied from a small motor, are placed at every convenient place on the boat, as well as a powerful searchlight. She is also supplied with a 14-foot yawl equipped with a three and one-half horse power motor.

The crew consists of S. M. Rose, captain, Roy Ripley, cook, Robert Darling, engineer, and C. N. Smith, deputy state game warden.

"She is an ideal boat for the work, and is a class by herself," declare those who will sail on her. She was stationed at the dock back of Baker's Inn for several days, where some minor changes have been made in her kitchen arrangement.

Warmer Weather in Sight.

Advocates of the open window habit and those sleeping in the open air arose in the chill of the early hours Saturday morning and reached for more bed clothing. The early morning temperature, however, did not last, and as soon as the sun appeared over the horizon the mercury began to rise. It was the first real chilly weather experienced here for many weeks, but the weather man got busy and has promised normal weather from now on.

MUST FILE NEW ARTICLES

Co-Partnerships Must Comply with Provisions of New Law.

Many Certificates Already Filed Do Not Meet Requirements of New Act.

All persons in Charlevoix county engaged in carrying on business under a co-partnership are required to file a certificate with County Clerk Lewis under the provisions of a new state law which went into effect August 14. The county clerk has sent out notices to all known co-partnerships apprising them to the provisions of the act and the necessity of complying with it before the expiration of 30 days.

The certificate of co-partnership shall be signed by each member of the firm and verified by the affidavit of one of the members setting forth the full name of each and every person composing the co-partnership, and the residence of each, the name and style of the firm, and the length of time for which it is to continue and the locality of the place of business.

These certificates are open at all times to the inspection of the public in the county clerk's office.

Any changes in the co-partnership made after the filing of the certificate will require the filing of an amended certificate.

County Clerk Lewis calls attention to the fact that many of the certificates already filed do not meet the requirements of the new act and new certificates must be presented.

Section six of the law fixing the penalty for failure to comply with the law, is as follows: As two or more persons, owning, carrying on or conducting or transacting business aforesaid, who shall fail to comply with the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term not exceeding 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court, and each day any person or persons shall violate any provision of this act shall be deemed a separate offense."

DEATH OF MRS. HIGMAN

Passed Away at Petoskey Hospital Friday Morning
August 22.

Mrs. N. J. Higman, aged 29 years, died Friday morning of abscess of the liver, at Petoskey hospital, where she had been taken a few days previous for an operation, which proved unsuccessful.

The deceased had been a resident of Charlevoix for the past five years, and had made a great many intimate friends, to whom the announcement of her sudden demise was a great shock.

Katherine Hopkinson was born at Dayton, Ohio, and at the time of her death was 29 years and 12 days old. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband and four small children, the oldest being but seven years of age.

Funeral services were held from the house on Upright Avenue, Sunday at 2:30 o'clock, and was conducted by Rev. H. Atchinson, burial at Brookside cemetery. Mrs. Higman was a member of the Rebeckas, also the Modern Maccabees of the World. The sorrowing family have the deepest sympathy of the entire community.

ROBERT MILLER BETTER

Report That He Had Died at Masonic Home
Not True.

The report published in several county papers last week that Robert A. Miller, one of the best known pioneers of Charlevoix county was dead is without foundation.

It originated from a telegram received last week that he was seriously ill at the Masonic Home at Alma, where he has been since last fall.

Later advices state that his condition is somewhat improved, but owing to his advanced age and feeble condition, the outcome is hard to state. It is hoped by his many friends that he will recover.

RECOVER BODY OF LAKE SUICIDE

Drowning Correct Theory of Man's Disappearance From Manitou.

Body Picked up by Lake Steamer and Sent to Owenport.

That the drowning theory was the correct solution to the mystery surrounding the disappearance of J. H. Whittaker, Davenport, Iowa, merchant, while he and his wife were on the steamer Manitou bound from Chicago to Wequeton, was provided by the receipt of a telegram by Mrs. Whittaker, last Wednesday night, stating the body had been picked up in Lake Michigan by a steamer and taken to Chicago.

Mr. Whittaker disappeared late Monday night, August 11. He had repeatedly attempted to leap into the lake, and a bellboy was sent to watch him. When the lad returned from a brief errand in another part of the boat, about midnight, his charge had vanished, and a rigid search of the boat failed to reveal his whereabouts. Naturally, the drowning theory was accepted, although it was not absolutely certain that Mr. Whittaker had made away with himself.

Mrs. Whittaker continued her journey and was the guest of the Richardson family at Wequeton, while she awaited results of the investigation that had been instituted, although she was sure her husband had leaped to his death in Lake Michigan, as his mind was affected, his age being past seventy years. As soon as she received the message Wednesday night, she left for home, as the telegram stated the body had been sent to Davenport.

This was another case where Lake Michigan gave up its dead nine days after a drowning, an old theory often cited.

Thrashing Machine Sets Fire to Barn of E. R.
Harris at Ellsworth.

Sparks from a thrashing machine set fire to E. R. Harris' barn, northeast of Ellsworth, Friday, and the building with its contents were burned to the ground.

The men were at dinner at the fire was discovered. While they were eating they heard someone yell fire, and upon hurrying to the barn, found the interior a mass of flames. Attempts were made to remove the thrashing machine, which was owned by Carlos Hinebauch, but in some manner the carrier became wedged in the scaffold, and it was totally destroyed, as was the barn and its contents.

Mr. Harris estimates his loss of the barn, hay, grain and implements at about $2,000, which was fully covered by insurance. Mr. Hinebauch carried no insurance on the separator and is a heavy loser.

CHANGE OF TIME

Steamer Missouri to Make Three Trips Each Hereafter.

Beginning with September 2, the Steamer Missouri will make three trips a week between this port and Chicago to accommodate the heavy traffic at the closing of the resort season.

On the trip south she will leave Charlevoix on Wednesdays at 10:00 a. m., Fridays at 10:00 a. m., and Mondays at 10:00 a. m.

Going north she will leave Chicago Tuesday at 10:00 a. m., Thursdays at 10:00 a. m., and Saturdays at 2:00 p. m., leaving Charlevoix on the Sunday trip north at 10:00 a. m.

People intending taking passage on her should remember that tickets on the Manitou are good on the Missouri.

ASH-LIVINGSTON

Assistant Cashier of Local Bank Married at Bellaire
by Rev. G. R. Millard.

The beautiful farm home of Chas. S. Smith was the scene of happiness and beauty on Sunday, Aug. 17. The occasion was the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Smith's grand-daughter, Marjorie. At four o'clock Rev. G. R. Millard, pastor of the First M. E. Church of Bellaire, in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends pronounced the words that united the lives and fortunes of two promising people, Archie Livingston of Mt. Pleasant, Michigan, and Miss Marjorie Ash, of Lansing.

Mr. Livingston is a graduate of Mt. Pleasant High School and of the Ferris Institute at Big Rapids and has since his graduation been employed in banks at Mt. Pleasant and Detroit and is now connected with the bank at Charlevoix.

Marjorie is the daughter of Estel and G. D. Ash and a young lady of rare accomplishments. She is a graduate of the Lansing High School and of the Mt. Pleasant Normal and possesses much musical ability and is an artist of considerable merit.

At the close of the impressive service tables were spread upon the lawn, which was fascinatingly decorated with golden rods and ferns, and eighty people feasted upon the bountifulness of grandfather and mother Smith and wished the young people in whose honor they had assembled, lives of happiness and usefulness and only sufficient sorrow to cause proper appreciation of the blessings possessed.

Many useful and valuable presents were given Mr. and Mrs. Livingston.

Mr. and Mrs. Livingston left immediately for Charlevoix where they have a home in readiness and where they will be happy to welcome friends.—Bellaire Independent.

Mr. Livingston is assistant cashier at the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, and will be at home to their friends on or after September 1, at 303 State Street.

Ford Automobile.

Petoskey has a bold automobile thief. A new 1913 Ford touring car was stolen last Thursday morning from the Northern Auto Company.

As near as can be learned, the thief broke into the garage, went into the cellar and daringly placed the machine on the elevator, running it to the top floor, coolly opened the large doors from the inside and made his flight.

This must have happened about two o'clock Thursday morning, as the garage is not closed till late and is opened early in the morning.

The car is brand new, having never been used. Its number is 306,353, and it had United States tires. No license number had been secured for it. A reward of $500 is offered for its recovery.

It is a peculiar coincidence that a Ford car was stolen in a similar manner from a garage at Grand Rapids Friday morning.

Up to the Judge.

Under the new law which went into effect August 15, the judge of probate is given authority, under certain conditions when the estate is less than five hundred dollars property, to appoint an administrator, assign the residue and close the estate without notice to heirs and without notice by publication. This new act will allow small estates to be administered and closed up without delay and without cost to the beneficiaries.

Broke All Records.

The Manitou Thursday and Saturday from Chicago, broke all records for large crowds of people coming to northern Michigan resorts. Many left the boat at this port while others went through to Harbor Springs and Wequeton.

DRANK QUANTITY OF PARIS GREEN

Mrs. John Montroy of East Jordan Takes Her Own Life.

REMORSE CAUSE OF ACT

Had Made Confession of Unfaithfulness to Her Husband.

Wandered About Forty Rods from House After Taking Poison and Died in Terrible Agony.

After brooding over a confession to her husband that she had for some time been intimate with one of her neighbors, Mrs. John Montroy, who lives two miles northeast of East Jordan, swallowed a quantity of paris green and wandered about forty rods from the house, where she was found dead two days later.

For some time her husband had been suspicious of her actions, and Thursday made accusations which she admitted were true. The matter was thoroughly talked over and Montroy told her he would forgive her for the offense if she would promise in the future to be a faithful wife, and this was the agreement reached between the two.

Friday morning Montroy left for work, about a half mile from the home. At noon Mrs. Montroy took his dinner to him, stating at the time she intended to visit a family by the name of St. Charles during the afternoon, and help them take care of a crew of men engaged in threshing there.

About 4:30 in the afternoon, Montroy, having completed his work, returned to the house. He made inquiries regarding his wife, and learned she had returned to the house after delivering his dinner, but had not been seen since. He called at the St. Charles home and was told she had not been there. Becoming alarmed he at once began to search the neighborhood, but could find no trace of Mrs. Montroy.

He notified the neighbors, who at once began thorough search of the district around the home, but no trace of the missing woman could be found.

The search was continued day and night until Sunday forenoon, when Mrs. Montroy was found lying face downward on the ground on a side hill about 10 rods from her home. She had been dead for over 48 hours when the body was discovered.

Coroner A. M. Wilkinson was notified and reached the scene of the horrible affair shortly after noon Sunday. Upon examining the body to determine the cause of death, it was found that she had had drunks quantity of paris green, and had died in terrible agony. Further investigation showed that she had gone to a cupboard in the kitchen and taken a pint jar containing paris green from the shelf in which she had poured enough water to enable her to drink the contents. The small amount left in the jar gave evidence that she had drunk all she could swallow, and then wandered away from the house to the spot where her body was found.

Mrs. Montroy was about 30 years of age, and the mother of several children. For some time she had been doing housework among the neighbors, and it was while she was working at one of the places that she met the head who betrayed her and upon whose shoulders lies the blame for her unfaithfulness and death. Constant brooding over her short-comings was more than she could stand. The thoughts of facing her husband after day proved to much for her and death was the only method she could free herself, and was the cause of the rash act.

TO APPROVE PLANS

The Department of Public Instruction Will Aid School Districts.

Failure of architects to observe the universally accepted principles of scientific schoolhouse construction is resulting in the erection of schoolhouses in Michigan which are not proper buildings for school purposes. The department of public instruction invites every school board in the state which is planning to erect a new building to submit the plans for approval and suggestion. Such plans will receive the attention of persons who understand the correct principles of light, ventilation and arrangement. There will be no charge for such service.

It costs no more to build scientifically and means a great deal in the health and efficiency of the children who attend the school. It is as vitally essential that a country schoolhouse shall be properly planned as a city structure. More than ninety per cent of the rural buildings, even including the great majority of those recently built, are not correctly lighted, properly planned or made attractive. The errors of older buildings are simply duplicated. This is also largely true of many modern city and village schoolhouses.

IS UP TO BOARDS

Officers Can Make Schoolrooms Sanitary if They Desire.

Whether or not school children at this county will spend the next school year under conditions which are sanitary, healthful and conducive to comfort, depends entirely upon the school boards. Under the present law, the board has complete authority to make any improvements it sees fit and purchase any school equipment which is desirable, as the board votes the taxes. The people at the annual or at special meetings vote money for but three things, new school buildings and additions, sites and high school tuition in excess of $20 per year for each pupil.

Rural school boards can make their school buildings as sanitary, as comfortable and as attractive as city schoolrooms. The buildings can be thoroughly warmed and ventilated by practical systems costing from $65 to $125. Disease-spreading water pipes and common cups can be replaced by a sanitary drinking fountain with a bubbling water attachment at a cost of $13.50 to $20. Adjustable seats and desks which can be fitted to each individual pupil cost a district from $30 to $100, depending on the size of the school. Paper towels will safeguard children from roller towel dangers. There is but one way to light a schoolroom scientifically and that is to have the windows entirely on the left side. A building could be remodeled in this respect for from $15 to $75. Even the outside out-houses, so often unclean, disease breeding and immoral in their effect, can be replaced by practical indoor chemical closets which cost from $20 to $40. All of these improvements can be made by the school board without any action of the electors of the district.

CUT THE WEEDS

Should Not be Allowed to Grow on Public Streets of Charlevoix.

There is nothing gained and much lost in allowing weeds to grow and go to seed within the limits of a city or township, and yet there are cases right here in Charlevoix where the weeds are allowed to grow with the greatest freedom. There is a state law in regard to noxious weeds, but like many other laws and ordinances, might just as well be off the statute books, as it is enforced in but few places.

Weeds decrease the value of property and give the community in which they grow a bad reputation. Their presence gives any town or city an appearance of untidiness that is a drawback to the community and discredits the property owners who are so inconsiderate as to let them grow. Municipal pride is what makes cities grow and fill a useful place in the economy of the world. The city that presents a well kept appearance is a good place in which to live. Civic pride is a valuable asset that should be reckoned with in enumerating the resources of a town. This pride is best exemplified in the manner in which people keep up their property and keep down the weeds during the summer season.

Can Charlevoix afford to have her side streets and alleys covered with a rank growth of weeds. By all means cut them, and urge the city officials to see that the streets are rid of them at once before they go to seed.

CIDER MAKING IN DRY TERRITORY

Manufacture Not a Violation of Local Option Laws.

Other Opinions Handed Down by Attorney General—Fruit Shipments.

Cider makers in Charlevoix county have been considerably worried over the reported prohibition of the manufacture of cider in dry counties under the new state law which went into effect August 15. Many appeals were made to Attorney General Fellows asking for an opinion relative to the statute and he has decided that cider making in the local option territory is not illegal. Other opinions presented by the attorney general are briefly as follows:

Where a firm makes shipments of fruits, all the parties interested in the shipments should have their names stamped in plain letters on the baskets or packages the fruit is shipped in.

A township treasurer elected in a certain county failed to qualify and the present incumbent has held the office for two terms, the limit under the law, the attorney general holds that the township board can appoint to fill the vacancy which exists under the law.

Civil war veterans who own property exempt from taxes are liable for improvements in front of the property, such as sidewalks.

Ministers of the gospel will not violate any medical law in Michigan where they minister to the sick through prayer, even by laying hands on the patient, the attorney general holding that such action is not considered a material remedy.

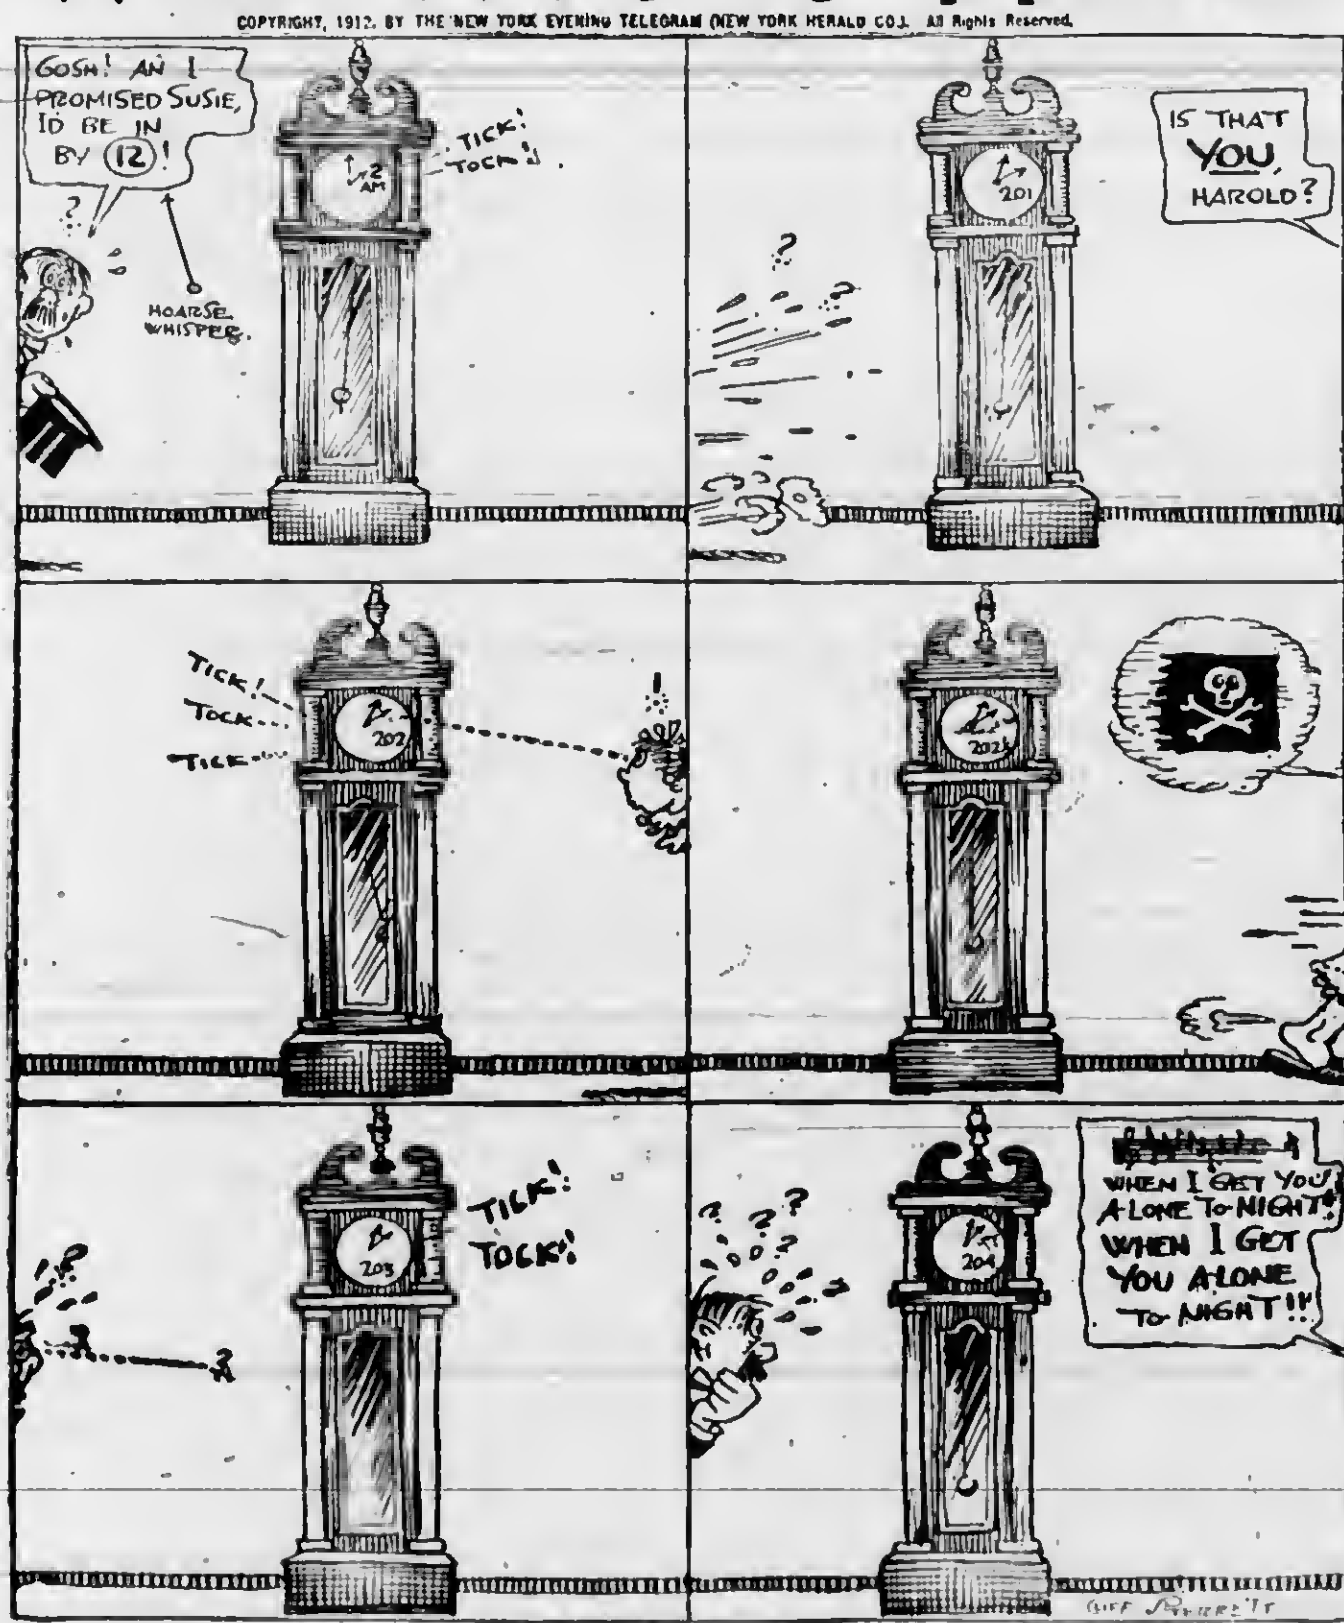

When a notary public changes his or her home residence from one county to another, the attorney general holds that he or she must procure another commission in order to carry out the duties of such office, as the removal constitutes a voluntary surrender of the commission.

Where Northern Lights
Come Down o' Nights

THE mission house at Toglak stands forlornly on a wind swept Alaskan spit, while huddled around it a swarm of dirt covered Indians grovel in an ecstasy of abasement.

Many natives crawled out of these and stared across the bay as down a gully came an arctic caravan, men and dogs, black against the deadly whiteness. Ahead swung the guide, straddling awkwardly on his five foot webbs, while the striding pack trotted at his heels. Sir George, the driver, urged them with strong words, tidings of the northland, and his long whip lilt sharply at their legs.

His companion, clinging to the sled, stumbled now and then, while his face, splintered from the snap of the frost, was smothered in a muller. Sometimes he fell, plunging into the snow, rising painfully and groaning with the misery of "snow blindness."

"Most there now, Cap. Keep up your grit."

"In all right," answered the af-flicted man wearily. "Don't mind me." George, too, had suffered from the sheen of the unbroken whiteness, and while his eyes had not wholly closed, he saw but dimly. His cheeks were greasy smeared and blackened with charred wood to break the snow glare, but through his mask showed signs of suffering, while his bloodshot eyes dripped scalding tears and throbbled distressfully. For days he had not dared to lose sight of the guide. Once he had caught him smoking the does away, and he feared he had killed the man for a time. Now Jaska becked trail ahead, his sullen, swollen features hateful in their injury.

Down the steep bank they slid, across the lumpy up sea ice at the river mouth and into the village.

At the greeting of their guide to his tribesmen George started. Twelve years of coast life had taught him the dialect from Point Barrow south, and he glanced at Captain to find whether he, too, had heard the message. As Jaska handed a tallman to the chief he strode to him and snatched it.

"Oh! It's Father Orloff, is it? D—him!" He gazed at the token, a white spruce chip with strange marks and carvings.

"What does it mean, George?" said the blind man.

"It's a long story, Charlie, and black. You should have known it before we started. I'm a marked man in this coast country. It's Orloff's work, the reugade! 'Father,' he calls himself—father to these devils he rules and robs for himself in the name of the church. His hate is bitter, and he'd have my life if these watery livered curs didn't dread the sound of my voice. God help him when we meet!"

He shook his hairy elaws at the hostile circle, then cried to the chief in the native tongue:

"Oh, Shaman! We come bleeding and hungry. Hunger grips us, and our bones are stiff with frost. The light is gone from my brother's eyes, and we are sick. Open you the door to the mission house that the 'Mooks' may rest and grow strong."

The Indians clustered before the portal, with its rude cross above, and stared malignantly while the chief spoke. At the name of his enemy the unsightly eyes of George gleamed, and he growled contemptuously, advancing among them. They scattered at the manner of his coming, and he struck the padlocked door till it rattled stiffly. Then, spying the cross overhead, he lifted up and gripped the wood. It came away ripping, and, with walls of rage and horror at the sacrifice, they closed about him.

"Here, Cap! Bust her in quick!" He dragged Captain before the entrance, thrusting the weapon upon him, then ran ferociously among the people. He snatched them to him, cuffing like a bear and trampling them into the snow. Those who came into the reach of his knotty arms crumpled up and twisted under his feet. He whirled into the group, roaring hoarsely, his angry, greasy blackened face hideous with rage. The aborigine is not a fighting machine. For him the side step and counter have no being. They melted ahead of his blazing wrath, and he whisked them, feeling by their garments, so that they felt the stamp of his moccasined heels.

Captain dragged the team within, and George, following, blocked the shattered door.

"We're safe as long as we stay in the church," said he.

"Right of sanctuary, eh? Does it occur to you how we're going to get out?"

"Never mind. We'll get out somehow," said he, and that night as Charlie Captain, late university man and engineer, lay with eyes swathed in steaming cloths the whaler spoke operosely and with the litterness of great wrong.

"It happened when we rocked the bars of Forty Mile before ever a Cheehako had crossed the creek. I went over to the headwaters of the Taana. Into the big valley I went and got lost in the flats. 'Tis a wild country, rimmed by high mountains, full of algerheads and tundras, with the river winding clean back to the source of the Copper. I run out of grub. We always did them days and built a raft to float down to the Yukoa. A race with starvation, and a dead heat it near proved, too, though I had a shade the best of it. I drifted out into the main river, raving mad, my 'Minkuks' eat off and my moose hide gun cover inside of me.

"A girl spied me from the village, and 'twas her brought me ashore in her birch bark and tended me in her wickip till reason came and the blood ran through me again.

"I mind seeing a white man stand around at times and hearing him beg for to leave me to the old squaws. She didn't, though. She gave me bits of moose meat and berries and dried salmon, and when I came to one day I saw she was little and brown and pleading, and her clothes all covered with beads. Her eyes were big and sad, Cap, and dimples poked into her cheeks when she laughed.

He Whirled Into the Group, Roaring Hoarsely.

"'Twas then that Orloff takes a hand—the white man. A priest he called himself, breed, Russian. May be he was, but a blacker hearted never wronged a child. He wanted the girl, Meta, and so did I. When I asked her old man for her he said she was promised to the Russian. I laughed at him, and a chief hates to be mocked. You know what sway the church has over these Indians. Well, Orloff is a strong man. He held 'em like a rock. He worked on 'em till one day the tribesmen came to me in a body and said, 'Go!'

"Give me the girl and I will," says I.

"Orloff sneered. 'She was mine for a month before ye came,' says he, with the fiend showing back of his eyes. 'Do ye want her now?'

"For a minute I believed him. I struck once to kill, and he went down. They closed on me as fast as I shook 'em off. 'Twas a beautiful sight for a ruction on the high banks over the river, but I was like water from the sickness. I fought to get at their priest where he lay to stamp out his grinning face before they downed me, but I was beat back to the bluff, and I battled with my heels over the edge. I broke a pole from the fish rack, and a good many went down. Then I heard Meta calling softly from below.

"'Jump,' she said. 'Big one, jump!'

"She had hoosed a canoe at the landing and now held it in the boiling current underneath, paddling desperately.

"As they ran out of the tents with their rifles I leaped.

"A long drop and cold water, but I hit feet first. When I rose the little girl was alongside.

"It's a ticklish thing to crawl over the stern of a canoe in the spatter of slush, with the roar of muzzle loaders above. It's shaking to the nerves, but the maid never flinched, not even when a bullet split the gunnel. She ripped a piece of her dress and plugged a hole under the water line while I paddled out of range.

"The next winter at Holy Cross she ran to me shaking one day.

"'He is here! He is here! Oh, Big man, I am afraid!'

"'Who is here?' says I.

"'He is here—Father Orloff! And her eyes were round and scared so that I took her up and kissed her while she clung to me. She was such a little girl.

"'He spoke to me at the water hole—'I have come for you.' 'Where is George?' he said.

"'I went out of the cabin down to the mission and into the house of Father Baruum. He was there.

"'Orloff? What do ye want?' I says. 'Father Baruum speaks up. He's known for a good man the length of the river. 'George,' says he, 'Father Orloff tells me you stole the girl Meta from her tribe. 'Tis a shameful thing for a white to take a red girl for his wife, but it's a crime to live as you do.'

"'What?' says I.

"'We can't sell you provisions nor allow you to stay in the village.'

"'Orloff grins. 'You must go on,' he says, 'or give up!'

"'No! I'll do neither.' And I shows the paper from the missionary at Nulato stating that we were married. 'She's my wife,' says I, 'and too-good for me. She's left her people and her gods, and I'll care for her.' I saw how it hurt Orloff, and I laid my hand on his shoulder close to the neck. 'I distrust ye, and sure as Fate ye'll die the shocking death if ever harm comes to the little one.'

"That was the winter of the famine, though every winter was 'the same then, and I went to Anvik for grub—took all the strong men and dogs in the village. I was afraid when I left, too, for 'twas the time I should have been with her, but there was no one else to go.

"'When you come back,' she said, 'there will be another—'a little boy—and he will grow mighty and strong like his father.' She hung her arms around me, Cap, and I left with her kisses warm on my lips.

"It was a terrible trip—the river wet with overflows and the cut-offs drifted deep, so I drove back into Holy Cross a week late, with bleeding dogs and frozen Indians straining at the sled ropes.

"I heard the wall of the old woman before I came to the cabin, and when Meta had solved the story out in 'weakness I went back into the da and down to the mission. I remember how the northern lights flared over the hills above and the little spruces on the summit looked to me like headstones, black against the moon, and I laughed when I saw the snow red in the night glare, for it meant blood and death.

"It was as lusty a babe as ever craved, but Orloff had come to the sled and sent her squaws away. Baptism and such things he said he'd do. The little fellow died that night.

"They say the mission door was locked and barred, but I pushed through it like paper and came into Father Baruum's house, where they sat. Fifty below is bad for the naked flesh. I broke in, bareheaded, mittenless, and I'd froze some on the way down. He saw murder in my eyes and tried to run, but I got him as he went out of the room. He tore his throat loose from my stiffened fingers and went into the church, but I beat down the door with my naked fists, mocking at his prayers inside, and may I never be closer to death than Orloff was that night.

"Then a squaw tugged at my parka. 'She is dying, August,' she said, and I ran back up the hill with the cold biting at my heart.

"There was no death that night in Holy Cross, though God knows one naked soul was due to walk out on to the snow. At daylight, when I came back for him, he had fled down the river with the fastest dogs, and to this day I've never seen his face, though 'tis often I've felt his hair.

"He's grown into the strongest missionary on the coast, and he never lets a chance go by to harry me or the girl.

"D'ye mind the time 'Skagway' Benet died? We was partners up Norton sound way when he was killed. They thought he suicided, but I know. I found a cariboo belt in the brush near camp—the kind they make on the Kuskokwim. Father Orloff's country. His men took the wrong one, that's all.

"I'm sorry I didn't tell ye this, Cap, before we started, for now we're into the south country, where he owns the natives. He knows we've come, as the blood token of the guide showed. He wants my life, and there's great trouble coming up. I'm hoping ye'll soon get your sight, for by now there's a runner twenty miles into the hills with news that we're blind in the church at Toglak. Three days he'll be going, and on the fifth ye'll hear the jangle of Russian dog bells. He'll kill the fastest team in Nushagak in the coming, and God help us if we're here."

George scraped a bit of frost lace from the lone window pane. Dark figures moved over the snow, circling the chapel, and he knew that each was armed. Only their reverence for the church held them from doing the task set by Orloff, and he sighed as he changed the bandages on his suffering mate.

They awoke the next morning to the moan of wind and the sift of snow clouds past their walls. Staring through his peephole, George distinguished only a seethe of whirling flakes that grayed the view, blotting even the neighboring huts, and when the early evening brought a rising note in the storm the trouble lifted from his face.

"A three day blizzard," he rejoiced, "and the strongest team on the coast can't wallow through it under a week. These on shore gales is leants."

For three days the wind tore from off the set into the open light at whose head by Toglak, and its violence wrecked the armor of shore ice in the bay till it heat and roared against the spit, a thrashing maelstrom of shattered bergs. The waters stirred into the inlet, driven by the lash of the storm, till they overflowed the river bed behind the village, snoring and heaving it into ragged, dangerous confusion.

On the third day, with arctic vagary, the wind gasped reluctantly and scurried over the range. In its wake the surging ocean churned loudly, and the backwater behind the town, held by the jam of freezing slush ice at the river mouth, was skinned by a thin ice paper, pierced here and there by the up ended piles from beneath. This held the night's snow, so that morning showed the village girl on three slides by a stream soft carpeted and safe to the eye, but falling beneath the feet of a child.

"Your eyes are coming along mighty slow," worried George. "I'm hoping his reverence is up to his gills in drifts back yonder. We must leave blin's sled trail for a souvenir."

"How can we with the place guard-"

"Hitch the dogs and run for it by night. He'll burn us out when he comes. Fine targets we'd make on the snow by the light of a burning shack! If ye can see to shoot we'll go tonight. Hello! What's that?"

Outside came the howl of maiments and the cry of men. Leaping to the window, George rubbed it free and stared into the sunshine.

"Too late, too late!" he said. "Here he comes! It's time I killed him!" He spoke gratingly, with the dull anger of years.

On the bright surface of the opposite hillside a sled bearing a muffled figure appeared silhouetted against the glister of the crust. Its team, maddened by the village scent, poured down the incline toward the river bank, and the guide swung on to the runners behind, while the voice of the people rose to their priest. In a whirl of soft snow they drove down on to the treachery of the ice. The screams of the natives frenzied the pack, and they rioted out on to the bending sheet, while the long sledge, borne by its momentum, shot forward on the splintering of the ice sounded over the lamentations. It socked, sagged and disappeared in a surge of congealing waters. The wheel dogs were dragged into the opening and their mates ahead jerked backward on to them. In a fighting tangle all settled into the swirl.

Orloff leaped from the sinking sled hat, hindered by his fur swaddling, crashed through and lunged heavily to his struggles to mount the edge of Charlevoix, Michigan.

August 23, 1913.

Dear Courier:—

Your clipping from the Petoskey Record printed in the issue of August 20th, last column, first page, was the best argument in favor of "No Saloons" for Charlevoix I have seen in your columns for many months, providing one reads between the lines. To saddle the blame for Petoskey's "poorer resort business this year than last" on the "Poor" Marquette and G. R. & L. railroad rates is a desperate effort to avoid the issue. Petoskey's chief official made the statement, in my hearing, this week that "Petoskey has got too much booze" and then illustrated his statement by describing a bear riot which had occurred the night before on "one of the principle city corners, as a result of the aforesaid "Booze." He added that the statement made so often in dry towns and still used by some of our wet friends in Charlevoix that there is more liquor used in dry territory than in wet, can be very effectively answered by a look around Petoskey now, as compared with the "dry" regime.
I would suggest that the "Record" might look about and find other straws indicating the direction of this "ill wind" in Petoskey. A drowning which occurred in Pine Lake last Saturday night might not have happened had not the victim, a young man of thirty-four, and the father of six young children, been drinking at the bar in the "White Front Saloon" in Petoskey, an hour before he lost his balance which cost his life. Petoskey gained a few pennies in trade, but in doing so, touched fire to a man's brain, which was quenched in this tragic manner. No city, town or state is going to profit by this unholy traffic. Our residents do not care for the open saloon.

Charlevoix has no need to complain about the resort business, as this is, by far, the best year Charlevoix has ever had, as every hotel and boarding house in our city will testify. Our best hotels must build larger to accommodate their patronage, one of our largest hotels having turned away as many people as they are now accommodating. Post office and telegraph receipts, as well as crowded hotels and cottages are what Charlevoix has to boast. The beautiful sight greeting the visitors on our streets every day, in my part of our town, of neat, white aproned nurses and mothers with happy children is more attractive to us and to our resort friends than streets where children may not go for fear of coming in contact with drunken men or passing saloons with their attendant vice and vulgarity. A moment's reflection by any fair minded citizen on these cold facts will surely deter him from yielding to the solicitation of any one seeking names for a petition to make possible the return to the pit-table position Petoskey now finds herself in.
Sincerely yours,
"One who is interested in Char-levoix's prosperity."

Around Lake Michigan.

The "Around Lake Michigan Contest," the biggest reliability contest and greatest tour of the year, held under the auspices of the Chicago Motor Club, will take place week of September 8-13. The start will be made from Chicago and by night Green Bay will be reached.
From there the trip will be continued to Iron Mountain, Marquette, Escanaba, Newberry, St. Ignace, Petoskey, arriving at Charlevoix on the fifth day, and from here to Chicago.

It is but another case of a beast who, by soft words and flattery turns the head of the wife and mother and does not stop until he accomplishes her ruin. In this case we are informed that the man who was the cause of Mrs. Montroy's downfall and death, is a human vulture who has a record of breaking up several families in the past few years.

The body was badly decomposed when found. The evidence of suicide was so plainly indicated, that no inquest was held, and the body was turned over to the undertaker and prepared for burial.

Tax Comes in Slow.

City Treasurer John Cook reports that the summer tax is coming in slowly. So far he has collected only about $7,000 of the $22,811.45 on the roll. Tax payers have until September 15 to pay. After that date a four per cent penalty is added.

HOW TO USE A KITCHEN CALENDAR.

"I can't keep house without it," said a careful housekeeper when a friend noticed the large calendar, like those used in business offices, which hung on her kitchen wall. It was a white calendar, with black figures an inch and a half large, which her husband brought from his office.
On the squares of the dates she marked each day the ice delivery, whether a ten or fifteen cent piece, the number of bottles of milk and dates for guests or special dinners. In which the kitchen was interested. Certain evenings that she wished the girl to stay in, etc., were also marked on the calendar, which thus served as an accurate reminder to both mistress and maid.

How to Use Fruit Baskets.

These receptacles may be painted and filled with morning glories or any trailing vine and when placed in the yard will last through the season and be very ornamental. Take three fruit baskets and plant yellow myrtle around the edges and fill the centers with portulaca. They will make a pretty back yard ornament. Cheese boxes, painted green and filled with pansies, nasturtiums, portulaca or white alyssum, are neat to place on side porches. Tiny hanging baskets may be made of strawberry boxes, painted, and filled with the small variety of Japanese ferns.

How to Remove Perspiration Stain.
Lay the stain over blotting paper and sponge with equal parts of alcohol and ether mixed. Rub dry, then touch lightly with household ammonia. If it leaves a blur rub well with powdered
French chalk on the wrong side.

A CONFESSION

Story of a Reckless Young Man

By F. A. MITCHEL

I was born all wrong for what was expected of me. My father founded a business which grew to be very profitable and produced a large fortune. I being my father's only son—indeed, his only child—his chief rejoicing at my birth was that one day I would succeed him in his business, for, though he had not then reaped much benefit from it, he saw great possibilities ahead.
But he was doomed to be disappointed in me. As a boy I developed a taste for roving, for danger, for anything, in-short, incompatible with a business life.

At nineteen I was in jail under sentence of death for participation in a Central American revolution. My father came and bought my life with money. He took me home, telling me that I was a fool, but he hoped I would grow wiser with age. But there is an old adage, "Bray a fool in a mortar and he is still a fool." One year later, while climbing a mountain in Switzerland, I was carried down into the valley by an avalanche and was the only one of the party to come out alive.

One would suppose that this second escape would have cured me of incurring great risks. But, no. The day I came of age I fought a duel with a French army officer in Algiers and was wounded high into death.

At this time my grandfather on my father's side was living, a hale and beardy man of seventy-five. My father, being taken suddenly ill and not having time before his death to lay any plan for his estate, left all he possessed to his father. What instructions went with the will I did not know, but later my grandfather informed me that if I settled down before his death he was to leave the property to me.

Unfortunately for me, my predisposition for getting myself killed was not sufficiently affected by this situation to induce me to go home and live an ordinary life. Finding myself in Rome when the Italians were sending troops

"I WAS TRANSFIXED WITH ASTONISHMENT." to north Africa to fight the Mohammedans, I enlisted in an infantry regiment and was shot down by an un Christian dog and lay in a hospital three months. When I recovered I went to Paris, where I received a letter announcing that my grandfather had died and had been married only a few hours before his death, leaving my estate to his wife.

Being still young, without common sense and by no means cured of my absurd predisposition, I was not very sorry that I should no longer be restrained from mounting dangers, especially since my new grandmother had been instructed by the will to send me a hundred dollars a month on which to live till I should get killed. The only inducement for dissatisfaction was the belief that some woman who had nursed the old gentleman had prevailed upon him to leave the property to her. This, I confess, made me feel a bit ugly. The widow wrote me that if I would come home and settle down she would double my allowance.

I was not minded either to settle down or to be beholden to the woman who had robbed me of my inheritance, and wrote her to that effect. I received no reply to my letter and from that time considered the matter dropped.
My fortune had passed into other hands than mine, and I considered it irre-trievably lost. But it was not long—I by this time having passed out of the unthinking age—before I began to realize that I had been the fool my father had called me. It was now too late to mend matters, but I was losing my taste for danger, and another taste which it had dominated began to show itself. This was a taste for art. I went to Florence, Italy, and became infatuated with the treasures in palat-ing and sculpture to be found there.

Tourists, especially Americans, occasionally came to my studio, and one of them, a very pretty girl, Miss Alice Beale, seemed not only pleased with my work, but with me. I had lived such a wild life that the fair sex had not had much chance for me, and although especially seemed altogether too formal for my bohemian tastes. If I had paid my attention to women it had usually been to some ordinary person of the country I happened to be in at the time.

Miss Beale, though, a perfectly modest girl, did not strive to conceal her preference for me. Moreover, she threw off enough of that conventionality which I disliked to make my enjoyment of her society easy. A man of my kind, once becoming interested in a woman of his own social sphere, becomes an easy prey. It was not long before Miss Beale had me heels over head in love with her.

I put it in this way because the young lady, as I have said, though modest and unassuming as our affair proceeded, gave me every encouragement, and there was good reason to believe that her fancy for me was not a matter of worldly interest, for, while she seemed to have all the money she needed to spend, I soon made her aware of the state of my own affairs, nor did it change her manner toward me one whit.

One evening we emerged from the Uffizi gallery together and walked slowly along the bank of the Arno.
The lamps that light the streets on either side of the river had just been lighted, and there is no more beautiful city scene in the world than the Arno banks at the twilight hour. Carried away by the surroundings, after confessing to my companion briefly how by my folly I had thrown away a fortune, I told her that I had now come to a realization of it since my loss deprived me of a hope of possessing her.

We had turned upon one of the bridges that span the river and were looking down upon the flowing waters.
She responded that there was still a hope that we might be happy together.
That hope depended upon my abandoning my nomadic life, returning to America and settling in some business or profession. I believed that it was too late for me to do this, but I consented to her terms.

"Possibly," I said, "I might find means of making that confounded grandmother of mine disgorge something of my estate."

She smiled at my optimism and advised me to look to the future rather than the past. Suits to recover property left by will out of the natural channel were expensive, dragged on from year to year and had a bad effect on the contestant.

It is evident from this that Miss Beale was just the woman I needed for a wife. She infused into me a practical common sense that no one had ever been able to force into me before. It was agreed that we should both return to America, where I was to make good my promises of reformation, and our future unless was conditional upon my carrying them out.

We sailed from Naples on a warm afternoon, when the sea breeze, tempering the heat, was delightful. Standing on deck, I looked upon the high ground back of the city, Vesuvius towering on the south, Ischia in the bay on the other flank. The water, the hue of which is ever changing, was a deep green. Filled with the beauty of the scene, I could not but repress a regret that I must give up lingering in this artistic country, as well as my artistic instincts. I felt that but one thing would hold me down to my promises—the possession of the girl I loved.

Miss Beale told me that her home was in New York, while mine was in Philadelphia. I desired on arrival to see her to her home, but she would not permit it. She advised me to go at once to Philadelphia and call upon my grandmother, who owned a controlling interest in the business my father had built up, with a view to obtaining a position there. I demurred to this, but Miss Beale insisted upon it, saying that if I were unable to satisfy my feelings in my pocket and avoid myself of the only chance open to me
I might as well give up the whole matter and return to my loving. This settled it, and I promised to do as she advised.

The evening after my arrival in Philadelphia I got myself in condition to call on my grandmother. I was in the house in which I had been born to solicit a position in the business my father had intended I should manage.
My love alone enabled me to swallow the pills I was the bell and, having been advised, sent up my card.
While I waited, I was mentally picturing the woman who would come down to receive me. I fancied her to be of middle age, a crafty looking woman, thin and bony, with piercing eyes. I hated her before I saw her.

"Presently I heard a footstep on the stairs and the rustle of skirts. When the descending figure reached the last step she was revealed to my view. I was transfixed with astonishment. I saw Alice Beale!

"What? What?" I began and stopped.

"Your grandmother," she said, smiling in every feature of her face.

"You! My—"

"Yes. The day your grandfather died, being too far gone to make a will, he married me with the understanding that if possible I was to become your wife. The plan had already been arranged. I promising to take care of your interests, provided you mended your ways and became a steady man. Since you would not come to me for regeneration I went to you under my maiden name. Now that I have got you where I can influence you for your good, we will do what seems best for you."

I married my grandfather's widow and from that time settled my affairs as I pleased, but always after conference with her—I did not return to Italy. I am now manager of the business my father established.

The impression seems to be general hereabouts that the law passed at the last session of the legislature providing for an angler's license goes in effect August 15th. This is incorrect as this law specifically states that its provisions are not to become operative until January 1, 1914. The hunter's license law, however, which provides for a license fee of $10 from non-residents of the state and aliens and $1 from citizens desiring to hunt outside of their home counties takes effect August 15th.

Choose a soft green or dull blue grass cloth and cut it into pieces double the size of the page you intend to make. The material is a yard wide, and a yard will make a six or even an eight page book if the pages are not large. Larger leaves, however, make a more attractive book. Fold each piece over and paste the two inside surfaces together, bringing the fold at the outer edge of the page and the cut edge at the binding side. If preferred the pages may be simply folded and not pasted, similarly to the old linen books, but pasting them together makes the book a little firmer.

When the pages are cut, pasted and evenly trimmed the pictures should be pasted in. Choose beautiful pictures, in soft colors blending with the background. Even a little child's eye can be trained to appreciate good pictures rather than the gaudy, high colored ones so often given them. Do not paste pictures in zigzag or many on a page. Indeed, one picture on each page well proportioned to the size of the leaf is best. Such a book given to a baby last Christmas was made up of a series of child pictures which had been cut from a magazine. The head and tail pieces were pasted in an attractive design on the cover, and the entire book was charming.

When the pages are finished bind them together at the left edge with raffia of a harmonizing shade drawn through three holes and tied in a bow.

How to Select Washboards. The washboard should be selected with an eye to its angles. If it be too much corrugated it will be found that the clothes will soon wear out. A wooden washboard is less harmful to the clothes than any other kind, but is unpleasant to use. The metal or glass covered boards are really the best for constant use and will do the materials little injury if they are not rubbed too hard.

A wringer will save the clothes, much wear and tear, but unfortunately most of the stationary tubs are so arranged as to make the adjustment of a wringer impossible.

There are several varieties of irons. The old fashioned flatirons with handles attached are the best to hold the heat, but are rather unwieldy, as they must be used with cloths to prevent burning the hands. The patent irons which have the detachable wooden handles are easier on the hands, but do not retain the heat as well. There are other irons especially used for fluting and frilling, but these are unnecessary in the ordinary household. Wax balls should be kept on hand to grease the irons.

Cohen-Lewenberg. Miss Tibbie Cohen of this city and Mr. A. C. Lewenberg of Caro, were united in marriage at high noon, Thursday, August 21, by Dr. Rabbi Hirschman of Detroit. Mrs. Lewenberg is well known in Charlevoix, having lived here for a number of years, while Mr. Lewenberg is a prominent merchant at Caro, Michigan.

Grange Column

Wilson Grange.

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday evening, August 23, 1913 with an attendance of 17 members.

The master and overseer both being absent, Past Master Geo. Jaquays took the chair.

There were two applications for membership received and a communication from the Fair Association announcing September 11, as School Day and State Grange Master John Ketchum as the principal speaker.

The dance committee announced a dance and supper for next Saturday, August 30.

After the lecturer's program consisting of a roll call, responded to by quotations and several selections from the different members, grange closed in form to meet in three weeks.

Get them now while the price is low—Oxfords and Pumps at Bedford's 20 per cent off sale.—Adv. 331

Peninsula Grange No. 706.

Peninsula Grange meeting was called to order by Worthy Master. Fifteen members present, Treasurer and Secretary balanced up their books and found they had $45.00 on hand. A very profitable lecture from was given with some remarks for the good of the order, after which the grange closed. After closing several of the sisters treated all present to ice cream and cake. Next meeting Sept. 6th.

CROSS-COUNTRY WALK FAILS

Three Boys Start for Fisherman's Island—Darkness Overtakes Them.

Glenn See, Tommie Nowland and Percy Durrance Build Fire and Camp Out All Night.

Sunday afternoon Glenn See, Tommie Nowland and Percy Durrance met and planned out a cross-country walk, that in their opinion would bring them back safely home in about three hours. Starting on their journey about 1:00 o'clock the boys made for the woods where not much headway was made, and darkness overtook them while near Fisherman's Island.

The road was far behind and the distance covered was amazing to each one, and owing to the extreme darkness, the boys were afraid to venture on the homeward journey, so they built a fire and camped out till daylight, arriving home about 6 a. m. Monday.

After the fire alarm was answered Sunday night, a search was instigated by the parents and friends of the trio, in an attempt to locate them. Two boats were pressed into service and an auto was used all night without avail. When the searching parties returned home in the morning, the boys came back also, reaching home shortly after the searchers.

According to reports the boys were none the worse for their experience, but their cozy little beds looked good to them.

FISHING WAS GOOD

Party of Charlevoix Nimrod's Report Excellent Time on Pigeon River.

Reports that trout fishing on the Pigeon River near Vanderbilt was the best in years led Dr. J. A. Auld, H. C. McHugh, A. J. Usher and Arthur Karstake to make the 60 mile trip to that stream last Thursday.

Two days on the stream proved the report a true one, and the above mentioned party made a splendid catch, especially Mr. McHugh. Talk about a fisherman, Harry has them all on the run, and had it not been for the black flies who persisted in making a meal off his neck and ears, he would have made a record catch.

Dr. John applied the principals of dentistry to his fishing. The only difference the writer could distinguish, was that when "Doc" was working at his chair, he filled cavities in teeth, and while on a trout stream, he persisted in filling every hole no matter where located nor the depth of water.

Mr. Karstake proved himself an expert at spearing "Muddlers" for bait, and took great pleasure in showing "Karstake" a pretty stretch of water, while on the way over.

The writer just fished.

NO WINDFALLS TO BE USED

If Shipment is to Come Under Sunnyripe Inspection Service.

Western Michigan Development Bureau Lays Down Shipping Rules.

Picking—All fruit should be carefully picked at the proper stage of ripeness and laid (not dropped) into buckets or baskets, or into bags that open at the bottom. No windfalls nor fruit that drops from the trees from any cause shall be placed with the picked fruit. Apples spotted with dirt must be cleaned.

All wagons used for conveying fruit from the orchard to the packing house and to the shipping point should be supplied with springs so that there will be no jar to mar or bruise the fruit. Tarpaulins or other covering should be placed over the loads to keep out the heat, dust and rain.

Sunnyripe grade—All apples must be of natural color, shape and condition characteristic of variety. Apples must also be sound, smooth, well formed, free from all insect pests, diseases, blemishes, injuries, worm holes, stings, scale, scab, sunscald, dry rot, decay, fungus, watercore, spray burn, limb rub, skin punctures and skin broken at stem.

All solid red apples should be 75 per cent red, and all partially red varieties should be 50 per cent red.

Packing—Apples should be inspected on the packing table and should be packed in the presence of the inspector. But one variety shall go into any package. End cushions should be used in all barrels and lining paper in all boxes. Box apples should be individually wrapped in paper. All packages of Sunnyripe fruit should be sealed as soon as packed, whereupon the inspector shall place labels upon both ends of each package and mark each package with the name of the variety, his inspection number and the date of inspection.

Inspection charges—The inspection fee, which includes two labels for each package, is fifteen cents a barrel and ten cents a bushel box. This amount is due and payable with the completion of each inspection, and shall be paid to the inspector who will issue a Bureau receipt.

Marketing—The Bureau when requested, will assist in the marketing of Sunnyripe fruit by supplying the growers with such information as it may have regarding prevailing prices and outlets for quality stock.

Persons desiring to pack apples for export can profit greatly by working through the Bureau, because of its foreign agents.

Richard Williams of Ironton Entertains Old Acquaintances.

Sunday, August 17th, was the 80th birthday of Mr. Williams and a large crowd of about 75 relatives and old friends gathered from all over the county at the Williams home in Eveline township to wish him many more birthdays. He was presented with a purse of silver $14.00 and other gifts. Relatives who were not able to be present sent letters of congratulation.

A letter from his son Edward, who has a drug business in Chicago, was read and enjoyed by all present. It related a sketch of the father's life and also mentioned the wonderful advancement and progress that had taken place during his life time. Among the inventions were: the electric telegraph, the telephone and the sewing machine; also the first railroad was built in America 44 years ago.

Mr. Williams was born in England and came to America when a young man. Most of his life was spent sailing on the oceans and the Great Lakes. He has a wonderful memory and even today it is very entertaining as well as instructive to listen to him tell of his life experiences and describe the countries he has visited. He is a large man weighing about 200 pounds and enjoys good health most of the time. 49 years ago he married Miss Charlotte Burns, whose people are also old pioneers of Charlevoix county, she having four brothers and three sisters living in Charlevoix county.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams have 10 living children and 19 grandchildren.

A delicious dinner was served under the shade of the apple trees, after which Mr. and Mrs. Williams enjoyed an automobile ride, while chats were enjoyed among old friends who had not met before in years. One Who Was There.

To Leave East Jordan.

The very many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Boosinger and family will hear with regret that they have decided to leave East Jordan. For upward of a quarter of a century they have resided here and have had a prominent and active part in the development and growth of the city, in business, social and educational lines, being ever numbered with the most prominent citizens. On his recent visit to Cleveland, Ohio, he found what he considers an advantageous business opening in the office end of an established manufacturing industry, which he accepted and will soon remove to that city with his family. While all the friends here wish him abundant success in his new location, it is certain that every member of the family will be sadly missed in East Jordan.—Enterprise.

MEET AT TRAVERSE CITY

Michigan Postmasters Hold Annual Convention August 28-29.

Great fun, as well as instructive trips through the fruit regions, is being arranged for Michigan postmasters, who will hold their annual convention at Traverse City on August 28 and 29. Add the Mrs. Postmasters aren't being overlooked by the committees in charge of the arrangements.

The first day of the meeting, Thursday, will be devoted by the postmasters to cleaning up all of their business, so that on the following day they can give almost undivided attention to enjoying themselves. While the men are working the women and children will be taken on auto and boat rides.

At 10:30 Friday morning the visitors will be loaded into automobiles and taken up the west side of the beautiful peninsula of fruit farms to Neethawanta for a fish dinner. After the dinner every delegate will be presented with a basket of Grand Traverse fruit. The return trip to Traverse City will be along the middle road, a road that runs along a high ridge and gives a full view of both sides of the peninsula.

MEET AT IRONTON

Tri-County Rural Carriers' Association Hold Annual Meeting.

The tri-county Rural Carriers' Association of Charlevoix, Antrim and Kalkaska counties will hold their annual meeting with the members of Ironton grange at their hall on Labor Day, Monday, September 1.

The hour placed for opening is 10:00 in the forenoon, and a fine program has been prepared. Grangers throughout the district are invited to meet with them, and make the occasion one long to be remembered.

In the evening the grangers will hold one of their popular dances.

Under New Management.

The Harbor Springs Republican-Graphic passed under new management last Tuesday, with W. C. Palmer, of Ligonie, Ind., owner, as editor and manager. Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Garland have owned, edited and conducted the Republican-Graphic for some time but have decided to make a change in their business and location, and Mr. Palmer who comes to Harbor Springs, full of enthusiasm and with a flattering reputation, will continue the printery at the same stand.

COUNTY FAIR NEAR AT HAND

Annual Event to be Held at East Jordan
Sept. 9, 10, 11, 12.

JOHN C. KETCHAM WILL SPEAK

"School Day" to be Featured by Excellent Program.

Base Ball Games Each Day and Others Sports—Balloon Ascension and Parachute, Drop—Good Races.

Our annual county fair is again near at hand. For twenty-nine years this steadily progressive institution has successfully fulfilled its original purpose; namely that of promoting the agricultural, commercial and educational interests of our county. As the opening day approaches the management is always besieged with the question, "What are you going to have this year?" This query usually comes from those seeking attractive entertainment, a desire that every fair management must endeavor to satisfy. It must not be forgotten however that the fundamental purpose of our society is educational and that this fact must at all times be given due consideration. We have therefore endeavored to make our fair this year as attractive as possible to the general public.

The exhibition of our county's finest production has been encouraged to the fullest extent. Nammoth displays from field, garden and orchard and representative exhibits of manufacture and art will be shown. It is the duty of every producer in Charlevoix, Antrim and Emmet counties to place the finest products of their skill and labor before the public for its encouragement and edification. It always sounds tiresome to hear local people make the comment "that we have something far better at home." If you have an excellent article bring it to the fair, and then you will increase the satisfaction and interest of every visitor.

Conditions promise a banner exhibit this year. The development of our fair as an educational factor has been pushed to a marked degree by our society with the cooperation of the public schools, this year, by the erection of an Educational and Fine Arts Building, which will contain one of the greatest educational exhibits by our public schools ever seen outside of our large expositions. Everything points to a marked success that this venture undeniably deserves. "School Day" will be observed Thursday, September 11th. Hon. John C. Ketcham, worthy master of Michigan State Grange, will deliver the dedicatory address on that day. Mr. Ketcham's address will doubtless meet the most sanguine expectations of the public.

In the matter of sports, a base ball tournament in which teams from Boyne City, Charlevoix, Bellaire and East Jordan will contest for supremacy, has been arranged for. One ball game will be played in the forenoon of each day of the fair, beginning Wednesday, September 10th. This concluding series of our great national sport should attract unusual interest.

On each of the days above mentioned, there will be given a balloon ascension with great cannon shot lecture act. Those who have witnessed this act vouch its superiority over the well known aeroplane "stunts" featured by many fairs. In this act, man and parachute are shot from a cannon in mid-air and descend gracefully to the earth. This act alone is worth the price of admission.

A strong race program has been arranged for each day. Lovers of this sport will not be disappointed for the largest and best string of horses ever entered in northern Michigan are coming.

A merry-go-round, shows, booths and other minor attractions usually found at fairs will be strongly in evidence. Accommodations for refreshment and entertainment have been materially increased and improved. The dining hall at the fair-grounds will be in charge of the ladies of St. Joseph's Catholic church, which fact is ample guarantee for the excellence of the service that will be rendered. Much more might be said but space forbids. Altogether our fair will be a great success. Begin now to make your preparation to attend our county fair.

The following boat schedule will be carried out by the Str. Hm during the days of the fair.
Leaves Charlevoix every day at 8:15 a. m. and 12:15 p. m. Leaves East Jordan on Tuesday and Wednesday at 10:30 a. m. and 6:30 p. m., and on Thursday and Friday at 10:30 a. m. and 8:00 p. m., connecting with all P. M. R. R. trains.
Tickets will be good to return on any day. Fare round trip 50c.

SURPRISED HER

Friends of Mrs. W. E. Campbell Met at the Tillotson Home.

A very pleasant surprise party was given at the home of Mrs. D. G. Tillotson, Monday evening, in honor of Mrs. W. E. Campbell, who is soon to leave Charlevoix to make her future home at Flint.

The porch and house was decorated with flags, flowers and Japanese lanterns. At a late hour, after a very enjoyable evening spent playing 500, ice cream and cake was served. The out of town guest was Mrs. Wm. Taylor of Detroit.

FOUND CAR IN CHARLEVOIX

Courier Story Leads to Recovery of Stolen Automobile.

The Ford touring car, stolen about a week ago from the Northern Auto company of Petoskey, was recovered Thursday afternoon in this city and taken back to Petoskey by its owners. The machine was in good condition and the speedometer showed but nineteen miles. As there was only a few quarts of gasoline in the car, when it was taken from the garage, it evidently had been towed the greater part of the way from Petoskey to Charlevoix.

A week ago Wednesday morning a man on a motorcycle appeared at the residence of W. B. Scroggie, on Dixon avenue, and rented the barn for storing a car, stating at the time that he had scoured the town for a place to store the car, but had failed to find one, outside of the public garages. He told Mrs. Scroggie at the time that he was employed at Mackinac Island, and he was unable to take his car with him, as they would not allow a car on the island. Thursday morning between four and five o'clock he stored the car in the barn and disappeared, leaving a note and two dollars, asking that the machine be kept locked in the barn until he returned within a month.

Upon receiving the Courier Thursday, Mr. and Mrs. Scroggie read the story of the robbery and, after comparing the number on the machine with the one of the stolen car, found them identical. Mr. Scroggie came to the Courier to verify the numbers on the car, and a phone message was sent from this office to the owners of the stolen car, Messrs. John L. Galaster and Owen McMahon, of the Northern Auto company, who came over immediately and identified the car as the one which was stolen.

Extra tires, auxiliaries of a prestolite tank and a pair of grease which had been appropriated by the thief or thieves were also found in car. The reward of one hundred dollars was immediately turned over to Mr. Scroggie. Officers are investigating with the hope of apprehending the culprits.

COUNTY CLERK ISSUES WARNING

New Naturalization Law Clearly Explained by Clerk Lewis.

Aliens Must Make Final Application Before September 27, Next.

County Clerk Lewis wishes to issue a warning to aliens who have taken out their first naturalization papers, and who have neglected to apply for their second papers.

There are scores of such cases in Charlevoix county, and a new law, going into effect September 27, next, may work a hardship to those who neglect the requirements of this new law.

Through a misinterpretation the report has gone out that thousands of aliens who have declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States may be debarred from realizing their hopes unless they file final applications for naturalization before September 27, next, when there will go into effect the new law requiring that final applications must be made not less than two nor more than seven years after the declaration of intentions.

It is explained by Clerk Lewis that the intention of the new law is not to debar from citizenship forever those who have already taken out declaration papers, but should the aliens who have thus declared themselves fail to avail the right to take out final papers under such declaration they will have to again go through the form of declaring their intentions which will put out the time before they can become citizens at least five years.

If you are affected by the new law, or know a friend that is, better attend to the matter at once, or warn your friend to, so that the hardship of a five years' delay will be avoided.

PICKING UP LOOSE MONEY

Postoffice Department Says Postmen Are Not Required to do so.

Coins Must Be Tied in Bundles or Enclosed in Envelopes.

Picking up loose money has grown to be such a hardship for the overworked rural free delivery carrier that the postoffice department has issued an order warning reckless citizens against leaving loose coins lying around. Hereafter, coins must be tied in bundles or enclosed in envelopes whenever the patron of a rural route wants stamps from a carrier and leaves the necessary amount in the way-side box.

"The attention of postmasters at rural delivery offices and of rural carriers," says Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Blakeslee, "is again directed to the fact that rural carriers are not required to collect loose coins from rural mail boxes. Patrons should enclose coins in an envelope, wrap them securely in paper or deposit them in a coin holding receptacle so they can be easily and quickly taken from boxes, and carriers will be required to lift such coins and when accompanied by mail for dispatch, attach the requisite stamps."

Least temptation "to lift" loose coins prove too strong, the department adds that if it is done, the carrier disclosing such weakness, "will be so purely as a matter of accommodation and not by any action or requirement of the department."

BAD FIRE AT PETOSKEY

Over Eight Thousand Dollars Loss in Bazaar District.

Fire, which originated in rubbish back of the Kludjian bazaar on Lake street, Petoskey, Saturday morning, destroyed that building, the property of K. F. Boss, and partially damaged the Charles Boss building adjoining and the Ulrich stock with an aggregate loss of about eight thousand dollars.

Smoke penetrating the interior of an adjoining building nearly suffocated three persons, who had rooms there.

Water did considerable damage to the stock, most of which was fully covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have originated from a match or cigarette thrown in the rubbish back of the bazaar.

For results, try our advertising liners.

New Millinery Store.

Miss Jennie Richards of Bellaire, will open a millinery store in the building now occupied by Stanley Wilder on Tuesday, September 9th. Miss Richards invites the ladies of Charlevoix and vicinity to call and get acquainted and to look over the new creations in fall millinery.

HOG CHOLERA RAVAGING STATE

Live Stock Experts Declare 23 Counties Are Now Infected.

In Many Cases Local Health Boards Are Ignorant of the State Law.

Now comes another alarming report regarding the condition of Michigan's meat crop. This time it deals with hogs. That Michigan is at present being ravaged by an epidemic of hog cholera which is rapidly assuming an alarming aspect is the statement of Dr. Giltner, late state veterinarian and present acting head of the bacteriological department, and also of Dr. Holman, of the bacteriological department of the M. A. C., who has been doing state work in the districts affected. At the last counting made by Dr. Giltner there were 23 counties affected with the disease, some of them very badly. The counties in which sections are reported as being affected are, Genesee, Barry, Eaton, St. Joseph, Cass, Branch, Wayne, Calhoun, Livingston, Kent, Newaygo, Ingham, Berrien, Monroe, Gratiot, Kalamazoo, Ottawa, St. Clair, Charlevoix, Van Buren, Leelanau and Hillsdale.

The disease is killing off the hogs in the affected sections by the hundreds, many farmers reporting that their entire herds of 50 or 100 have been wiped out.

The farmers in a large number of the communities are ignorant as to the nature of the disease, and in many instances the local veterinarians are unable to diagnose it correctly, calling it swine plague and a number of kindred diseases. In many other cases it has been found that the local health boards have been absolutely ignorant of their duties in cases where the disease has broken out badly. As required by the state law, they should immediately quarantine and take measures to prevent the spread of the disease about the state. The state live stock and sanitary commission should also be notified. In Branch county, Dr. Holman and Mr. Halliday, a member of the live stock board, found the local chairman of the health board with nearly 80 hogs dead or dying on his own farm, and still he had taken no action in the matter.

Dr. Giltner states that the M. A. C. is making a hog cholera serum which will positively protect all swine from the disease if they are inoculated with it.

"The college has been in the harness of producing this serum for a good many years, and sends it to the farmer at cost as soon as he sends for it. If the farmers will only send for the serum and administer it wisely they can protect all of their uninfected hogs," said Dr. Giltner.

According to the doctor, the serum will not cure diseased animals but acts only as a preventative.

LAST GREAT LAND DRAWING

Fort Peck Indian Reservation to be Opened Up.

1,345,000 ACRES OF LAND

Most Alluring Land Opening Ever Presented to People.

Actual Settlement Will Begin in May, 1914—Modern Town Sites Already Located.

Nearly 400,000 acre farm homesteads will be drawn by the "lucky ones" as the result of the throwing open of 1,345,000 acres of land upon the Fort Peck Indian reservation in northeastern Montana this month. This is the last great land drawing Uncle Sam has to offer his people and one of the greatest in the history of the government land openings in point of fertility.

Government agricultural experts estimate that when this vast stretch of soil is tilled it will add about 25,000,000 bushels of grain annually to the production of the United States—enough to feed an entire nation.

The interior department is making extensive preparations to rush a leg corps of clerks to Glasgow, Havre and Great Falls, Montana, which are to be the registration points. These land offices will be open September 1 and the work of filing for this land will then begin. The people will have a chance to continue filing until September 20.

The vastness of the area opened to white settlement is expected to make this one of the most alluring land openings ever presented to the people, inasmuch as their opportunity of getting something in the drawing will be much better than in any previous land opening. For instance when the Couer d'Alene, Flathead and Spokane land drawings were held last year, 90,000 persons filed and drew for the lands in those three Indian reservations, the total area of which was about one fourth of the area to be opened upon the Fort Peck reservation.

Government officials do not believe that more than 75,000 people will file for the Fort Peck land. Hence the chances of drawing a quarter section in the Fort Peck reservation "lottery" are about four times as good as they have been in previous government land drawings. The actual value of this land is said by government agricultural experts to average about $25 an acre. However, the government's appraisal for its opening to white settlement is only from $2.50 to $7 per acre, thus making real prizes for those who draw this land.

The drawings will take place in this way: The names of all who file for land will be placed in a big box and the envelopes drawn out one by one and announced not enough envelopes are taken from the box to correspond with the number of quarter sections available—8,400. Those getting the early numbers will, of course, get the first pick of the land in rotation, according to the numbers drawn. The actual settlement of the land will begin May 1, 1914.

Settlement is the same as under the homestead law, except that the appraised valuation must be paid— from $2.50 to $7 an acre, at these terms: One fifth of the total down at the time of entry and the rest in five annual payments. The settler, however, has the option of taking advantage of the new three-year homestead law by paying for his land at the end of three years and thus proving up on it. This gives the man of small means a chance for his "white alley."

Half a dozen modern town sites already have been located by the government at points along the main transcontinental line of the Great Northern railway, which runs through the Fort Peck reservation for 100 miles.

At Baptist Church.

Rev. R. M. Scott of the Berean Baptist Church of Grand Rapids will preach at the Baptist Church in this city next Sunday morning and evening. All are invited to come and hear a good sermon at 10:30 and 7:00 o'clock p. m.

The porch and house was decorated with flags, flowers and Japanese lanterns. At a late hour, after a very enjoyable evening spent playing 500, ice cream and cake was served. The out of town guest was Mrs. Wm. Taylor of Detroit.

Courier Story Leads to Recovery of Stolen Automobile.

The Ford touring car, stolen about a week ago from the Northern Auto company of Petoskey, was recovered Thursday afternoon in this city and taken back to Petoskey by its owners. The machine was in good condition and the speedometer showed but ninety miles. As there was only a few quarts of gasoline in the car when it was taken from the garage, it evidently had been towed the greater part of the way from Petoskey to Charlevoix.

A week ago Wednesday morning a man on a motorcycle appeared at the residence of W. B. Scroggie, on Dixon avenue, and rented the barn for storing a car, stating at the time that he had scoured the town for a place to store the car, but had failed to find one, outside of the public garages. He told Mrs. Scroggie at the time that he was employed at Mackinac Island, and he was unable to take his car with him, as they would not allow a car on the island. Thursday morning between four and five o'clock he stored the car in the barn and disappeared, leaving a note and two dollars, asking that the machine be kept locked in the barn until he returned within a month.

Upon receiving the Courier Thursday, Mr. and Mrs. Scroggie read the story of the robbery and, after comparing the number on the machine with the one of the stolen car, found them identical. Mr. Scroggie came to the Courier to verify the numbers on the car, and a phone message was sent from this office to the owners of the stolen car, Messrs. John L. Galaster and Owen McMahon, of the Northern Auto company, who came over immediately and identified the car as the one which was stolen.

Extra tires, auxiliaries of a prestolite tank and a pail of grease which had been appropriated by the thief or thieves were also found in car. The reward of one hundred dollars was immediately turned over to Mr. Scroggie. Officers are investigating with the hope of apprehending the culprits.

New Naturalization Law Clearly Explained by Clerk Lewis.

Aliens Must Make Final Application Before September 27, Next.

County Clerk Lewis wishes to issue a warning to aliens who have taken out their first naturalization papers, and who have neglected to apply for their second papers.

There are scores of such cases in Charlevoix county, and a new law, going into effect September 27, next, may work a hardship to those who neglect the requirements of this new law.

Through a misinterpretation the report has gone out that thousands of aliens who have declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States may be debarred from realizing their hopes unless they file final applications for naturalization before September 27, next, when there will go into effect the new law requiring that final applications must be made not less than two nor more than seven years after the declaration of intentions.

It is explained by Clerk Lewis that the intention of the new law is not to debar from citizenship forever those who have already taken out declaration papers, but should the aliens who have thus declared themselves fail to avail the right to take out final papers under such declaration they will have to again go through the form of declaring their intentions which will put off the time before they can become citizens at least five years.

If you are affected by the new law, or know a friend that is, better attend to the matter at once, or warn your friend to, so that the hardship of a five years' delay will be avoided.

PICKING UP LOOSE MONEY

Postoffice Department Says Postmen Are Not Required to do so.

Coins Must Be Tied in Bundles or Enclosed in Envelopes.

Picking up loose money has grown to be such a hardship for the overworked rural free delivery carrier that the postoffice department has issued an order warning reckless citizens against leaving loose coins lying around. Hereafter, coins must be tied in bundles or enclosed in envelopes whenever the patron of a rural route wants stamps from a carrier and leaves the necessary amount in the way-side box.

"The attention of postmasters at rural delivery offices and of rural carriers," says Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Blakeslee, "is again directed to the fact that rural carriers are not required to collect loose coins from rural mail boxes.

"Patrons should enclose coins in an envelope, wrap them securely in paper or deposit them in a coin holding receptacle so they can be easily and quickly taken from boxes, and carriers will be required to lift such coins and when accompanied by mail for dispatch, attach the requisite stamps."

Least the temptation "to lift" loose coins prove too strong, the department adds that if it is done, the carrier disclosing such weakness, "will do so purely as a matter of accommodation and not by any direction or requirement of the department."

BAD FIRE AT PETOSKEY

Over Eight Thousand Dollars Loss in Bazaar District.

Fire, which originated in rubbish back of the Kludjian bazaar on Lake street, Petoskey, Saturday morning, destroyed that building, the property of E. F. Boss, and partially damaged the Charles Boss building adjoining and the Ulrich stock with an aggregate loss of about eight thousand dollars.

Smoke penetrating the interior of an adjoining building nearly suffocated three persons, who had rooms there.

Water did considerable damage to the stock, most of which was fully covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have originated from a match or cigarette thrown in the rubbish back of the bazaar.

For results, try our advertising liners.

New Millinery Store.

Miss Jennie Richards of Bellaire, will open a millinery store in the building now occupied by Stanley Wilderson Tuesday, September 9th. Miss Richards invites the ladies of Charlevoix and vicinity to call and get acquainted and to look over the new creations in fall millinery.

HOG CHOLERA RAVAGING STATE

Live Stock Experts Declare 23 Counties Are Now Infected.

In Many Cases Local Health Boards Are Ignorant of the State Law.

Now comes another alarming report regarding the condition of Michigan's meat crop. This time it deals with hogs. That Michigan is at present being ravaged by an epidemic of hog cholera which is rapidly assuming an alarming aspect is the statement of Dr. Giltner, late state veterinarian and present acting head of the bacteriological department, and also of Dr. Helman, of the bacteriological department of the M. A. C., who has been doing state work in the districts affected. At the last counting made by Dr. Giltner there were 23 counties affected with the disease, some of them very badly. The counties in which sections are reported as being affected are, Genesee, Barry, Eaton, St. Joseph, Cass, Branch, Wayne, Calhoun, Livingston, Kent, Newaygo, Ingham, Berrien, Monroe, Gratiot, Kalamazoo, Ottawa, St. Clair, Charlevoix, Van Buren, Leelanau and Hillsdale.

The farmers in a large number of the communities are ignorant as to the nature of the disease, and in many instances the local veterinarians are unable to diagnose it correctly, calling it swine plague and a number of kindred diseases. In many other cases it has been found that the local health boards have been absolutely ignorant of their duties in cases where the disease has broken out badly. As required by the state law, they should immediately quarantine and take measures to prevent the spread of the disease about the state. The state live stock and sanitary commission should also be notified. In Branch county, Dr. Holman and Mr. Halliday, a member of the live stock board, found the local chairman of the health board with nearly 80 hogs dead or dying on his own farm, and still he had taken no action in the matter.

Dr. Giltner states that the M. A. C. is making a hog cholera serum which will positively protect all swine from the disease if they are inoculated with it.

"The college has been in the business of producing this serum for a good many years, and sends it to the farmer at cost as soon as he sends for it. If the farmers will only send for the serum and administer it wisely they can protect all of their uninfected hogs," said Dr. Giltner.

According to the doctor, the serum will not cure diseased animals but acts only as a preventative.

LAST GREAT LAND DRAWING

Fort Peck Indian Reservation to be Opened Up.

1,345,000 ACRES OF LAND

Most Alluring Land Opening Ever Presented to People.

Nearly 1,345,000 acres of land will be drawn by the "lucky ones" as the result of the throwing open of 1,345,000 acres of land upon the Fort Peck Indian reservation in northeastern Montana this month. This is the last great land drawing Uncle Sam has to offer his people and one of the greatest in the history of the government land openings in point of fertility.

Government agricultural experts estimate that when this vast stretch of soil is tilled it will add about 25,000,000 bushels of grain annually to the production of the United States—enough to feed an entire nation.

The interior department is making extensive preparations to rush a big corps of clerks to Glasgow, Havre and Great Falls, Montana, which are to be the registration points. These land offices will be open September 1 and the work of filing for this land will then begin. The people will have a chance to continue filing until September 20.

The vastness of the area opened to white settlement is expected to make this one of the most alluring land openings ever presented to the people, inasmuch as their opportunity of getting something in the drawing will be much better than in any previous land opening. For instance when the Coueur d'Alene, Flathead and Spokane land drawings were held last year, 90,000 persons filed and drew for the lands in those three Indian reservations, the total area of which was about one fourth of the area to be opened upon the Fort Peck reservation.

Government officials do not believe that more than 75,000 people will file for the Fort Peck land. Hence the chances of drawing a quarter section in the Fort Peck reservation "lottery" are about four times as good as they have been in previous government land drawings. The actual value of this land is said by government agricultural experts to average about $25 an acre. However, the government's appraisal for its opening to white settlement is only from $2.50 to $7 per acre, thus making real prizes for those who draw this land.

The drawings will take place in this way: The names of all who file for land will be placed in a big box and the envelopes drawn out one by one and numbered until enough envelopes are taken from the box to correspond with the number of quarter sections available—8,400. Those getting the early numbers will, of course, get the first pick of the land, in rotation, according to the numbers drawn. The actual settlement of the land will begin May 1, 1914.

Settlement is the same as under the homestead law, except that the appraised valuation must be paid—from $2.50 to $7 an acre, at these terms. One fifth of the total down at the time of entry and the rest in five annual payments. The settler, however, has the option of taking advantage of the new three-year homestead law by paying for his land at the end of three years and thus proving up on it. This gives the man of small means a chance for his "white alley."

Hall a dozen modern town sites already have been located by the government at points along the main transcontinental line of the Great Northern railway, which runs through the Fort Peck reservation for 100 miles.

At Baptist Church.

Rev. R. M. Scott of the Berean Baptist Church of Grand Rapids will preach at the Baptist Church in this city next Sunday morning and evening. All are invited to come and hear a good sermon at 10:30 and 7:00 o'clock p. m.

DOWNWARD COURSE

Fast Being Realized by Charlevoix People.

A little backache at first. Daily increasing till the back is lame and weak. Urinary disorders may quickly follow. Dropsy and often Bright's disease. This frequently is the downward course of kidney ills. Don't take this course. Charlevoix residents should profit by the following experience. Mrs. Ophelia Davey, Ellsworth, Mich., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for some time. There was pain in the small of my back and twinges when stopping or lifting. My back ached at night and lame in the morning. I tired easily, was languid and nervous and had headaches. The kidney secretions were unnatural. I finally took Doan's Kidney Pills and they helped me at once." For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.—Advertisement.

Emmet County Fair.

Partners of Charlevoix county will be especially interested in the special premiums offered this year. Twenty-five dollars will be given for the best bushel of White Cap Dent Corn. A twenty-dollar leather upholstered rocker will be given for the best bushel of apples. There are many other very liberal premiums offered.

The fair will eclipse all others ever held in this region. The poultry show alone will be worth attending. Among the free attractions will be daily balloon ascensions by an aeronaut and a real live bear, each coming down in a separate parachute. The Remington U. M. C. of New York, will have representatives present to give exhibitions of fancy shooting. There will be something doing all the time, with plenty of good music and a lively "Midway." Remember the dates, Emmet County Fair, September 10 to 19.

BIG GEORGE was drinking and the activities of the little arctic-mining camp were paralyzed. Events invariably ceased their progress and marked time when George became excessive, and now nothing of public consequence stirred except the quicksilver, which was retreating fearfully into its bulb at the song of the wind which came racing over the lonesome, blither, northward waste of tundra.

He held the center of the floor at the Northern club and proclaimed his modest virtues in a voice as pleasant as the cough of a bull walrus.

"Yes, me—little George! I did it. I've licked 'em all from Herschel Island to Dutch Harbor, big uns and little uns. When they didn't suit I made 'em over. I'm the boss carpenter of the arctic, and I own this camp; don't I, Slim? Hey? Answer me!" he roared at the emaciated bear-er of the title, whose attention seemed wandering from the inventory of George's startling traits toward a card game.

"Sure ye do," nervously smiled Slim, frightened-out of a heart solo as he returned to his surroundings.

"Well, then, listen to what I'm saying. I'm the big chief of the village, and when I'm stimulated and happy then fellows I don't like hides out and lets me and nature operate things. Ain't that right?" He glared inquiringly at his friends.

Red, the proprietor, explained over the bar in a whisper to Captain, the new man from Dawson: "That's Big George, the whaler. He's a squaw man an' sort of a bully-see? When he's sober he's on the level straight, an' we all like him fine, but when he gets to fighting the pain killer he ain't altogether a gentleman. Will he fight—oh, will he fight? Say, he's there with chimble, he is! Why, how Millie's made a crab stake rebuilding fellows that's had a blizzarding doubt chased away about that, an' now when he gets the booze up his nose them patched up guys oozes away an' hiber nates till the gas dies out in him. Afterward he's sure on himself an' apologizes to everybody. Don't get into no trouble with him, 'cause he's two checks past the limit. They don't make 'em as bad as him any more. He busted the mold."

George turned and, spying the newcomer, approached, eyeing him with critical disfavor.

Captain saw a bearlike figure, clad cap-a-pie in native fashion, reindeer pants, with the hair inside, clothed legs like rock pillars, while out of the loose squirrel parka a corded neck rose, brown and strong, above which darkly gleamed a rugged face scarred and seamed by the bite of arctic winters. He had kicked off his deer skin socks and stood barefooted on the cold and drafty floor, while the poison he had imbibed showed only in his heated face. Silently he extended a cracked and hardened hand, which closed like the armored claw of a crustacean and tightened on the crunching fingers of the other. Captain's expression remained unchanged, and, gradually slackening his grip, the sailor roughly inquired:

"Where'd you come from?" "Just got in from Dawson yesterday," politely responded the stranger. "Well, what're you going to do now you're here?" he demanded.

"Stake some claims and go to prospecting, I guess. You see, I wanted to get in early before the rush next spring."

"Oh, I s'pose you're going to jump some of our ground, hey? Well, you ain't. We don't want no claim jumpers here," disagreeably continued the seaman. "We won't stand for it. This is my camp—see? I own it, and these is my little children." Then, as the other refused to debate with him, he resumed, groping for a new ground of attack.

"Say! I'll bet you're one of them educated dudes, too, ain't you? You talk like a feller that had been to college," and, as the other assented, he scornfully called to his friends, anyone: "Look here, fellows! Hipe the jelly-dish! I never see one of these here animals that was worth a cuss. They plays football and smokes cigars at school; then when they're weaned they come off up here and jump our claims 'cause we can't write a location notice proper. They ain't no good. I guess I'll stop it."

Captain moved toward the door, but the whaler threw his bulky frame against it and scowlingly blocked the way.

"No, you don't. You ain't going to run away till I've had the next dance, Mister Education! Humph! I ain't begun to tell you yet what a useless little barnacle you are!"

Red interferred, saying: "Look 'ere, George, this guy ain't no playmate of yours. We'll all have a jolt of this disturbance promoter and call it off."

Then, as the others approached, he winked at Captain and jerked his head slightly toward the door.

The latter, heeding the signal, started out, but George leaped after him and, seizing an arm, whirled him back, roaring:

"Well, of all the cussed impudence I ever see! You're too high toned to drink with us, are you? You don't get out of here now till you take a licking like a man!"

He reached over his head and, grasping the hood of his fur shirt, with one movement he stripped it from him, exposing a massive naked body whose muscles swelled and knotted beneath a skin as clear as a maiden's, while a map of angry scars strayed across the heavy chest.

As the shirt sailed through the air Red lightly vaulted to the bar and, diving at George's naked middle, tackled beautifully, crying to Captain: "Get out quick! We'll hold him!"

Others rushed forward and grasped the bulky sailor, but Captain's voice replied: "I sort of like this place, and I guess I'll stay awhile. Turu him loose!"

"Why, man, he'll kill ye," excitedly cried Slim. "Get out!"

The captive turned his peace-makers from him and, shaking off the clinging arms, drove furiously at the insolent stranger.

In the cramped limits of the corner where he stood Captain was unable to avoid the big man, who swept him with a crash against the plank door at his back, grasping hungrily at his throat. As his shoulders struck, however, he dropped to his knees, and before the raging George could seize him he avoided a blow which would have strained the rivets of a strength tester and ducked under the other's arms, leaping to the cleared center of the floor.

Seldom had the big man's rush been avoided, and, whirling, he swung a boondike arm at the agile stranger. Before it landed Captain stepped in to meet his adversary and, with the weight of his body behind the blow, drove a clinched and bony fist crashing into the other's face. The big head with its blazing shock of hair snapped backward, and the whaler dropped to his knees at the other's feet.

The drunken flush of victory swept over Captain as he stood above the swaying figure, then suddenly he felt the great bare arms close about his waist with a painful grip. He struck at the bleeding face below him and wrenched at the cowering hands which wheeled the breath from his lungs, but the whaler squeezed him writhing to his breast and, rising unsteadily, wheeled across the door and in a shiver of broken glass fell crashing against the bar and to the floor.

As the struggling men writhed upon the planks the door opened at the hurried entrance of an excited group, which paused at the sight of the ruin; then, rushing forward, tore the men apart.

The panting Berserker strained at the arms about his glistering body, while Captain, with sobbing sighs, relieved his aching lungs and watched his enemy, who frothed at the later ferocity.

"It was George's fault," explained Slim to the questions of the arrivals. "This feller tried to make a getaway, but George had to have his amusement."

A newcomer addressed the squaw man in a voice as cold as the wind. "Cut this out, George! This is a friend of mine. You're making this camp a regular hell for strangers, and now I'm going to tap your little snup. Cool off—see?"

Jones' reputation as a bad gun man went hand in hand with his name as a good gambler, and his sententious remarks invariably evoked attentive answers, so George explained: "I don't like him, Jones, and I was jus' making him over to look like a man. I'll do it yet, too," he dashed wrathfully at his quiet antagonist.

"Pears to me like he's took a hand in the remodeling himself," replied the gambler, "but if you're looking for something to do, here's your chance. Windy Jim just drove in and says Barton and Kid Sullivan are adrift on the ice."

"What's that?" questioned eager voices, and, forgetting the recent trouble of the news, the crowd pressed forward anxiously.

"They was crossing the bay and got carried out by the offshore gale," explained Jones. "Windy was following 'em when the ice ahead parted and begun moving out. He tried to yell to 'em, but they was too far away to hear in the storm. He managed to get back to the land and followed the shore ice around. He's over at Hunter's cabin now, most dead, face and hands froze pretty bad."

A torrent of questions followed and many suggestions as to the fate of the men.

"They'll freeze before they can get ashore," said one.

"The ice pack'll break up in this wind," added another, "and if they don't drown they'll freeze before the floe comes in close enough for them to land."

From the first announcement of his friends' peril Captain had been thinking rapidly. His body, sore from his long trip and aching from the tug of his recent encounter, cried woefully for rest, but his voice rose calm and clear. "We've got to get them off," he said. "Who will go with me? Three is enough."

The clamoring voices ceased, and the men wheeled at the sound, gazing incredulously at the speaker. "What! In this storm? You're crazy!" many voices said.

He gazed appealingly at the faces before him. Brave and adventurous men he knew them to be, jesting with death and tempered to perils in this land where hardship rises with the dawn, but they shook their ragged heads hopelessly.

"We must save them!" resumed Captain hotly. "Barton and I played as children together, and if there's not a man among you who's got the nerve to follow me I'll go alone, by heavens!"

In the silence of the room he pulled the cap about his ears and, tying it snugly under his chin, drew on his huge fur mittens. Then, with a scornful laugh, he turned toward the door.

He paused as his eye caught the swollen face of Big George. Blood had stiffened in the heavy creases of his face like rusted strainers in a hedge, while his matted and discolored lips protruded thickly. His hair gleamed red, and the sweat had dried upon his naked shoulders, streaked with dirt and flecked with spots of blood, yet the battered features shone with the unconquered, fearless light of a rough, strong man.

Captain strode to him with outstretched hand. "You're a man," he said. "You've got the nerve, George, and you'll go with me, won't you?"

"What! Me?" questioned the sailor vaguely. His wondering glance left Captain and drifted round the circle of shamed and silent faces. Then he straightened stiffly and cried: "Will I go with you? Certainly! I'll go to— with you."

Ready hands harnessed the dogs, dragged from protected nooks where they sought cover from the storm, which howled and whistled round the low houses. Endless ragged folds of sled whirled out of the north, then writhed and twisted past, vanishing into the gray veil which shrouded the landscape in a twilight gloom.

The fierce wind sank the cold into the aching flesh like a knife and stiffened the face to a shivering mask, while a fusillade of frozen ice particles beat against the eyeballs with blinding fury.

As Captain emerged from his cabin, furred and hooded, he found a long train of crouching, whining animals harnessed and waiting, while muffled figures stocked the sled with robes and food and stimulants.

Big George approached through the whirling white, a great, squat figure, with fluttering squirrel tails blowing from his parka, and at his heels there trailed a figure skin clad and dainty.

"It's my wife," he explained briefly to Captain. "She won't let me go alone."

They gravely made farewell to all, and the little crowd cheered lustily against the whine of the blizzard as, with cracking whip and hoarse shouts, they were wrapped in the cloudy winding sheet of snow.

Arctic storms have an even sameness—the intense cold, the heartless wind, which augments tenfold the chill of the temperature; the air thick and dark, with stinging flakes rushing by in an endless cloud, a drifting, freezing, shifting eternity of snow, driven by a raving gale, which sweeps the desolate, bald wastes of the northland.

The little party toiled through the smother till they reached the ice-lands under the bosom of the tall coast bluffs, where crouching Eskimos drilled patiently at ivory tusks and gambled the furs from their backs at stud horse poker.

To George's inquiries they answered that their biggest canoe was the three-banded bidarka on the gale outside. Owing to the small circular openings in its deck, this was capable of holding but three passengers, and Captain said, "We'll have to make two trips, George."

"Two trips, eh?" answered the other. "We'll be doing well if we last through one, I'm thinking."

Laughing the unwieldy burden upon the sled, they fought their way along the coast until George declared they were opposite the point where their friends went adrift. They slid their light craft through the ragged wall of ice hummocks guarding the shore pack and dimly saw in the gray beyond them a stretch of angry waters mottled by drifting cakes and floes.

George spoke earnestly to his wife, instructing her to keep the team in constant motion up and down the coast a ride shot in either direction and to listen for a signal of the return. Then he picked her up as he would a babe, and she kissed his storm-beaten face.

"She's been a good snaw to me," he said as they pushed their dancing craft out into the breath of the gale, and I've always done the square thing by her. I s'pose she'll go back in her people now though."

The wind hurried them, out from land, while it drove the sea water in freezing spray over their backs and changed their fur garments into scaly armor as they worked through the ice cakes, peering with strained eyes for a sign of their friends.

The sailor with deft strokes steered them between the grinding bergs, raising his voice in long signals like the weird cry of a shren.

Twisting back and forth through the floes, they held to their quest, now floating with the wind, now paddling desperately in a race with some drifting mass which dimly towered above them and splintered hungrily against its neighbor close to their wake.

Captain emptied his six shooter till his numbed fingers grew rigid as the trigger, and always at his back swelled the deep shouts of the sailor, who with practiced eye and mighty strokes forced their way through the closing lanes between the jaws of the ice pack.

At last, benten and tossed, they rested, disheartened and hopeless. Then, as they drifted, a sound struggled to them against the wind—a faint cry, elusive and fleeting as a dream voice—and, still doubting, they heard it again.

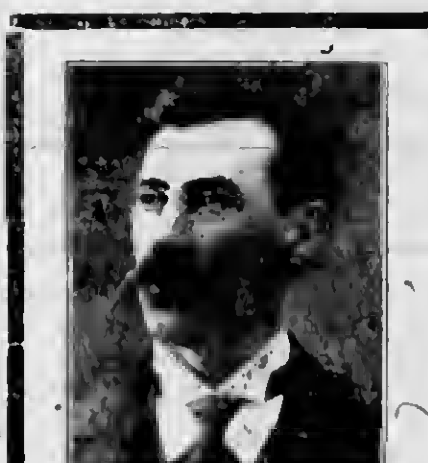

"Thank God! We'll save 'em yet!" cried Captain, and they drove the canoe bolting toward the sound.

Barton and Sullivan had fought the cold and wind stoutly hour after hour till they found their great foe was breaching up in the heaving waters.

Then the horror of it had struck the Kid till he raved and cursed up and down their little island as it dwindled gradually to a small acre.

He had finally yielded to the weight

If Boss Wilson Meets a Statesman.

(Melody: Comin' Thro' the Rye)

If Boss Wilson meets a statesman with a weather-eye
 And with patronage he bribes him need a body cry?
 "We should worry," shout the workers,
 "there's no reason why."
 As long as Wilson gains his point, and we,
 the boys, get pie.

If Boss Wilson tells Bill Bryan rushing through the town,
 How the patronage he handles, need Bill
 Bryan frown?
 "We should worry," shout the workers,
 "there's no reason why."
 As long as Wilson gains his point, and we,
 the boys, get pie.

If Boss Wilson scores his rivals in the tolley game,
 Need a body be astonished, and cry out:
 For shame!
 "We should worry," shout the workers,
 "there's no reason why."
 As long as Wilson gains his point, and we,
 the boys, get pie.

If Boss Wilson practised logic, and assumed the shield,
 To abide by his own doctrines, wouldn't it be grand?

THE ROLLING STONE.

There is an old saying—it surely is true—
 That a rolling stone gathers no moss.
 Indeed, when a stone goes rolling about
 It is sure to meet with a loss.

A piece breaks off here, a corner cracks
 there,
 And of its powder 'tis ground.
 Until at the end of its rolling about
 No vestige of it may be found.

And this is all true of the changeable
 Jack
 Who is ever changing his trade.
 He knows just a little of any old thing.
 But by him no progress is made.

For "a jack of all trades is a master of none."
 And such tinkers can't thrive today.
 It's the man who's an expert, a specialist, now
 To whom fortune gives right of way.

The same with the fellow who changes his job.
 Who floats everywhere with the tide.
 He's like an old hawk that floats here and
 there,
 With never a place to abide.

But the ladder of fame is straight as a die,
 And he who would get to the top Must hustle and bustle and stick to the rung.

Climb on and climb up and not stop.
 C. M. BARNITZ.

KURIOS FROM KORRESPONDENTS

Q. Does it require exactly twenty one days to hatch chicken? A. Highly fertilized eggs often pip on the nine-tenth day, and their chicks come out on the twentieth. Chicks should be out and dry by evening of twenty-first unless a cold soap retards or over-heat causes chicks to kick out prematurely.

Q. Is it necessary to have litter on the scratch floor in the warm season?
 A. Yes. Litter keeps the floor clean, and there are stormy days, long rains, when hens should be kept in, and grain in the litter keeps them busy exercising. This especially applies in states where the rainy season prevails. Water soaked hens are subject to lotestinal colds, and they work havoc.

Q. Are brown shelled eggs richer than white? How far may eggs be shipped for hatching? A. No. Distance doesn't count if they are packed and handled right, do not undergo cold or heat, are fresh at the start and are not on the road too long.
 They are now shipped from London to New York, from California to Maine and yet hatch a good average.

Q. Can you see a germ in an egg without its being under incubation?

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

Whenever May Irwin, who plays Lu
 "Mme. Sherry," gets symptoms of a brainstorm she blows herself away to Bridgeville, N. J., where her sister, Flo Irwin, a retired actress, has a poultry farm that produces 1,500 eggs a week.
 Every breed has its distinctive shape, and every variety of a breed must carry that shape to be true to the name.
 Study breed shape, and keep your birds up to the dot.

English and German markets receive much poultry and eggs from the Bal-kao states. The effects of the Balkan war were especially felt at Christmas time, when both markets were short on turkeys, geese and eggs, and unheard of prices ruled.
 There is a prejudice held by some people against goose as an article of diet. Some object to plucking them, others to the fat. An old fat, strong goose isn't an epicurean delight, and if a man gets his first taste from a greasy outtake it doesn't taste for more, but if it's a smooth, milk fat, tender green gosling that's certainly a toothsome, delicious goose of another color.

A gamecock belonging to Alderman Schurz of Hammond, Ill., was ordered for killing Duke, a bulldog belonging to Michael Almont. The rooster fought the dog who arrested him and when arraigned before Judge Burnett crowded so loud the judge couldn't hear himself think. The judge dismissed the case and praised the rooster for kicking the pup.

Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Texas, Kansas, Indiana and Ohio raise over 40 per cent of the poultry in the United States. Will our old blue stocking eastern states please wake up and take notice.

We don't know the poultry highbrow who originated the theory that Mother Hen is responsible for the white diarrhea germ and her eggs bear this impure that kills millions of chicks per year, but it reminds for him to explain why you very, very seldom see a case among chicks hatched as good old Mother Hen only can do it.

Let these highbrows own up that it's an incubator nature fake defect and then get to work and make a machine that won't do it.
 New Yorkers are great chicken eaters. Their last year's poultry bill was over $20,000,000, or about $1.50 per head. New Yorkers are great on egg breakfasts and omelets and used not only the home product last year, but millions of outside eggs. Please note also that she is appropriating more money than any other state for poultry culture and intends to raise all her own poultry and eggs in the near future also.

NEW POTATO DISEASE.

Silver Scurf is Spreading Rapidly.
 Infected Tubers Must Be Rejected.

A new disease, silver scurf (Sclerotium tuberosum atrovirens harzi), has recently been introduced from Europe and is spreading rapidly in our eastern states, says a recent bulletin of the United States department of agriculture.

This disease is marked by dark areas on the skin of the tuber, which on close examination may be seen to be

POTATO AFFECTED WITH SILVER SCURF.
 [The lower part of this tuber is affected;
 the upper normal.]

spotted with fine black points. This fungus does not produce a decay of the potato, but after the skin is killed there is a rapid loss of moisture, and the tubers shrivel and take on a silvery appearance, greatly depreciating their market value.

This fungus is apparently not killed by seed disinfection; therefore all infected potatoes must be rejected.

Stretching across Western Australia is a rabbit tight fence, said to be the longest in the world. It extends for a distance of 1,200 miles without a break, except for gates. It begins in the temperate regions and ends in the tropics, and sometimes for nearly a hundred miles it never passes a human habitation. The fence is divided into sections, each of which is under the control of an inspector. These inspectors have boundary riders, whose duty it is to constantly ride up and down their section of the long barrier and keep it in perfect condition. Since the fence was erected it has prevented herds of rabbits from overrunning and devastating the region beyond.

Word was received Wednesday that R. S. Swinton, nurse and child, would arrive in Charlevoix at the 7:30 a. m., Thursday morning. Mr. Swinton left Manila P. I., about the 25th of July, shortly after the death of Mrs. Swinton, formerly and well known here as Miss Arville Dunham. Details of her sudden demise are meager, but it is known that her body was cremated and the ashes would be brought here for interment. Mr. Swinton has the deepest sympathy of his many Charlevoix friends in his bereavement.

Representative Lindquist, of the eleventh congressional district of Michigan is said to be trying to interest his fellow members in his pure fabric bill by mailing them circulars just as he did to voters during his late campaign. We wonder if he also encloses the customary advertising of campaign days telling them where they can buy their clothing cheapest. We can imagine the sort of offended dignity emitted by the average congressman when he receives one of these multigraph circulars with the signature rubbed stamped.—Kalamazoo Leader.

OPENS THURSDAY

Majestic Theatre leased by Eugene Adams of East Jordan.

The Majestic Theatre, which has been closed since August 27, will again be open to the public tomorrow evening (Thursday), having been leased by Mr. Eugene Adams of East Jordan, who manages the popular play house in that city.

Mr. Adams comes highly recommended and states that under his control the Majestic will continue to run the highest grade of film obtainable and give to the people of Charlevoix a good, clean evening's entertainment.

C. V. Miles will manage the theatre for Mr. Adams, and is an experienced and competent man. Vandeville and stock companies will be booked, and its patrons can be assured of their money's worth every time they attend.

Four reels of pictures will be run, and the program will be changed every night.

Struck by Lightning.

During the electric storm Monday night, the barn of Albert Parsons, who lives south-east of Norwood, in Banks township, was struck by lightning about 1:00 p. m. and burned to the ground with all its contents. About 20 tons of hay, a quantity of wheat, rye, and oats were also burned. The loss of the barn and its contents will amount to fully $2,000, with $700 insurance.

What is an Orator?
The true orator is the man who can make people laugh, cry and feel what he says. In truth, the genuine orator is the man who has humor enough in his soul to bring the smile to the face, pathos enough in his heart to bring the tear to the eye and dignity enough in his bearing to persuade or move men. He is an exponent of the spoken word. He is a pilgrim moving toward the home of the ideal. He is the embodiment of earnestness, enthusiasm and eloquence.—Exchange.

HOT BEEF PIES.

LEFTOVER beef may be used in making substantial pies for the home dinner. If there is no cold beef cheap cuts of beef may be used for this purpose. A little gravy makes them richer, and with a biscuit dough crust the pies are much nicer than with the ordinary pie crust.

Without a Crust.

Hotpot.—Take for this one pound of cold beef, a pint of canned tomatoes, a large onion, a half dozen potatoes and some good gravy or stock. Cut the meat in slices and fry in fat or drippings; also fry the sliced onion until browned and boil the potatoes until half done. Put a layer of meat in a shallow pudding dish, then onions, tomatoes and potato slices. Spread a little butter over the top and then pour over all some good stock well seasoned. Bake in a moderate oven until browned. Serve in the dish in which cooked.

With Biscuit Dough.

Beef Potpie.—Take pieces of contrived beef of equal size, put into a sauce pan with cold water and stew for about two hours with the lid on the pan. Add a few slices of fat pork or bacon, an onion, salt and pepper to taste and thicken with flour and water. Turn into a dish lined with biscuit dough such as is used for dumplings, cover with more of the dough and bake in a quick oven until done. Turn out on a warm dish and serve immediately.

With Plain Pie Crust.

Beef and Onion Pie.—Take one and a half pounds of lean beef about the size of walnuts, stew gently in a small amount of water till tender, season to taste with salt and pepper. Line the sides of a good sized pudding dish with plain pastry, half fill it with sliced onions, put meat on top, draining it free from gravy; cover with pastry, cutting a slit on top; cover with buttered paper and bake in a moderate oven. When done heat the gravy that was drained from the meat, pour it over the pie and serve at once.

One good look at this Wooltex Motor Coat made us buy it

When the makers of Wooltex first showed us this coat we bought it.

We saw in it the distinctive and exclusive Wooltex style lines—recognized the influence of the Paris Wooltex Style Bureau in its design, and felt at once that some of our best trade would be glad we secured it for them.

As to the quality, that is all taken care of by the Wooltex guarantee of two full seasons' satisfactory wear.

It surprised us when we were told we could get the coat to sell to you at

of the cold, which crushed resistance out of him, and settled, despairing and listless, upon the ice. Barton dragged him to his feet and forced him round their rocking prison, begging him to brace up, to fight it out like a man, till the other twisted on resting and dropped to his seat again.

The older man struck deliberately at the whitening face of his freezing companion, who recognized the well meant insult and refused to be roused into activity. Then to their ears came the faint cries of George, and in answer to their screams through the gloom they beheld a long covered skin canoe and the anxious faces of their frier.

C. a rose from his cramped seat, an appling his crackling garments free, he bent where they had frozen, he wriggled out of the hole in the deck and grasped the weeping Barton.

"Come, come, old boy! It's all right now," he said.

"Oh, Charlie," cried the other, "I might have known you'd try to save us. You're just in time, though, for the kid's about all in."

Sullivan apathetically nodded and sat down again.

"Hurry up there. This ain't no G. A. R. encampment, and you ain't got no time to spare," said George, who had dragged the canoe out and with a paddle broke the sheets of ice which covered it. "I'll be too dark to see anything in half an hour."

The night, hastened by the storm, was closing rapidly, and they realized another need of haste, for even as they spoke a crack had crawled through the ice where they stood and, widening as it went, left but a heaving cauldron supporting them.

George spoke quietly to Captain, while Barton strove to animate the kid. "You and Barton must take him ashore and hurry him down to the village. He's most gone now."

"But you?" questioned the other. "We'll have to come back for you as soon as we put him ashore."

"Never mind me," roughly interrupted George. "It's too late to get back here. When you get ashore I'll be dark. Besides, Sullivan's freezing, and you'll have to rush him through quick. I'll stay here."

"No, no, George," cried the other as the meaning of it bore in upon him. "I got you into this thing, and it's my place to stay here. You must go."

But the big man had hurried to Sullivan and forced him to a seat in the middle opening of the canoe.

"Come, come," he cried to the others; "you can't spend all night here—if you want to save the kid you've got to hurry. You take the front seat there, Barton," and as he did so George turned to the protesting Captain. "Shut up, curse you, and get in!"

"I won't do it," rebelled the other.

"I can't let you lay down your life in this way when I made you come."

George thrust a cold face within an inch of the other's and grimly said: "If they hadn't stopped me I'd beat you into dog meat this morning, and if you don't quit this sniveling I'll do it yet. Now, get in there and paddle to beat h—l or you'll never make it back, quick!"

"I'll come back for you then, George, if I live to the shore," Captain cried, while the other slid the burdened canoe into the icy waters.

As they drove the boat into the storm Captain realized the difficulty of working their way against the gale. On him fell the added burden of holding their course into the wind and avoiding the chilling ice cakes. The spray whipped into his face like shot and froze as it struck his features. He strained at his paddle till the sweat soaked out of him and the cold air filled his aching lungs.

Unconsciously the merciless frost cut his face like a keen blade till he felt the numb paralysis which told him his features were numbing under the touch of the cold.

An arm's length ahead the shoulders of the kid protruded from the deck.

Here where he had sunk again into the death sleep, while Barton, in the forward seat, heaved wearily on his ice-choked paddle, meaning as he strove to shelter his face from the sting of the blizzard.

An endless time they battled with the storm, slowly gaining, foot by foot, till in the darkness ahead they saw the wall of shore ice and swung into his partial shelter.

Dragging the now unconscious Sullivan from the boat, Captain rolled and thrashed him, while Barton, too weak and exhausted to assist, frantically strove to warm his stiffened limbs.

In answer to their shouts the team appeared maddened by the lash of the squaw. Then they wrapped Sullivan in warm robes and forced scorching brandy down his throat till he coughed weakly and begged them to let him rest.

"You must hurry him to the Indian village," directed Captain. "He'll only lose some fingers and toes now, maybe, but you're got to hurry."

"Aren't you coming, too?" queried Barton. "We'll hire some Eskimos to go after George. I'll pay 'em anything."

"No, I'm going back to him now. He'll freeze before we could send help, and besides they wouldn't come out in the storm and the dark."

"But you can't work that big canoe alone. If you got out there and don't find him you'll never get back. Charlie let me go, too," he said, then apologized. "I'm afraid I won't last, though! I'm too weak."

"Get in there and paddle to beat h—l!"

The squaw, who had questioned not at the absence of her lord, now touched Captain's arm. "Come," she said; "I go with you." Then, addressing Barton: "You quick go Indian house; white man die, maybe. Quick! I go like this!"

"Ah, Charlie, I'm afraid you'll never make it," cried Barton, and, wincing at his friend's hand, he suggested into the darkness behind the sled where lay the tired and shivering Sullivan.

Captain left a corner of the starting waters free in him, and a paddle shook him forward till he saw the silent squaw waiting for him at the ice edge. He shivered as the wind searched through his dampened parka and hardened the wet clothing next to his body, but he took his place and dug the paddle fiercely into the water till the waves lapped the hair of his gauntlets.

The memory of that scudding trip through the darkness was always cloudy and visioned. Periods of keen alertness alternated with moments when his weakness bore upon him till he would have sworn he was wondering what it all meant.

It was the woman's shivering cry which caught the first answering cry and her hands which steered the intricate course to the heaving berg where the sailor crouched, for at their approach Captain had yielded to the pressure of weakness and, in his relief at the finding, the blade flung from his hands.

The dream of quiet dreams, broken by the chilling lash of spray from the strokes of the others as they drove the craft back against the wind, and the only partly awake from his lethargy when George's voice had him from his seat and forced him down the rough trail toward warmth and safety. Soon, however, the stagnant blood tingled through his veins, and under the shelter of the bluffs they reached the village, where they found the anxious men waiting.

Skillful natives had worked the frost from Sullivan's members, and the stimulants in the sled had put new life into Barton as well. So, as the three crawled wearily through the dog filled funnel of the igloo, they were met by two wet and thankful men.

When they had been supplied of their frozen furs and the welcome heat of whiskey and the hot meat in their blood eagerly approached the whither, who rested beside his mate.

"George, you're the bravest man I ever knew," and your woman is worthy of you," he said. He continued slowly, "I'm sorry about the fight this morning too."

The big man rose and, crushing the extended palm of his grasp, said: "We'll just be then as double, partner. You're as strong as I ever saw." Then he added: "It was too long then before I learned how when they did, but we can push it up whenever you say," and as the other snuggled shook his head he continued, "Well, I'm glad if you're sure heat me the next time."

Sure to Be Michigan's Greatest Exposition

This Year's State Fair Bound to Prove the Biggest and Best Ever Staged In the Wolverine State.

WHEN the portals of the Michigan State Fair roll back on Sept. 15 it will mark the opening of the sixty-fourth annual holiday of the Wolverine State and incidentally usher in the most complete and best balanced exposition ever presented in the west.

With an array of attractions never before exhibited in the west and the show buildings packed to the gunns with exhibitors, all previous records will be surpassed, and the 1913 Fair will be known as the nearest approach to a perfect community reunion ever staged. Here will be exhibited the handwork of Michigan's soil hands and brush the agriculturist and in industrial wealth of the richest commonwealth in the Union, displayed in a highly attractive manner.

Not only will there be exhibitors but there will also be actual practical working demonstrations, which will add to the interest and give them to apply his knowledge more profitably to the work of the Michigan State Fair of 1913 is not merely to amuse, but to instructively entertain and educate.

More than ever this year the State Fair will be the people's holiday, the state's big educational outing. It has taken a lot of money to bring this about, $3,400,000 in premiums and prizes being hung out to tempt attractions and act as a magnet for exhibitors.

This huge sum has attracted the lead live stock, vehicle and industrial exhibitions in America and abroad, to say nothing of furnishing them, whole some amusements, such as horse racing, auto speeding, bicycle demonstrations and free outdoor attractions.

To aid the 1913 management wishes to emphasize the idea that the Michigan State Fair is a product of frivility in the shape of light, superficial entertainment, but rather that the fair exerts an enlightening influence throughout the Wolverine State.

Remember that Sept. 15-20 are the days set apart for the big commonwealth reunion and it is your duty to contribute your part to the success of the same by being present.

Fair's Policy

By the Hon. D. D. AITKEN, President of the Michigan State Fair.

HON. D. D. AITKEN

EVERY exhibitor that agrees to effectively reduce the cost of living the production must be in the show.

This, being granted, it is obvious that he or she to accomplish it measures for in the show.

It must be shown the producers. Every means of effecting this end, aside from actual demonstration, have proved fallacious. Demonstration of ways and means of improved farming has been of immediate benefit in enlarging the animal yield.

Demonstration work is the mission of the Michigan State Fair and must how well it performs is a question up to its patrons.

We may secure all the best experts and the most modern devices for soil and fertilizing, give suggestions as to land reclamation and its soil analysis, soil and the many other things which we will do from Sept. 15 to 20 and it will be largely thrown to the winds if visitors do not throw off their "you'll convince me over my dead body attitude" and be open to honest conviction.

The idea that the Michigan State Fair is a place to "come to and gaze around, take a few lines at the fairs, see the races and go home" is an unprogressive one. Don't let me wrong on this.

All these things are instinctively in the mind of the fairgoer, that is what we have them there for. No one is a fairgoer because in the time honored axiom that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" than I am. It is the combination of education and pleasure that we aim for.

This year when you come to the Fair talk with the successful men in your special line of endeavor. Ask them what methods they used to produce such fine stock as they have on exhibition. They will be glad to tell you if you are sensible enough to listen. Talk to the implement men. They will explain the good points of their vehicles. Look around and see if there isn't something you could add to your household equipment which would make the duties of your wife lighter.

We want the Michigan State Fair to be a benefit to the entire family. We want it to be the family convention. When we have accomplished these things we will have the greatest exhibition for educational good extent. We can only do this with the wholehearted cooperation of the people of the state of Michigan.

ANIMAL SHOW ENGAGED.

Wortham and Allen's Organization to Give Daily Performances.

Wortham and Allen's Carnival and Animal Shows have been secured at a big cost for this year's Michigan State Fair Sept. 15-20. This remarkable organization enjoys the full confidence of every big fair management because it furnishes clean and wholesome amusements.

The Wortham and Allen feature enables patrons to visit the Fair and enjoy a circus at the same time. A circus that is instructive as well as interesting. The famous troupe of trained ponies, which always furnish a part of delight for the children, will be more comprehensive than ever.

These ponies will be fitted to chariots and raced like their big thoroughbred cousins. The children may visit the Shetland pony tent whenever the little fellows are not performing and give them a few loving pats.

What the Fair Is

A gigantic convention of Michigan's agricultural and industrial interests.

A postgraduate course for successful farmers and a primary summer school for the boys and girls.

An educational outing for the entire family, whether from the city or rural districts.

An annual proof of the greatness of the Wolverine State.

A Reminder

Don't forget to take a ride on the new great roller coaster at the Michigan State Fair Sept. 15-20. It is also a body of fun for the children have the time of their lives.

A Couple of Bulls

A professor, whose pupils made too much noise, let the following invective slip out: "Gentlemen, if everybody be silent, we shall be better able to discuss the cover who makes the row."

This reminds us of a medical report, which began thus: "There exists a great number of families in London who have died of cholera."—London Telegraph

Backing Up the Purchaser

If we didn't have an eye to the future, and if we didn't care what you or anybody else was going to think of us, we could sell engines and other machines for much less money, but we could not put I H C quality into them. The kinks would start coming in right away, and soon there would be no market for I H C engines.

I H C engines stand for everything that is opposed to such a policy. The I H C way is to build always for the respect and good will of the American farmer, and to that end it has been successfully working for many years. The dealer who sells you an I H C engine expects on its merits to do business with you again. The purchaser of an buys security and safety with it. He banks on the many years of square dealing and the reputation back of all I H C machines. He knows it is the best engine bargain because it is very efficient service in all kinds of farm work—pumping, sawing wood, spraying, running repair shop, grindstone, cream separator, etc. He knows that I H C responsibility for it lasts as long as the engine is in service on his farm. I H C oil and gas engines operate on gas, gasoline, naphtha, kerosene, distillate, and alcohol. Sizes range from 1 to 50-horse power. They are built vertical, horizontal, portable, stationary, skidded, air-cooled and water-cooled. I H C oil tractors range in size from 6-12 to 30-60-horse power, for plowing, threshing, etc.

Look over an I H C engine at the local dealer's. Learn from him what it will do for you, or write for catalogues to

IN SEARCH OF BEAN SEED

M. A. C. Man Looking For Seed Free From Disease.

Crop Ruined in Southern Michigan by Disease Similar to Blight.

Prof. A. R. Potts of the farm crops department, East Lansing, has come to western Michigan in search of bean seed that is free from anthracnose which is a vegetable disease that is ruining the bean crop of southern Michigan.

This disease has existed in the state for many years and each year it has become more severe and this year it is causing a very heavy loss. In fact the damage to the growing crop is so great that many fields of beans will not be harvested. The disease has some of the characteristics of the blight. It is very contagious and is carried from plant to plant by the wind and by the implements used in cultivating. Prof. Potts recently inspected 58 fields in the central part of the state and found indications of the disease in nearly all. In some cases the damage was great. During past years Michigan beans have been in demand by the farmers of the southern states for seed, but now that the plants have become diseased, the southern farmers are looking elsewhere, and the Michigan bean, which has brought the top price in the market in the past, is in danger of losing its position. Prof. Potts feels sure, however, that in the northern and western part of the state he can find fields that are as yet free from the disease and by getting the seed from these fields and taking it to southern Michigan and having the farmers start anew, he believes that the disease can be stamped out. Last year the Michigan bean brought about $2.25 but this year it will be somewhat lower in price because of the quantity of old beans now in the hands of the farmers and the dealers and because the anthracnose is curtailing the demand for Michigan beans.

As yet no spraying solution has been discovered that will adequately control anthracnose although the college experts are at work upon the problem. The men are positive as to whether the disease carries over the winter in the ground or only on the seed. They hope to know soon.

DO NOT QUALIFY

Many School Officers Fail to Meet the Legal Requirements.

At a conservative estimate, less than two thirds of the school officers of the state of Michigan have legally qualified for their offices. In order to qualify for the office, the individual must, each time he or she is elected, file a written acceptance within ten days after the election and an affidavit to the effect that the officer is a citizen of the United States, 21 years of age, a resident of the district at least three months previous to the election, owner of property assessed in the district for school taxes and his name appears on the assessment roll. In case of a deed both husband and wife may hold office, regardless of which name appears on the assessment roll.

Heretofore this affidavit had to be taken before a notary, public or justice of peace. Beginning August 1st, it may also be taken before the senior officer in point of service on the board. School officers who have failed to qualify within the prescribed time may do so later unless the vacancy will have to be filled by the township board or the other members of the school board.

TO BUY FROM LIST

Township and School Boards Limited in Buying Library Books.

No longer will school district and township boards be able to fill the shelves of their libraries at random. Beginning with August 14, the boards are prohibited from using public money to purchase library books except from a list to be issued by the superintendent of public instruction and the state librarian which is being compiled now and will soon be ready for distribution. The list will be an extensive one made up of the best books for such libraries.

Many books are found in school and township libraries which are not only worthless but sometimes harmful and so the most valuable equipment a community possesses becomes a detriment. Educators today are a unit in declaring that a well selected library containing plenty of good story books for the children in the younger grades especially, is a most essential feature of a good school.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

IN THE HORSE BARN.

Don't forget—water, hay, water again, then grain.

If a horse is tired give him some hay to nibble on for an hour or so. Grain should never be given to a weary horse. Let him rest first.

Salt should always be kept before the horses. They will then eat just what is needed.

Horses should be frequently watered, but let the horse that is overheated have only a few swallows until he is cool.

Look out that your horses are not overcome with heat. Drive and work carefully.

Feed more oats and alfalfa and less corn now, as corn lacks sufficient muscle-making protein for the working horse.

In stallion service does a man generally gets just about what he pays for. Soundness should be the basis in selecting a draft stallion.

EDUCATING THE COLT.

Firm and Gentle Methods in Training Give Best Results.

By the time a colt is ready to wear he can be halter broken with very little trouble if you spend a few minutes each day petting and feeding him out of hand little things he likes, says J. E. Myer in the American Agriculturist. When you want to halter him go about it in an easy manner. Take the halter into the stable and let him touch it with his nose. As soon as he thinks it won't hurt him rub it gently about his head letting him feel it when he seems to be in doubt. Do not try to hold him as you put it on, but wait until he will allow you. Then put it on and take it off a few times after which you can leave it on or put it on without any trouble.

When the colt is large enough to harness take the skeleton part of the harness and make him acquainted with it by letting him touch it with his nose. Then rub it down his neck and across his back till he doesn't mind it. Do not try to break him in one day. About twenty to thirty minutes a day is as long as you can keep his attention.

After he is used to the harness put an open bridle on him in place of the halter and have an easy bit, over which do not allow him to get his tongue. Take him into a small enclosure if possible and teach him to guide. In doing this and until you hitch him up it is best to run the reins through the shaft carrier. Touch him to guide one way before trying the other. After he will guide easily both ways pull him first one way, then the other. His mouth is very tender, so do not be rough with him.

Now you are ready to teach him the command "Whoa." Start him with a little pull or a touch and stop him by a seesaw pull saying "Whoa" at the same time. Stop him at the same place for a few times till he stops of his own accord; then make him go on and stop anywhere you want to. Reduce your pull on the lines till he stops at the command. When ready to teach "Get up" let him stop; then pull very lightly on one line; touch him with a whip and say "Get up," all at the very same time. Repeat till he starts and stops at either command.

He will now be ready to hitch up. Put the harness on and drill him two or three minutes as before, then hitch him to something light if possible, let him know that he is attached to a rig, shake the shafts against him gently and rattle the wheels, have an assistant help him start the vehicle, go a few feet and allow him to stop and think about what he has done. Have a helper assist him to turn by pressing the shafts against him and back up by pulling the vehicle back. When he is afraid of anything talk to him gently and allow him to approach the object and touch it with his nose. If you lead him up to anything don't allow him to hurry when you are leaving it. Be firm, but gentle, with the colt and you will develop a horse that will repay you with good, honest work all his life.

When Pastures Are Dry.

The late summer is always a trying time for the dairyman. Flies are bad and pastures short. As soon as any shrinkage is noticed in the milk flow some provision should be made for supplementary feed. Fortunately indeed is the dairyman who has a supply of silage left over to fall back upon at this time of the year. Soiling crops can be utilized to good advantage at this season. The results of allowing a dairy cow to shrink seriously in milk flow during this trying period often extend into the fall and winter season. Even though it may seem troublesome and expensive to keep up the milk flow at this period, it sometimes will pay in the results which will follow later in the season. —Kansas Farmer

Permanent Pasture For the Boar.

It will pay you to go to some trouble to get an acre lot well set with permanent grass for the boar to run in. Having running water in the lot if possible, build him a shed, light on three sides and open on the south, and with plenty of grass he will cost you very little feed. —Farm Progress

Sorghum as a Soiling Crop.

Sorghum is one of the best crops for soiling, especially for dairy cows and swine. Every farmer should have an acre or two of very rich land to plant in sorghum for late feeding. There are very few crops equal to sorghum in yield when conditions are favorable for it.

USE ALL THE CORN.

Silo Makes Available Feeding Value of Stalk as Well as Ear.

By the use of the silo and harvesting the corn plant for silage the feeding value of the plant is increased from $10 to $12 per acre. It is estimated that 60 per cent of the feeding value of the corn plant is in the ear of corn and 40 per cent is in the stalk.

If a field of corn which would make forty bushels per acre is harvested in the usual way of gathering the corn and leaving the stalk stand we have harvested only 60 per cent of the crop. The forty bushels of corn at 50 cents per bushel are worth $20, but if the stalks have twofold the feeding value of the grain the stalks are worth from $10 to $12 or $15 per acre, depending upon the quality of the crop and the condition they are in when harvested for silage.

If the stalks are left in the field they have a feeding value of from $1 to $1.50 or $2.50 per acre. This decreased value of the cornstalk when left in the field is due to the fact that when the stalk is left standing it loses its moisture and the sugar becomes hard, woody and indigestible.

It is therefore evident that to obtain the maximum feeding value of the corn crop it should be harvested and made into silage and that the use of the silo will increase the feeding value of the corn plants from $10 to $12 per acre. —Roy C. Potts, Department of Dairy Husbandry, Oklahoma A. and M. College.

Regarding the new members of the teaching force:

Mr. Fletcher, who will have charge of the science in the high school, taking Mr. Carpenter's place, is a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural College and is well prepared in the line of work.

Miss Lena Horst is a graduate of Olivet College and will have charge of the languages.

Mr. Ewing is a graduate of Alma College. Both Mr. Ewing and Mr. Fletcher have had athletic experience and will help in coaching the athletics.

Mr. Pierce, principal of the Central school will have charge of the grammar grade athletic activities, in connection with the County Y. M. C. A. work among the grammar grades and rural schools of the county. Mr. Pierce has been one of the strong rural teachers of the county.

Miss Christine Peterson, who will have charge of the hand work in the 5th, 6th and 7th grades and will also assist in the academic work of the 7th and 8th grades, is a graduate of Western State Normal at Kalamazoo. Miss Peterson has had several years' experience, the last four in the Godfrey avenue school, in Grand Rapids, and comes to us fresh from a summer's work in Stout Institute, Menominee, Wisconsin.

Miss Audrey Correll, 2nd and 3rd grades, Central school is a Central State Normal graduate and an experienced teacher. Miss Correll spent the summer in Chicago University.

The new Michigan text book law gives authority to the Board of Education to purchase books and sell them to the pupils at cost with a sufficient amount added to cover freight and cost of handling. In accordance with the provision, the board have arranged for the purchase of the books and sale at the school house at 10 per cent above net price. This will mean a reduction of from 10 to 15 per cent from former prices.

Another provision of the new law requires the board to purchase the books of pupils leaving the district at a reasonable price, depending upon the condition of the books.

All the school buildings have been thoroughly cleaned and everything is in readiness for the beginning of school. The upper rooms of the high school building have been refitted and the laboratory has been moved to the lower floor. The foreign enrollment promises to be larger than ever.

He is survived by a widow and a daughter.

He was a brother of the late Orin Bolton, formerly of the manufacturing firm of Baldwin, Tuthill & Bolton of Grand Rapids.

STUNTS OF RAVING MANIAC

Made Farm Hands Turn Somersaults at Point of Gun.

Threatens Life of Men and Then Disappears into the Woods.

Wilbur Holmes, Emmet county hermit at Harbor Springs, secreted himself behind a fence last Friday and for five hours held up Louis Caskey and twelve farmhands with a shotgun, forcing them to turn somersaults in the road and perform other antics.

Holmes got employment from Caskey, but soon after disappeared. He returned later, crazed with drink, and when ordered from the place by Caskey, threatened to kill him. He was thereupon forgotten till suddenly he leveled a shotgun over the fence at Caskey. A warning from Tom Covey, engineer of the thrashing machine, caused Caskey to run to shelter, and Holmes did not fire.

Covey attempted to disarm him, but Holmes threatened to shoot if he did not lie down and roll over. Other threshers rushed to Covey's aid, but Holmes treated them in a similar manner and forced them to take turns performing gymnastics. Finally he retreated into the woods, covering them with the gun.

Under Sheriff Doherty of Petoskey and Deputy Ransom of Harbor Springs surprised Holmes at his hut and put him in the county jail at Petoskey.

CLOSE SCHOOLS

People May Decide Question at Annual or Special Meetings.

If the school electors of a district desire to close the school and send the children to another district or districts, they may decide to do so at an annual or special meeting. In this way, the district organization is maintained and the primary money is not forfeited. Heretofore action of this kind could be taken only at the annual meeting but the recent legislature amended the act. All school electors, whether voters because they are taxpayers or the parents or guardians of children on the census list may vote on this question.

Educators insist that a satisfactory school cannot be maintained with less than ten pupils and urge districts which can conveniently send their children elsewhere to close their schools with small enrollments. The board may pay their tuition and transportation, if necessary, out of any money on hand, except library money, and may vote a tax for such purpose.

Attorney-General Grant Fellows rules that if the electors vote to close their school after the board has hired a teacher for the next year, the district cannot be held to the contract.

MUST PAY FINE MONIES

Attorney General Makes Ruling on Local Question.

Will Change Practice That Has Prevailed for Years in Country.

Our readers will remember reading in the report of J. A. Dresser, the expert accountant who examined the county books last fall, that the justices of the peace in the cities and villages had been following what appears to have become a common practice, of turning in fines collected for violation of local ordinances into the city or village treasury instead of reporting and turning it in to the county officials, as Dresser insisted that law required.

The interest of the public in the matter is found in the fact that if fine-money is turned into the city and village treasuries it helps out their taxation to that extent, while if it is turned over to the county it goes to swell the library fund, which is apportioned to the several townships and school districts, and can be used for library purposes only.

The County Board instructed Prosecuting Attorney Fitch to investigate this matter and report. In decisions examined the question was not left as clear as could be desired, so he submitted the following to the Attorney General:

"It is the practice in this county for justices of the peace to turn over to their respective municipalities all fines collected by them for violations of their various municipal ordinances. Is this proper, or should all fines be paid over to the county treasurer?"

The Attorney General replying thereto, says:

"I would respectfully call your attention to Act No. 32, of the Public Acts of 1903. Also to sections 1360 to 1371 of the Township Officers' Guide, and section 14 of article XI of the 1908 constitution. From a reading of the above you will no doubt see that it is the duty of the justice of the peace to return the proceeds from fines and penalties to the county treasurer, who in turn makes the distribution to the several townships, districts, township districts, villages and cities in the county for school and library purposes."

From the foregoing it would seem that Mr. Dresser was right in his contention, and that the cities and villages may be asked to come across with the fine money they have received improperly.—Enter price.

LUCKY SEASON

No Railroad or Boat Accidents so far This Summer Have Been Reported.

So far this season, despite congestion on railroad and boat lines, not a single person has been killed or seriously injured within the imaginary boundaries of the northern Michigan resorts.

This record is remarkable, scarcely a season has passed heretofore but what several deaths under car wheels have been reported.

The scarcity of accidents in the 1913 resort season is due to the greater care exercised by trainmen. While the fliers of the east are dashing with car loads of passengers to destruction in order to make up a few seconds in time, the trains in northern Michigan prefer to run a little more slowly and reach the destination in safety.

BROILERS GO UP IN SMOKE

R. C. Korth's Chicken Coop Burned to the Ground

About 300 Fine Fowls Burn With Building—Narrow Escape

Forced back from the only door in his chicken coop by flames caused by an overturned lantern, R. C. Korth and brother, Carl, had a narrow escape from being burned to death Monday evening.

Mr. Korth, who supplies a large number of our summer visitors with choice broilers, and his brother, were in the coop Monday evening picking out young chickens to be killed the following morning. He had placed his lantern on a box and was busy at work, when a hen flew against the lantern, overturning it, spilling oil on the floor of the coop, which was covered with straw. The oil caught fire from the flame of the wick, in less than a minute had spread over the entire floor.

The entrance to the coop was on the east side of the building and the flames spread so rapidly that Mr. Korth and his brother were unable to escape through the door.

At the west end of the building there was formerly a window which had been nailed over with slats and covered over with tar paper. Mr. Korth and his brother rushed to this and by the time they had tore off the coverings, the flames had reached them. They dove through the opening, but Mr. Korth had his hair and eyebrows singed and face slightly blistered, before he could escape from the burning building.

Before the fire department arrived the building was nearly burned to the ground, but adjoining buildings were saved.

The building which was destroyed contained about 300 chickens, four brooders, some feed and other supplies, which are a total loss. Among the chickens burned were about 75 of Mr. Korth's choice White Wyandottes and White Rocks, of which he was a successful breeder, and had intend to exhibit in the poultry shows this fall and winter.

The total loss will reach beyond $800 with about $500 insurance.

AMERICAN ROAD CONGRESS

Mayor Nichols Asked to Appoint Three Delegates to Attend Session.

Mayor Nichols of Charlevoix Michigan, has been requested by the Hon. Logan Waller Page, President of the American Road Congress and Director of the United States Office of Public Roads, to name three delegates to attend the sessions of the Congress at Detroit during the week of September 29 as the representatives of the city.

Twenty-eight organizations are taking part in the congress under leadership of the American Highway Association and the American Automobile Association. In his letter to the mayor, President Page calls attention to the fact that practically every state highway commissioner will be present and take part in discussing the important problems of road construction and maintenance, and that some of the foremost men in public life will devote their attention to the great question of national aid to road improvement in an endeavor to work out a policy which may be submitted to the congress of the United States with the support of the organized road movement of America.

The Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. David F. Houston, will be the spokesman of the national administration at the Congress. An important move bearing upon state legislation will be made at the session to be held under the auspices of the American Bar Association, at which steps will be taken toward the formation of an official interstate commission for modifying and simplifying state road laws.

The headquarters of the Congress are in the Colorado Building, Washington, D. C., in charge of J. E. Penneybacker, general secretary.

FIRE AT PETOSKEY

Bravery of Nurses Saved Lives of Many Helpless Patients.

Ethel Gordon and Helen Ross, night nurses, and Dr. Robert Brown, of Los Angeles, doubtless saved the lives of a hundred patients Saturday night at Petoskey when fire started in a pile of paper in the kitchen of the Petoskey hospital and filled the basement with smoke. The fire department was summoned, but before its arrival the nurses and physician seized fire extinguishers and at the risk of suffocation, quenched the flames.

Nothing could have prevented the death of several helpless patients if quick action had not been taken. In order to prevent a panic among the patients news of the trouble was kept from them. The damage was slight.

CHANGE IN GAME LAWS

Unlawful to Kill Wood Duck Until in September, 1918.

Secretary of State Martindale calls attention to hunters to the fact that Michigan and federal laws relative to the killing of migratory birds conflict, and in all such cases the federal statute takes precedence over the state law. The Michigan law provides an open season on duck, geese, plover, brant and jacksnipe from September 1 to December 31. The federal law, which will govern, and which becomes effective October 1, 1913, provides that wood duck shall not be killed after September 30, until 1918. The open season for duck, geese and brant is September 1 to December 15; the open season for rails, coots and gallinules is September 1 to November 30. The open season for black-breasted and golden plover, and jacksnipe and greater or lesser yellow legs is from September 1 to December 15. All other shore birds are protected until 1918, after September 30.

FOUR MORE DAYS

September 15 Last Day to Pay Taxes Before Percentage is Added.

Monday, September 15, is the last day for the payment of the city taxes without the added fee. City Treasurer Cook said today that the collections so far has been slow, but that he expected a big rush during the last days.

"There are some delinquents," said he, "who will beg to be relieved from paying the penalty, but there will be nothing doing in that line. I expect the last days will be a strenuous one, and to accommodate the property owners who get their tax money in at the last I will be overworked and will have to hustle every minute."

"There will be just four days after today (Wednesday) in which taxes can be paid, and the sooner the money comes the better I will like it."

At Local Skating Rink.

Allie Moore, Charlevoix's all-around champion trick skater, is the chief attraction at the local rink this week. Moore will do all kinds of trick skating, jumping and the slide for life, one of the most daring and sensational acts ever accomplished on roller skates. Wednesday was the last of the three night's engagement, and it will be well worth your time and money to see these acts, as well as give our local boy the welcome he deserves.

100 POUNDS AS PARCEL POST LIMIT

Another Blow to be Delivered to Express Companies.

Day of the Parcel Post Just Beginning—Everybody Patronizes it.

It is the opinion of Representative David J. Lewis of Maryland, one of the parcel post experts of the house of representatives, that the postoffice department, before a great while, will make another extension of the parcel post system, removing the express companies as competitors of the postal service in the handling of small packages.

After the postmaster general shall have completed his full program for the enlargement of the parcel post the only rates in the new express schedules that will be cheaper than the parcel post rates will be a few charges on 100-pound packages traveling 1,000 miles or more.

"The express companies are correct when they say that they cannot handle a small shipment for less than 15 cents," say Mr. Lewis, "verified figures submitted by them prove that they make only 2 cents' profit on average shipments of 33 pounds with an average charge of 31 cents. The postoffice department at the same time, however, is making at least a cent and probably 2 cents on one-pound shipments at the average rate of 3 cents."

"The government system of collection and distribution costs less than one-third as much as the same service to the express companies, and in the end it must be that the government will supplant the companies for the most of that business. The express companies on a 25-cent shipment pay 12 cents to the railroads for a haul of approximately 150 miles under existing contracts, which means that the railroads get 30 per cent of the total charge. This leaves 13 cents for the express companies to pay for collection and delivery, including the costly system of a dozen or more handlings."

"Eleven of those handlings are replaced in the postoffice department by the postage stamp. On a shipment of five pounds the new postal rate will be 9 cents for 150 miles, of which the railroads will get 3 cents as compared with 12 cents which they get from the express companies."

"Of course the postmaster general is not to stop at the 20 pound limit but will go on until, as he says, the 100-pound limit has been reached. It is equally certain that he will rationalize the rates for longer distances to the point of a slight profit over the cost of service."

There are many public men who agree with Mr. Lewis' conclusions. The day of the parcel post, these men believe, is just beginning. The new idea has taken the country quite by storm. No similar move by the government for many years has become immediately so popular, or has affected so many people. Everybody likes the parcel post and everybody is patronizing it. The result will be public men say, that the system will have to be extended and rapidly as circumstances will permit, until it has been made to take the place of more expensive means of shipment.

The controversy between the railroads and the government for more pay for this parcel post business will probably begin in congress next winter.

At Congregational Church.

Miss Katherine Reith of the Chicago Club resort will speak at the Congregational church Wednesday afternoon September 17, at 3:30, on "The Militant Suffragette."

Miss Keith has recently been abroad and is conversant with the suffrage situation.

All persons interested are cordially invited.

30,000 VOICES!
And Many Are the Voices of Charlevoix People.

Thirty thousand voices—What a grand chorus! And that's the number of American men and women who are publicly praising Doan's Kidney Pills for relief from backache, kidney and bladder ills. They say it to friends. They tell it in the home papers. Charlevoix people are in this chorus. Here's a Charlevoix case.

Henry Newman, 203 Sheridan St., Charlevoix, Mich., says: "I have been troubled for years by my kidneys. I was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions at night and I also had backache. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at the Ivy Drug Store. They gave me great relief. I can now rest better and do not have much backache."

REX BEACH ADVENTURE STORIES

"Bitter Root" Billings, Arbiter

By REX BEACH

Copyright by McClure, Phillips & Co.

BILLINGS rode in from the Junetion about dusk and ate his supper in silence. He'd been east for sixty days, and at though there lurked about him the hint of unwanted ventures, etiquette forbade its mention. You see, in our country that which a man gives voluntarily is oftentimes later dissected in smoky bunk houses or roughly handed round flickering campfires, but the privileges he guards are invaluable. Curiosity isn't exactly a last art, but its practice isn't popular nor hygienic.

Later I found him meditatively whittling out on the porch, and as the moment seemed propitious I inquired audibly, "Did you have a good time in Chicago, 'Bitter Root'?"

"Bully," said he, relaxing into weighty absorption.

"What'd you do?" I inquired, with almost the certainty of appearing insistent.

"Don't you never read the papers?"
he inquired, with such evident compassion that "Kink" Martin and the other boys snickered. This from "Bitter Root," who scorns literature outside of the "Arkansas Printing," as he terms the illustrations?

"Guess I'll have to show you my press notices," and from a hip pocket he produced a fat bundle of clippings in a rubber band. These he displayed jealously, and I stared aghast, for they were front pages of great metropolitan dailies, narrow with red and black scare heads, in which I glimpsed the words, "Billings, of Montana,"
"Bitter Root," an "Arbiter," "A Lodhiwar, Out of the West" and other things as puzzling.

"Press notices," echoed "Kink" scornfully. "Wouldn't that rope you?
The titles like Big toe that went with the Wild West show. When a punch or gets so lazy he can't earn a living by the sweat of his pony he grows his hair, goes on the stage, lusting glass balls with shot cartridges and talks about 'press notices.' Let's see 'em, Billings. You'll show 'em as close to your stomach as though you had carls in a strange poker game."

"Well, I have set in a strange game, amongst others," said Billings, disregarding the request, "and I've held the high cards; also I've drawn out with bonors. I've sailed the medium high seas with muntay in the stockhole.
I've changed the laws of labor, politics and municipal economies. I went out of God's country right into the heart of the decaying east, and by the application of a running noose in a bump rope I strangled oppression and put 8,000 men to work." He paused ponderously. "I'm an arbitrator."

"The deuce you are!" indignantly cried "Reddy," the cook. "Who says so?"

"Reddy" isn't up in syntax, and his unreasoning loyalty to Billings is an established fact of such standing that his remarks afford no conjecture.

"Yes, I've cut into the nation's peril and the crying evil good and strong, walking out from the stinks of the Union stockyards of Chicago into the light of publicity via the drunk and disorderly route.

"You see I got those ten carloads of steers into the city all right, but I was so blame busy spluttering through the tracked up wastes of the cow pens and inhaling the sewer gas of the west side that I never got to see a newspaper. If I'd 'a' read one, here's what I'd 'a' found—namely,
the greatest, stubbornest, riotingest strike ever known, which means a hemp for Chicago, she being the wet nurse of labor trouble.

"The whole river front was tied up,
Nary a steamer had whistled inside the six mile crib for two weeks, and 8,000 men was out. There was hold-ups and blood shedding and picketing, which last is an alias for assault with intents, and altogether it was a prime place for a cowboy on a quiet vacation—just homelike and natural.

"It was at this point that I enters, busting out of the smoke of the stockyards, all sweet and beautiful, like the gentle heron in the play as she walks through the curtains at the back of the stage.

"Now, you know there's a heap of difference between the stockyards and Chicago—it's just like coming from Arkansas over into the United States.

"Well, soon as I sold the stock I bit for the lake front and began to ground sluice the coal dust off of my palate.

"I was busy working my booze hydrant when I see an arid appearing pilgrim 'longside looking thirsty as an alkali flat.

"'Tut in," says I, and the way he obeyed orders looked like he'd had military training. I felt sort of dressed in long from the way he handled his flicker, took it straight and running over, then sopped his hands on the bar and sniffed of his fingers.
He seemed to just soak it up both ways—regular human blotter.

"You lap it up like a man," says I—"like a cowboy full growned. Ever been west?"

"Nope," says he; "born here."

"Well, I'm a stranger," says I, "out absorbing such beauties of architecture and free lunch as offers along the line.
If I ain't keeping you up I'd be glad of your company."

"I'm your assistant lunch buster," says he, and in the course of things he further explained that he was a luggage fireman out on a strike, giving me the following information about the trip: "It all come up over a dose of dyspepsia."

"Back up," interrupted "Kink," squinting. "Are you plumb bug? Get together! You're certainly the living Kid. We must have some brains your heel and got concession of the brain."

"Yes, sir—luggage," Billings continued. "Old man Badrich of the Bad-rich Transportation company has it terrible. It hounds on his soul every morning about 9 o'clock, getting worse steadily, and reaches perdition along about 11. He can tell the time of day by taste. One morning when his mouth felt like about 10:45 in comes a committee from Firemen and Engineers' local No. 21 with a demand for more wages, prodding him with the intimation that if he didn't ante they'd tie up all his boats.

"I s'pose a teaspoonful of baking soda, assimilated internally around the environments of his appendix, would have spared the strike and cleared me out of being a hero. As the foot mist have said, 'Upon such slender pegs is this our greatness hung.'"

"Oh, Gawd!" exclaimed Mullins plainly.

"Anyhow, the bitterness in the old man's inner tubes showed in the file of his answer. And he told 'em if they wanted more money he'd give 'em a chance to earn it—they could work nights as well as days. He intimated further that they'd ought to be satisfied with their wages, as they'd undoubtedly foller the same line of business in the next world and wouldn't get a cent for feeding the fires—hell."

"Next morning the strike was called, and the got that breathe treachery and walkouts was one 'Oily' Heegan, further submerged under the titles of president of the Federation of Fresh Water Firemen; also chairman of the United Water Front Workmen, which last takes in everything doing business along the river except the wharf rats and typhoid germs, and it's with the discreteness of this party that I informed myself to the detriment of labor and the triumph of the law.

"I, O'Hara Heegan is an able man, and just to of a week he'd spread the strike till it was the deepest, dirtiest thing ever known. The business and morgues was full of toadmen men, but the river was empty all right.
Yes; he had a persimble method of arbitration quite convincing to the most calloused, involving the laying on of the lead pipe.

"Things got to be pretty fierce by and by, for they had the police un-faded, and disturbances got plentier than the casualties at a butchers' picnic. The strikers got hungry, too, finally, because the principles of unionism is like a rash on your mechanic, skin deep—inside, his gastric works three shifts a day even if his outstides is idle and steaming with socialism.

"Oily" fed 'em dry loads of glo-quence, but it didn't seem to be real filling. They'd have the lectures and rob a bakery.

"He was a wonder, though; just sat in his office and kept the shipowners waiting in line, swearing bitter and refined cuss words about ignorant fiend and 'cussed pedagogues' which last, for 'Kink's' enlightenment, means a kind of Hebrew meeting house.

"These here details my new friend give me, ending with a eulogy on
'Oily' Heegan, the 'Idol of the Idle.'"

"If he shys scarce we snarred," says
he, "and if he says work we work; See? Oh, he's the goods, he is! Let's go down by the river, Molde we'll see him." So me and Murdock liked down Water street, where they keep most quietly nothing over the bar fixtures and spit at the stove.

"We found him, a big mouthed, shifty kind of man, 'bout as cynical looking in the face as a black bass and full of wind as a toad fish. I exchanged drins for principles of socialism and doing so happened to display my roll. Murdock slipped away and made talk with a friend; then when Heegan had left he steers me out the back way into an alley. 'Short cut,' says he, 'to another and a better place.'

"I fallers through a back room; then as I steps out the door I'm grabbed by this new friend, while Murdock bathes my head with a gas pipe billy, one of the regulation, strike promoting kind, like they use for decaying members into the glorious ranks of labor.

"I saw a 'burning of Rome' that was a dream and whole cloudbursts of shooting stars, but I yanked Mr. Enthusiastic Strasser away from my surcharge and thrashed him agin the wall till the shudd' Murdock shifts my back last, though, and streams up the alley with my greenbacks, conveyed by his friend.

"Wow-ow," says I, giving the distress signal so that the windows rattled and reaching for my holster, I'd 'a' got them both, only the gun
'aught in my suspender. You see,
not outlipping any live bird shoot,
I'd put it inside my pants band, under my vest, for appearances. A 45 is like fresh air to a drowning man—generally has to be drawn in haste—and neither one should be upheld. I got her out at last and blazed away just a second after they dodged around the corner, then I hit the trail after 'em, letting go a few sky shots and getting a ghost dance boiler off my stomach that had been troubling me. The wallon on the bend made me dizzy, though, and I zigzagged awful, tacking out of the alley right into a policeman.

"Wheel!" says I in joy, for he had Murdock safe by the bits, bucking could'n' rable.

"Stan' aside and let mine 'lectrocuta
'im," says I. I throwed the gun on him, and the crowd dodged it into all the doorways and windows convenient, but I was so weakminded in the knees I stumbled over the curb and fell down.

"Next thing I knew we was all bouncing over the cobblestones in a patrol wagon.

"Well, in the morning I told my story to the judge, plain and unvarnished; then Murdock takes the stand and busts into song, claiming that he was coming through the alley toward Clark street when I staggered out back of a saloon and commenced to shoot at him. He saw I was drunk and fanned out, me shooting at him with every jump. He had proof, he said, and he called for the president of his union, Mr. Heegan. At the name all the boaters and stew buns in the courtroom stomped and said,
"Hear, hear!" while up steps this Napoleon of the boloes.

"Sure, he knew Mr. Murdock, had known him for years, and he was perfectly reliable and honest. As to his robbing me, it was preposterous, because he himself was at the other end of the alley and saw the whole thing, just as Mr. Murdock related it.

"I jumps up. 'You're a liar, Heegan,' I was laying booze for the two of you, but a policeman nailed me, choking off my rhetorics. Mr. Heegan leans over and whispers to the judge, while I got childlike along my spine.

"'Look here, kind judge,' says I, real winning and genteel. 'This man is so good at explaining things away, ask him to talk off this lamp over my ear.
I surely didn't get a buzzy spoke and lamine myself on the nut.'

"'That'll do,' says the judge. 'Mr.
Clerk, $10 and costs. Charge, drunk and disorderly. Next!'

"'Hold on there,' says I, ignorant of the involutions of justice, I guess I've got the judge on my this time. 'They beat you to me, judge. I ain't got a cent. You can't go through me and be welcome to half you had. I'll mail you ten when I get home though, honest!'

"At that the audience giggled, and the judge says:

"Your honor doesn't appeal to me,
Mr. Billings. Of course you have the privilege of working it out. Oh, glory, the 'arbitrator!'

"Heegan nodded at this, and I red-ned what I was aiming.

"Your honor," says I, with sarcastic reminders, "science tells us, that a perfect vacuum ain't possible, but after watching you I know better, and for you, Mr. Workmen's Friend, as it the floor, and I ran at Heegan.

"Pshaw! I never got started, nor I didn't voluntarily come to till I rested in the workhouse, which last floger of speech is a pure and beautiful paradox.

"I ain't dwelling with glee on the next twenty-six days—$10 and costs, at four bits a day—but I left there saturated with such hatred for Hee-

MAY PAY TUITION

Eighth Grade Graduates Attend Any High School at District Expense.

School districts which do not maintain a legal high school must pay tuition for the eighth grade graduates who are residents of such districts to any high school in the state of Michigan if proper application is made. Heretofore, the choice of the high school was confined to one of the three nearest, but the recent legislation amended the act, removing the limitation. The amount of tuition can not exceed $20 per year for each pupil unless the people at the annual meeting vote to pay more.

In order to maintain a legal high school, the graded district must employ at least two teachers giving their entire time to the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades. Graded districts employing one teacher to give her entire time to the ninth and tenth grades do not have to pay tuition until their students pass the tenth grade. Other districts cannot pay tuition for pupils above the eighth grade to any other schools except the two mentioned above. It is illegal for the districts to pay tuition to business colleges, preparatory, sectarian or other schools.

HIT BY BULLET

Narrow Escape of Little Child at Antrim County Fair Friday.

While in the arms of his mother at the Antrim county fair at Bellaire Friday, five-months-old Clifford Rowland was struck in the head by a stray bullet from a shooting gallery and bled so profusely that for a time his life was in danger.

The wound, however, was only a deep gash in the scalp and was soon dressed by physicians on the grounds.

The child screamed as the bullet pierced the flesh and the mother fainted at the sight of the blood.

The bullet had passed through a crack in the back-boards of a shooting gallery, which was ordered closed. The child will recover.

REMAINS ANOTHER YEAR

A. I. Creamer Will Continue as Manager of The Inn

A. I. Creamer, who for the past four years has successfully filled the position as manager of the Inn, Charlevoix leading summer hotel, has been engaged by its owner to occupy the same position another season.

Mr. Creamer acted as assistant manager a year before he assumed his present position, and during the four years as manager, has made the Inn the leading resort hotel of Northern Michigan. Considering the fact that since the Pere Marquette went into the hands of the receiver, not one of its former officials have been retained in their former positions, Mr. Creamer's reappointment is due to the fact that he is one of the best hotel men in the country, and that his services as manager of the Inn has proven very satisfactory.

Since coming to Charlevoix Mr.
Creamer has made a host of friends who will be glad to learn that he will be here another season.

WILL ORGANIZE CLASS

"Hymn of Plays" to be Produced in Charlevoix
Christmas Week

C. Ross Brownell, the well known teacher of vocal and instrumental music, is organizing what will be called the "Amateur Society of Musicians," consisting twenty-four more or less experienced singers, and will put on the "Hymn of Plays," by Mendelssohn, about Christmas week.

The "Hymn of Plays" was first sung in Germany in the early part of the nineteenth century, to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the art of printing, and is classed as one of the best ever produced.

The event will probably be produced under the auspices of some church or all of the churches of the city.

Charlevoix Won.

That the Charlevoix base ball team "come back" was fully demonstrated Sunday in the game with Harbor Springs. Powers in the box was at his best and had his opponents at his mercy at all stages of the game, allowing them but four scattering hits. Mullen, who was in the box for Harbor Springs, was wild and ineffective. The score was 45 to 4.

FRANK CHAMBERLIN

THEATRICAL

A Wonderful Reproduction.

[Editorial from South Bend News.]
The leading events in the life of Jesus Christ are vividly portrayed in the moving pictures which will be exhibited at the Majestic theatre next week, Thursday, September 18.
A private view of them given the clergy and representatives of the press revealed an admirable conception of the possibilities of such a reproduction and the realistic effect on the minds of the spectators.
The pictures make the life and sacrifice of the Savior more a reality than faith has ever done. They show the surroundings, the conditions and the character of the people among which Jesus Christ was born and lived the brief span of his life, and they bring out the human elements of the world through the venting of manner which appeals to the dullest intellect and the most unresponsive heart.

Looking at these pictures one comes into a full realization that Christ was a man, that He lived for the benefit of His fellowman and that He died as a sacrifice for the sins of the world through the venting of the evil passions He was sent on earth to save its inhabitants from. They show the craftiness and enmity of those whom Christ's mission antagonized in their worldly ambitions, even as it antagonizes them today, and the cheap politics which influence Pilate to turn the Savior over to His persecutors to placate an element that doubtless could be more useful to the Roman government, even as a cheap politics is practiced today.

The pictures constitute a new sermon on the mount. Their religious and educational value can scarcely be calculated. This influence on the susceptible individual cannot be adequately described. They are giving to the world what the Passion Play at Oberammergau gives to the few. O. V. Miles, Mgr.

dream. I couldn't see her move none, though, and old man Baddeley bowed again, exhorting himself of his nob by a line of cuss words as you'll muster outside the cattle belt.

"Sunk em," I yells. "Give 'em all the arbitration you've got handy. If she don't open, we'll jump her, and I let out another match, so that we went plowing and boiling toward the draw. It looked like we'd have to lunge it sure enough, but the police beat the crowd back just in time. She wasn't clear open, though, and our large crowd of the apiles. It was like a nigger butting a persimmon tree—we rattled off a shower of missiles like an abnormal hailstorm. Talk about your best defense; they heaved everything at us from all angles to railroad iron, and we lost all our window glass the first chatter, while the smokestack looked like a pincushion with crimps.

"When we scraped through I looked back with pity at the Detroit's crew. She hadn't any wheels, and the helmsman was due to get all the attention that was coming to him. They'd built up a barricade of potato sacks, chicken coops and brick-bats around the wheel that prevented 'em somewhat, but even while I watched some Polish filtered a back through and laid out the quartermaster cold, and he was drag off. Oh, it was refined and needn't be!

"Well, we run the gambit, presented every block with stuff ranging in tensile strength from insulins to asphalt pavements and noise. Say, all the racket in the world was a whisper. I caught a glimpse of the old man leaning out of the pilothouse where a window had been, his white hair bristly and his nostrils flared, undulating the air with surging flights of gleeful profanity.

"Hoar, this is living!" he yells, springing me down the deck off from under the duck. "Best damn I've had in years." And then some fellow held out his hand in the back with a tomato. Yes, that means an honor to the faculty of speech!

"I was about half full a cold-water bonnet into the engine room, making a blizzard with my spit. Then I got kind of peevish.

"Rush street ledge is the last one, and they'd unrolled there on both sides, like this on a roadblock. Think I, if we met, it through here, we've busted the strike, and I glance back at the Detroit just in time to see her crew putting their captain into the deck house limp and bleeding. The barricade was all knocked to pieces, and they'd flunked absolute. Don't blame 'em much either, as it was sure death to stand out in the open under the rain of stuff that come from the bridges. Of course with no steering she commenced to swing off. I yells: "Grab that wheel! Grab it quick! We'll hit the bridge!" But it was like deaf and dumb talk in a boiler shop, while a wilder howl went up from the water front as they seen what they'd done and smelled victory.

"We've got one chance," thinks I, "but if she strikes we're gone. They'll swamp us sure, and all the police in Cook county won't save enough for to hold services on." Then I throwed a look at the opening ahead and the pessimists froze in me.

"I forgot all about the resiliency of brickbats and the table manners of riots, for there, on top of a bunch of apiles, an'm. masterful and bloated with perjuries, was 'Oily' Heegan, dictating the disposition of his forces, the light of victory in his shifty little eyes.

"Ten dollars and costs," I shrieks, seeing red. "Legume crawl up them apiles to you."

"Then inspiration seized me. My soul riz up and grappled with the crisis, for right under my nite, coiled, suggestive and phantasmagoric, was one of the tug's hearing lines, about a three-eighths size. I slips a running knot in the end and divides the coils, crouch-

"Oily" Heegan had a high dive.

He held the deck house till we came about a foot that I straightened, gave it a swing and heave, and the nose sailed up and settled over him fine and snug.

"I jerked back, and 'Oily' Heegan did a high dive from Rush street that was a geometrical joy. He hit kind of amputee-like, doing what we used to call a 'holly inster' back home, but quite satisfying for a madden effort, and I reeled him in stern.

"Your Chicago man ain't a gamy fish. He come up tame and squirting sewage like a dissolute porpoise, while I played him out where he'd get the thrash of the propeller.

"Help!" he yells. "I'm a drownding."

"Ten dollars and costs," says I.

letting him under again. "Do you know you're drinking with this time, hey?"

"I reckon the astonishment of the mob was equal to Heegan's. Anyhow, I'm told that we was favored with such quietness that my voice sounded four blocks, simply aching with satisfaction. Then pandemonium tore loose, but I was so engrossed in sweet converse I never noticed it or noticed that the Detroit had slid through the draw by a hair and we was bound for the blue and swirling lake.

"For God's sake, heave up," says Heegan, splashing along and looking strangely. I haul him in where he wouldn't miss any of my loaves.

"I just can't do it, 'Oily.' It's wash day. You're plumb mad with hogwits and phlegms and compulsory arbitrations. I'm going to clean you up, and I sezzed him under like a wet shirt.

"I drag him out again and continues: "This is Claburner's work, 'Oily,' but I lost my pride in the hildewell, thanks to you. It's tough on St. Louis to laundry you upstream this way, but maybe the worst of your heroics 'll be purged when they get that fur." You know the Chicago river runs up hill out of Lake Michigan, through the drainage canal and into the St. Louis waterworks. Sure it does. Most unnatural stream I ever see about di-rected and snells.

"I was getting a good deal of enjoyment and information out of him when old man Baddeley ran back, gunnelled with fuel and passed tomato juice, the red in his white hair making his top look like one of those fancy ice-cream drips you get at a soda fountain.

"Here, here! You'll kill him," says he, so I hoisted him aboard, dripping and effigy, wrenching him out good and thorough by the neck. He made a fine top.

"These 'drowndings' continued "Bitter Root" fish a few like pocket, "fell in beautiful heaves how the last seen of 'Oily' Heegan he was hysteresing the deck of a sorry little tugboat under the admiralships and feet of 'Bitter Root' Billings of Montana, and they state how the surfers tried to get tips for perusal, and couldn't and how all day long from the horsestaps was visible a tugboat madly crisscrossing about the outer crisis, busting the silence with joyful bursts of victory, and they'd further state that about dark she started up the river, fired and crashed, with a bony looking powder puffing cigarettes on the steam in a hood that a fine foot knotted top in his cap. When a delegation of surfers met her, inquiring about one to attract Heegan, he says: "Like fish!" And Billings roared indignantly as follows:

"I'm the broadest and lankiest man alive with a set of rare contempt, and I throw the red cigarette and, approaching the boiler room hatch, entered proudly. "Come out of that!" and he president of the Federation of Fresh Water Firemen dragged himself wearily out into the flickering lights. He was black and drenched and streaked with sweat; also he shone with the grease and oil of the engines, while the palms of his hands were covered with painful blisters from unwelcome intimate contact with shovels and drawers. It was seen that he winced fearfully as the cowboy whirled the rope aloft.

"He's got the makings of a fair fireman," said the stranger. "All he wants is practice."

"Then as the delegation murmured angrily he held up his hand and in the ensuing silence said: "Boys, the strike's over. Mr. Heegan has arbitrated."

The Tented Village

By GEORGE W. DICKINSON,
General Manager of the Michigan State Fair.

GEORGE W. DICKINSON

With a tented village, a fair ground has always been expressed by Michigan State Fair visitors over the lack of accommodations in the way of sleeping quarters when attending the state's outing in Detroit.

A big idea has been apparent at the Woodward avenue grounds, the proposition is now under the completion of the building, which will house visitors during fair week.

These will not be merely tent cities, but will contain all the necessary comforts of sleeping quarters. The district will, of course, be properly policed, and property will be severely insisted on.

The innovation is but another step in the working out of the new fair management's idea that the Michigan State Fair should be a family gathering and not strictly limited to the members of the sterner sex. It was this very absence of adequate sleeping accommodations which prevented the entire family partaking of the pleasures of the Wolverine State's holiday in the past.

The farmer's housewife always dreaded the crush on the ears and the trouble of finding a place to stay while in the city and consequently could not figure on bringing the children to town.

This year round Michigan can figure on getting to the fair, say in the morning and spending the entire day on the grounds and seeing everything

THE LARGEST ENTRY LIST.

All Leading Turf Performers Will Compete For Rich Prizes—State Breeders' Futurity Decided For First Time—Foremost Reinsman to Drive

This year the Michigan State Fair will have a net loss than $20,000 for trainers and breeders, which will be quadrupled to the highest fields of any classic ever decided at the Detroit oval.

The Michigan stake alone returns $20,000 to its winner, and forty-five owners have signaled their intention of competing for this rich award.

Second in importance will be the 242 race, which boasts of no less than twenty-five nominees, while the 243, has seventy and the 246, has twenty-three. The numbers are larger than in any grand event city.

On top of these 300 others there will be sixteen elite racing classes, with awards of $1,000 or over, exclusive of the first Futurity of the Michigan Trotting Horse Breeders' association. This last named event promises to blossom into a State Fair racing institution. It will undoubtedly unite together the best three to four mile in the Wolverine state, as they are about forty entries.

As Frank B. Walker will do the starting and A. J. Keating will act as presiding judge, the State Fair races will be conducted on the highest possible plane.

MUSIC BY PRIZE BAND.

"It's THE BEST POLISH I EVER USED"

That's What Every One Says Who Tries

Black Silk Stove Polish

DON'T imagine for a moment that it's a kind of magic. It's the same old Black Silk Stove Polish. It's a question of the stove polish to use.

Black Silk Stove Polish is so much better than other stove polishes that there is absolutely no comparison in quality and price. It makes a brilliant glossy shine that doesn't rub off. It makes the iron—becomes a part of the stove. It makes old stoves look like new and lasts four times as long as any other stove.

Get a can and give it a trial on your parlor stove, your cook stove, or your gas range. If you do not find it the best stove polish you ever used, your dealer is authorized to refund your money. Black Silk Stove Polish has been made by the same formula and sold under one name for 30 years.

Here is what some of the ladies write us:

"I sent you for a can of Black Silk Stove Polish and found it so much better than any I had ever used. I had used it for years, but I had never found one so good. It is now selling nearly everywhere in the place, so I had no time to write you. I had no time to write you. I had no time to write you."

"I was visiting friends and they used Black Silk Stove Polish on their stoves. It made the best shine I ever saw, and after blacking the polish did not rub off or dust off. It is so good that I have ordered a can for my own use."

Ask Your Dealer

Black Silk Stove Polish Works, Sterling, Ill.

Use Black Silk Stove Polish on all stoves, registers, stove pipes, etc. Prevents rusting. Not affected by heat or cold. Produces a permanent glossy black surface. Can be used for cleaning brass and silver. Only 25 cents. Ask your dealer.

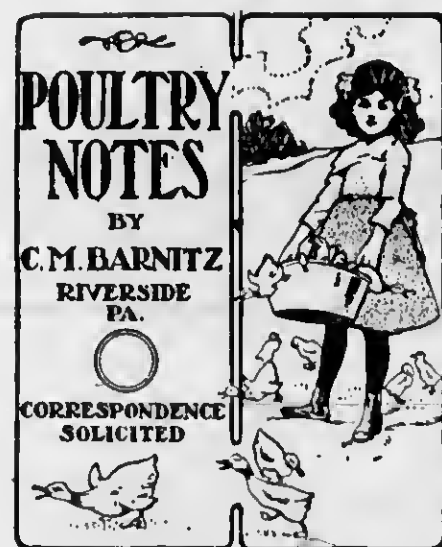

Use Black Silk Metal Polish for nickel, brass, silverware or tinware. It has no equal for use on automobiles.

"A Shine in Every Drop"

THE MAN BEHIND.

GENERAL MANAGER GEORGE W. DICKINSON, WHO IS DOING MUCH TO MAKE THIS YEAR'S MICHIGAN STATE FAIR A RECORD BREAKER IN EVERY RESPECT.

(These articles and illustrations must not be reprinted without special permission.)

FOR PHEASANT FANCIERS.

In natural habitat, Mrs. Pheasant forms her nest of leaves and grasses in a secluded nook and always covers her eggs with leaves when off the nest to hide them from prying eyes prospecting for prey.

In confinement eggs are apt to be dropped at random and these must be quickly gathered for, where there is small range. Mr. Pheasant, especially, often develops a voracious appetite for eggs.

Brushy pine placed in corners, or secluded places, where a nest is fashioned and in which small glass eggs are kept, will often lead the hen to hide away to lay. The wild pheasants' eggs invariably hatch in twenty-four

They require roomy coops without floors, to be moved on to fresh ground twice a day and should run in outside screens until old enough to range.

They are fed first three times a day. Barley meal, hard boiled eggs, screened and mixed with breadcrumbs and chopped lettuce make a good ration.

Ants' eggs are excellent. As a substitute some use custard made of an egg and two tablespoonfuls of milk beaten together.

Crushed hemp, millet and coarse cornmeal add variety.

Some feed maggots. They are nasty and risky to feed. Meal worms are better.

Simply place a few meal worms in wheat midds and bran, with a few pieces of leather mixed through it and you soon have plenty of fat, clean, yellow worms for pheasants and other insect loving pets.

DON'TS.

Don't try to discourse on a subject of which you know but little. Better be a clam than an ass.

Don't sow wild oats, and don't depend much on government seed.

Don't pretend to be an agriculturist when you do not keep posted on modern methods and put them to practice. Don't let chicks run on cement. For leg troubles put them on the ground and cut out forcing food.

Don't expect to raise good chicks without green food. White clover makes them grow all over.

Don't neglect to scald vessels often in which you serve milk to chicks.

Don't have brush nor lumber piles near the henhouse to afford harbor for vermin that prey on poultry.

For Filling the Apple Barrel.

How to pack apples in barrels: Two layers of fruit should be placed in the bottom of barrel with stems down and as close together as possible. These will form the base.

For this end will be the top when completed. Fill in with the same grade, sticks the barrel open and when near the top put in two more layers with stems up, putting the last layer stand a full inch above the chime of barrel. Now put on lid and slowly press into place, shaking the barrel in the meanwhile. The stores sell very excellent barrel headers or presses. But one can be fixed very quickly by using a plank or sawing with one end under a stud reaching to the shed plate and nailed temporarily in place. See cut. Be careful not to press the apples too hard. - Farm Journal.

The chicks run as soon as dried out and must be protected, for the pheasants of the flock often kill them.

Fanciers raise most of their tame pheasants with chicken mothers, the silky being best for the purpose, as it is right size, gentle and does not quit the young to lay so soon. Hens with acrid and feathered legs should be avoided.

Fertilize Your Orchard.

As neglected as the average farm orchard is in almost every particular it probably suffers worse from the lack of fertilization than from any other cause. It is indeed a rare case where the farmer or perhaps even the orchardist manures or fertilizes his orchard as thoroughly and as conscientiously as he does his corn and wheat ground, says the Farmer's Guide.

Kaffir as Good as Corn.

Kaffir is as good a feed as corn. Because farmers are learning this Kaffir has become one of the most important crops grown in Kansas today. The grain is valued highly as a feed for all classes of live stock. In feeding five bushels of Kaffir seed are considered as being equivalent to four bushels of shelled corn.

Trees and the Air.

According to a reliable computation, a single tree is able through its leaves to purify the air from the carbonic acid arising from the respiration of a considerable number of men, as many as a dozen or a score. The volume of carbonic acid exhaled by a human being in the course of twenty-four hours is estimated at a hundred gallons, and a single square yard of leaf surface, counting both the upper and under sides of the leaves, can decompose about a gallon of carbonic acid in a day.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

Grange Column

Peninsular Grange

Regular meeting of Peninsular Grange was called to order by the Worthy Master and six officers were present. The Grange voted to have the annual Harvest Feast September 27.

Lecture hour was taken up by talks on the care of corn, potato and fruit crop. A good attendance is desired at next meeting, as delegates will be elected to the convention to be held at Charlevoix. Next meeting September 27.

Heartless.

"So you wouldn't take me to be twenty-six?" giggled the fair widow.
"No, indeed," rejoined the haughty old bachelor. "But if you had a daughter I might take her to be that old."

THE KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SOME EVERYDAY PIES.

INEXPENSIVE pies made with fruits that are to be had at almost any time and in most neighborhoods are the ones that the housewife relies on for her ordinary fare. Pies which are characteristic of no particular fruit season are the ones mentioned here. They may be made in May or December, and if the crust is prepared with care in spite of their homely contents these desserts will be pronounced delicious.

With Popular Fruits.

Apple Pie With Cream.—Make an apple pie with rich puff paste, using a very deep pie plate and adding a little more than the customary amount of sugar, that there may be plenty of juice. Serve hot, or, if cold, reheat the last thing before serving, and with it pass a bowl of cream that has been whipped until stiff, sweetened with sugar and flavored with powdered nutmeg.

Grapefruit Pie.—For this make a crust as usual and line a pie dish with it. For the filling take one cup sugar mixed with two tablespoons cornstarch, the grated rind of one-half lemon, juice of one-half grapefruit, yolks of two eggs, one tablespoonful butter, one cup hot water. Mix ingredients, except the water, together, then gradually add hot water and stir briskly. Turn in double boiler and cook five minutes after it sets. Fill crust and cover with meringue.

Homely, but Delicious.

Prune Pie.—Take a pound of prunes and wash and soak them overnight in water to cover, and cook in the same water until tender. Line a pie plate with rich crust and fill with the prunes and the liquid, which must have been reduced at the last of the cooking to a very small amount. Sprinkle with from one-third to one-half cupful of sugar, according to the quality of the prunes, and sprinkle on also one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Cover with a top crust and bake in a fairly quick oven, as the filling is already cooked. Cool partly, then sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve fresh.

A Dainty Pastry.

Cream Pie.—Line two deep pie plates with a rich paste, prick here and there and bake in a rather hot oven. Send one pint of milk. Mix together one-third of a cupful of sifted flour, one scant cupful of sugar and a pinch of salt. Add four well beaten eggs, stir until smooth. Add gradually the milk, stirring all the time. Add gradually the sugar, stirring all the time. Strain the mixture into a double boiler and cook until thickened. Set aside for a few minutes, add one teaspoonful of vanilla and fill the prepared crusts. When cold dust thickly with powdered sugar.

The Green Hat

A Color Scheme

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Joyce Whittier looked very pale and severe as Morgan helped her out of his motorcar at the entrance to the fair grounds. Her white gloves had barely touched his, and she withdrew them from his attempted clasp with a gentle insistence.

"I know you're angry, Joyce, darling," said Morgan as they walked into the grounds, "but you can't blame a fellow after all."

"It's the fashion," said Joyce haughtily.

"One needn't be a slave to the fashion, not when fashion decrees that girls shall wear purple hats and green sweaters and yellow shoes."

"I'm not wearing that horrible combination of colors," was his sweet heart's reply.

Morgan Hall looked down at her white serge coat, below which peeped an edge of brilliant green silk frock that exactly matched the green silk stockings showing above the low white shoes, and then up at the brilliant green felt hat that topped Joyce's golden hair.

"It may be all right for some girls to wear, but I don't want you to look like a parrot, dear," he said clumsily.

"Oh, a parrot?" exclaimed Joyce, growing pinker. "Why not a cockatoo or something equally offensive?"

"You could never be offensive, Joyce," returned Morgan patiently, "but it's hardly in good taste, is it?"

"Why not?"

Joyce glanced at Morgan's attire from trim fitting gray clothes to pale lavender shirt, violet necktie and lavender silk socks. "I suppose a lavender color scheme would be in better taste," she observed dryly.

Morgan reddened slightly. "Lavender is not such a bad color, Joyce," he remonstrated. "I don't mind the other things so much, and the white coat is great, but that green hat is awful!"

"It's a dear," retorted Joyce obstinately.

"It's a monstrosity," said Morgan contemptuously.

"Then I will spare you the humiliation of being seen in its company," dared Joyce, and away she went across the open space of ground to where she saw her sister Agatha and a group of friends entering the stock enclosure.

"If it had been any other color save green," growled Morgan as he wandered aimlessly around, deprived of Joyce's company, even in the green hat, the day was spoiled for him. As a rule, the clothes of womanhood played little part in his scheme of the importance of things, but always from a child he had hated the brilliant green that now was fashionable, and the color seemed to jar upon his senses and rendered him nervous and irritable in consequence. If he had been near Joyce now he might have heard his college chum, Jim Walte, discoursing to Miss Whittier upon that same subject.

"Fruity thing about green, Miss Whittier," Walte was saying chattily; "my classmate, Morg Hall. You know him, don't you?"

Joyce nodded, and the big diamond on her left hand winked knowingly inside the white glove.

"Well, Morg's a chap that never had any nerves—so we always said—but there was one thing that could almost drive him crazy, and that was to flourish a bit of bright green in front of him."

"I used to wear a green necktie sometimes just to josh him, you know, but when I found it really made him irritable and cranky without his knowing exactly why I just dropped the matter."

Joyce said never a word, and from that moment she was very quiet.

Morgan Hall had become tired of wandering around alone, and he felt too irritable to seek Joyce after her desertion of him; yet he felt a vague jealousy of her. Occasionally he saw her green hat among the other blossoms of the millinery bouquet, and each time he glimpsed it his anger arose and his jealousy took actual form.

He was debating whether he should seek her out and demand an explanation of her desertion when he saw her crossing a distant space with a man. Morgan Hall followed them, noting every graceful curve of Joyce's form and the soft sweep of the white veil away from her green hat. The man was Jim Walte, and he was as handsome as a man ought to be, and he was looking down at Joyce Whittier with a manner that no other man should enjoy save Morgan Hall.

Morgan started after them resentfully until they reached the entrance and climbed into Walte's big red automobile and shot away. He was after them in an instant, plunging into his own car, sending the scared chauffeur out in a hazy, and presently became lost in a dark blur on the white road while the astonished chauffeur swore bitterly.

The red car was out of sight by the time Morgan had reached the first turn in the road, and he did not see it until he had searched the road for ten miles and had felt the patter of a comfortable bullet on the body of his car. Then he slowed down and kept the red car in sight.

He could see Jim Walte's white felt hat side by side with Joyce's bright green one, and he could observe that the hats were in too close proximity for his own comfort.

Morgan felt a cold race stealing over him. There was something malignant about that staring green hat of Joyce's, something that taunted him and scorned him at the same time. He would not permit it another instant, and he gave fair warning by sounding his horn defiantly and putting on all speed.

Jim Walte glanced around and then the red car leaped forward and lost the chase.

The pursuer could see that Joyce, under the green hat, was frightened and that Jim Walte had one arm around her even as he managed his car with the other.

The dark car was a swift one, however, and little by little it overtook the red one until at last they were racing side by side along a lonely road. Morgan's white, strained face bent forward to peer into Walte's car.

"What do you want, Morg?" demanded Jim hoarsely. "Are you crazy?"

"I want you to stop!" shouted Morgan excitedly.

"What for?"

"I'll tell you later what for."

Jim Walte spoke to the girl, and she, with her face turned toward him and glancing at Morgan's pale, excited face gave assent, and the red car stopped slowly until the two parted side by side.

"What?" demanded Jim angrily.

"Take your arm away," commanded Morgan.

"You go to the dickens," was Walte's reply.

"Morg," exclaimed Morgan, "I would like to speak to you, please."

"Joyce?" repeated Jim Walte contemptuously. "What's the matter with you, Morg? Are you drunk or crazy?"

Morgan did not answer. He was staring aghast at the face of the girl under the green hat. It was not Joyce Whittier at all. It was her cousin Belle Drake, and she was wearing a costume identical with that Joyce had worn—green gown, hat and all.

"I thought it was Joyce's green hat," said Morgan dully. "I am very sorry I'm afraid I've acted like a fool."

Jim Walte thought rapidly. He whispered a word to the girl, and she tossed the green hat under the seat and smiled at Morgan with a charming pout.

"Morgan, you old goose, Joyce never had a green hat. She bathes green and it's all my fault that she wore it today. The whole green color scheme is mine. Jimmy likes it, don't you, dear?" she asked of that happy young man.

Walte nodded blissfully.

"I went into Joyce's room this morning and saw her things all laid out—all white and too cute for anything—even a little white hat. So I just appropriated everything except the coat, for I have one of my own, and left my green clothes for her to wear, just for a joke, you know."

"It's a great joke on me," observed Morgan with a sickly smile.

"On me, too," admitted Belle pathetically, "for Joyce found me at the fair and scolded me dreadfully and made me go to the dressing room and change into my own garments, and she has now got her own. There!"

Morgan was turning his car carefully about.

"I suppose we may go on," remarked Jim Walte meekly.

"Yes, old man. I'm sorry it happened. If the blessing of a fool can do you any good you have it, my child, dear!"

Morgan flashed a backward smile as he tore back along the road to the fair grounds.

Once more he entered the gate and looked for Joyce Whittier. "I don't know what to say to her," he muttered. "I might have known she wouldn't get herself up like that without a reason. In this lavender business I feel like an Italian villa. It's all a matter of comparison, I suppose."

Just then he saw Joyce, all in white, looking like a bride. Even her sweet face was quite pale. A color came into her cheeks when she saw him. They met in a secluded corner, and he took her unresisting hands in his.

"I have seen Belle and her green hat," he said rather unsteadily, "and I might have known, darling, that it wasn't you! You—you look like a bride. Joyce, after all my criticism, be side your white costume I feel as gay as a mountain bank."

"I don't know how you feel," whispered Joyce, "but you look perfectly dear!"

The Old, Old Story Boiled Down.

Feminine Limitations.

The superficial limitations of feminine emotion are plainly demonstrated in the fact that, while every woman can pronounce and spell correctly such words and combinations of words as "coquette, mouseline de soie, crepe de chine, silk epouse, mauve moire" and an interminable list of other things that would cause brainstorms in the male, she doesn't seem able even to recognize such rudimentary articles as calico, gingham and the other dress goods her mother and her grandmother knew best.—Philadelphia Inquirer

FRUIT SHOULD BE THINNED

This is One Lesson Fruit Growers Must Learn in This Region.

TREES ARE OVER-WORKED

Fruit Not Thinned Do Not Develop as They Should.

Sun and Air Should Be Given a Chance to Strike the Apples From All Directions—New Law in Effect.

There is one lesson that the apple growers of this region will have to learn before they will be able to get the best results from their orchards, and that is that they will have to thin their fruit at the proper time so that it will have room on the trees to develop in size and color, and thereby conform to the best market standard.

The average grower believes that the number of apples on a tree determines the profit of his orchard and he leaves all the apples that set on the trees to ripen, with the result that for that particular year the trees are overworked and in many cases broken down by the heavy load they have to carry.

When the fruit is not thinned it does not have a chance to develop as it should and the owner of the orchard is the loser. Perfect fruit commands the top price on the market and the only way in which it can be obtained is by taken proper care of the trees through pruning, spraying and cultivation and later by thinning the apples to such degree that they will hang about six inches apart on the tree, which gives the sun and air a chance to strike the apple in all directions and bring out the proper color that is demanded in number one fruit.

The man who lets his trees carry a maximum load of apples during the season overtaxes his trees to such an extent that they will only bear a productive crop once in every two or three years. On the other hand if the trees are properly cared for and the growing apples thinned properly and the surplus twigs cut away, a crop will be insured every year.

Thinning the fruit on the trees is not only a scientific method of growing fruit, but it is a business proposition as well, for it is much profitable to have a fair amount of perfect fruit to send to market, rather than an enormous lot of imperfect apples, the majority of which must be sent to the cider mill or cannery to be worked up into products of the orchard.

There are some growers who adhere to the right idea in thinning the fruit, but they are in the majority, which fact accounts for the small revenue that is received from some orchards that are capable of making a record production in better fruit. An apple tree, like a horse or man, can be worked to a certain degree with profit, and when the load they have to carry is beyond their strength there is bound to be a reaction that will result disastrously to the orchard.

The new laws that went into effect last month which include the Sitzer bill and the Jakway bill, make it imperative that the fruit grower give more attention to the production of fruit in the future than he has in the past. This is a good thing for the orchardists, for while they may think that it is a hardship at first to grow crops of good fruit the returns they will get from this class of product will be so much greater that they will be more than pleased with the financial results from these bills.

As fruit growing has reached the point where it is a science, the same thing is true of packing and marketing. The grower who will make the most money under the new conditions, is the man who can meet the requirements with good grace, and use the proper amount of headwork in his orchard. Thinning the fruit instead of resulting in loss to the grower will prove his greatest source of profit.

ANNUAL BANQUET

Y. M. C. A. Event to be Held at Beach Hotel Thursday Evening.

The second annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Young Men's Christian Association will be held at the Beach Hotel tomorrow (Thursday) evening.

The principal address will be delivered by Chas. R. Wilkes, one of the most prominent attorneys of south western Michigan, who for the past eight years has been chairman of the Allegan County Y. M. C. A. His address should be of great value to the men and women of the county who are interested in this great work.

The committee in charge are hard at work completing the final arrangements, and the fact that the banquet is to be held at the Beach Hotel is evidence that the inner man will be well taken care of.

Killing Frosts.

The sudden drop in temperature Friday night was felt more in the eastern part of the county than in our immediate vicinity. Sunday night near Gaylord and Vanderbilt, corn, potatoes and all late crops were completely killed by the heavy frost. East of Vanderbilt ice formed to the thickness of an eighth of an inch in shallow dishes, and everything subject to early frosts was frozen. In Charlevoix, which is protected by the lake breeze, but small damage has been reported.

SERMON FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

Boys and Girls of Charlevoix Admonished To Get Busy.

Each Child Should Remember That Education is Key of Life Success.

An editorial in the Grand Rapids Herald of a recent date is headed "Sermon for School Children." This sermon is just as applicable to the boys and girls of Charlevoix as it is to those of Grand Rapids or any other city, and as the public schools of Charlevoix have their real opening for study this week, the liberty of printing it verbatim is taken. It is as follows:

"School is opening today. With it comes opportunity for the boys and girls who realize that education is the key of life success. And the key to education is application and concentration.

"The greatest lesson that school children can learn—right now at the opening of the term—is the lesson that studies will not be 'hard' and 'burdensome' and 'uninteresting' if they will study which they are studying.

"Applications to a lesson for a concentrated quarter of an hour is worth more than half a day of empty staring at a school book while the mind jumps around thoughts of football and chocolate ice cream sodas and Halloween parties.

"No child can do two things at once—and do either of them well. No child can figure out a problem in arithmetic and plan for next Saturday's fun at the same time.

"If you'll study while you are studying, boys and girls, you'll get your lessons twice as well and you'll have twice as much time for something else.

"When you have a lesson to get, get it—put everything else out of your mind—concentrate your whole thought on that one task. Before you know it, you'll have your lesson and you'll be ready for play—while the other fellow, who was trying to think about the lesson and play at the same time, will have neither a good lesson nor a good play."

When you buy life insurance in any stock company, you are customer, not a partner, and only get part of the profits. All the rest is taken by the stock holding owner or owners. But in

The New York Life you get all the profits, as it has no stock holders; its more than 700 million dollars is owned by the policy holders only. For more information and insurance, see

FARMER SHOT BY BROTHER

Jesse Arnold Was Critically Injured by Bullet From Revolver.

John Arnold the Assailant is Being Searched For by the Police.

As a result of a hand-to-hand encounter in which a thirty-eight calibre revolver was used, Jesse Arnold, aged 41, a Boyne Falls farmer, was critically injured last Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

The brothers were quarreling over a widow with whom John had been in love and whose rival had won her hand. Jesse made the rivals the subject of discussion in regard to his financial status and John took exception. John was infuriated by his brother's comments and thinking that his brother was favoring his enemy, rushed at Jesse and attempted to hit him. Jesse was the quickest and dodged the blow and knocked John into the corner. Then John drew a revolver and fired one shot while the two were about six feet apart. Jesse crumpled to the floor and John made his getaway.

Jesse's wife hearing the scuffle and shot rushed to her husband's aid from their home next door. Jesse was the only one around the place who was able to harness a horse so he had to hitch one of his horses to a buggy while the blood rushed from the wound. He was then driven to Boyne Falls where he and his wife caught the train for Petoskey.

Surgeons at the Petoskey hospital found the bullet lodged in his back, having entered the abdomen and passed through a bone before stopping in its course. Mr. Arnold's condition may prove fatal owing to the course the bullet took. Jesse is married and has a wife and four children, two of whom are married.

Although a warrant was sworn out for his arrest, John is now housed at the county farm at East Jordan. He was taken there by W. A. Davoli, of Boyne Falls, and is sick.

Dr. G. C. Conkle, of Boyne City, who attended him once professionally says that his case is somewhat puzzling. Jesse Arnold stated in the Petoskey hospital he thought his brother's mind was affected by his sickness. There is said to be truth in this statement. Dr. Conkle states that Jesse is getting along well, with good chances of improving.

GOLDEN WEDDING AT IRONTON

Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey MacDonald Celebrated the Occasion.

Settled in County When It Was a Forest Wilderness Forty-Five Years Ago.

Wednesday, September 10th, marked the fiftieth anniversary in the married life of Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey MacDonald, of Ironton, which event was the occasion of a becoming celebration at their home in Eveline township.

Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald are among the first settlers in Charlevoix, having come to this county from Wisconsin, about forty-five years ago, when the country was practically a forest wilderness. They first settled near East Jordan, but for the past thirty-two years have resided at their present location, near Ironton.

Their marriage has been blessed with six children, all of whom are living, namely, Donald, treasurer of Eveline township; Malcolm, supervisor of Eveline township; Duncan, living in the same township; and three daughters, Mrs. A. L. Sheldon, of East Jordan; Mrs. Geo. Jardine, of Eveline; and Mrs. Samuel D. Pepper, of Lansing.

Although their lives have been active, and the experience of pioneer life were not always free from hardship, both Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald are now enjoying the best of health, and are as busy with their farm duties as in their younger days. Their home is always open to their many friends, and their chief enjoyment in life has been derived from doing good to others.

On their golden wedding day they were presented with a purse of gold from their own family, and also received many expressions from other friends, who all join in wishing them many more years of health and prosperity.

THEATRICAL

Harold Bell Wright, the author of "The Shepherd of the Hills," "The Winning of Barbara Worth," "The Calling of Dan Matthews" and "That Printer of Udell's" in collaboration with Elsbeth W. Reynolds, a dramatization of his most popular story, "The Shepherd of the Hills." The play has received an excellent production from Gaskill and MacVitty and Manager Loskot of Charlevoix Theatre has secured the original cast and production for his theatre on Tuesday evening, September 30.

"The Shepherd of the Hills" is a splendid story of real life among the Ozark hills of Missouri and Arkansas. It is a story that you will easily find a Mutton Hollow, a hill like Dewey Bald and people like Sammy Lane, Young Matt, Mad Howard and Father Howitt. Clinging to the beautiful story simply told is the very atmosphere of the life of the picturesque region which is so sadly unfamiliar to the travelers in search of new scenes. It is a clean and strong play, well worth seeing many times.

SHAPTON SELLS OUT

Sells Farm South of Town to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Edwards.

On Monday of last week a deal was closed whereby Mr. and Mrs. Albert Edwards becomes the possessors of the tract farm owned by Richard Shapton located just south of this city.

For a number of years Mr. Edwards has had charge of the Waller Stock farm north of the city, and has proven himself a very capable farmer. They will move into their new place in a short time.

First Widow Pension.

Kummet county's first so-called "widow pension" was issued last week to Mr. Alice L. Reed of Alauson. Since the death of her husband a year ago Mrs. Reed has worked so hard to support her three children, the oldest of whom is five years of age, that she broke down. She will be allowed $5 per week for a year by the county.

Mammoth Fish.

Last Saturday the Steamer Beaver brought over from St. James a sturgeon fish caught there by Frank Miller. The fish measured five feet six inches from the tip of its nose to the tip of the tail. Its weight was 100 pounds. The Booth Fisheries Company purchased the fish. This is another illustration of Northern Michigan's superiority and wonders.

FIRST PRIZE EXHIBITION

Of Season 1913 to be Held at Vought's Garage September 20.

Splendid Premium List and Association Urge Exhibitors to Come.

The first exhibition of farm products for the season 1913 will be held at Vought's garage, Saturday, September 20, under the auspices of the Charlevoix Retail Merchants Association. The premium list which "will be found on printed bills, contains the usual number of prizes heretofore offered.

There is plenty of room in the garage, and exhibitors will find ample space to display everything they may wish to place before the public. The success of these exhibitions since they were first inaugurated, is due to the interest shown by the exhibitors, and the prizes offered are well worth striving for. It should be an incentive for our farmers to show the best products of their farms as well as an assurance that the exhibition will be well worth the attention of everybody.

All exhibits must be in before twelve o'clock. The awarding of prizes will be made at four o'clock by competent judges, and immediately afterwards the product exhibited will be sold at auction to the highest bidder, the proceeds to go to the owners. Special bargains in all lines of merchandise will be offered by the merchants of Charlevoix, on this day, and visitors who come to the city, will have the opportunity of seeing the best display of farm products in northern Michigan and also a chance to do their shopping at bargain day prices, thus making your visit to the city a profitable one.

Mrs. Williams Resigns.

Announcement was made Tuesday that Mrs. Daniel Williams, keeper of the Harbor Point light-house, on Little Traverse bay for 21 years, and for 15 years previous keeper of the Beaver Island, has resigned, to take effect November 1, after which she and her husband will reside in this city. Mrs. Williams is known as the only lady lightkeeper on Lake Michigan, and is author of "The Child of the Sea," a book written about her own life among the Normans under King Strong on Beaver Island.

Dummy Service Discontinued.

Suburban service on the Pere Marquette between Petoskey and Charlevoix was discontinued Sunday and the big motorcar has been taken to a southern district. The motorcar service has been highly satisfactory and will be inaugurated again next season.

Charlevoix Makes a Hit With Board of Poor Commissioners

ATTENDED FAIR IN A BODY

Abouts Two-thirds of Counties in State Were Represented

Meeting a Successful and Profitable One—Old Officers Unanimously Chosen—Next Meeting Place

The tenth annual convention of the state associations of Superintendents of Poor and Keepers of County Infirmaries held in this city last week came to an ending Thursday, when the association accepted an invitation from the county fair officials to become their guests at the fair on that day.

About two-thirds of the counties of the state were represented, and it was one of the most pleasant and profitable meetings the organization has ever held. The program was fully carried out, and many important subjects were thoroughly and ably discussed.

That Charlevoix is a logical point for meetings of this character was the universal opinion of those present, and that they had been royally entertained and given the time of their lives was expressed by all.

Following are the resolutions adopted:

"WHEREAS, This Tenth Annual Convention of the State Association of the Superintendents of the Poor of Michigan, held in the city of Charlevoix on September 9-11, 1913, is hereby declared to be one of the best and most profitable meetings held by this association since its organization,

Resolved, That this association extend our heartfelt thanks to the mayor and citizens of this city for their unbounded hospitality, and to the superintendents of the poor of Charlevoix county for their untiring efforts in our behalf. Be it further,

Resolved, That we extend our special thanks to Circuit Judge F. W. Mayne, Probate Judge S. A. Correll of Charlevoix, and I. B. Draper of Ann Arbor for their able addresses; also to Miss Nita Mayne, Mr. Otto Powers and the Wilkinson Bros. Male Quartette for entertainment furnished during the sessions. We also extend our thanks to the Charlevoix County—Agricultural Society for their hospitality. And be it further,

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt thanks to our president and secretary for their untiring efforts in behalf of the association during the past year, and congratulate the association upon their continued service for the ensuing year."

In the selection of officers for the ensuing year, the old officers were unanimously chosen:

President, V. H. Billings, Grand Rapids.

Vice-president, B. K. Hazen, Centerville.

Secretary-treasurer, A. E. Cross, East Jordan.

Grand Rapids was the choice for the meeting place of the association in 1914.

PIERRE "FEROCIE" showed disapproval in his every attitude as plainly as disgust peered from the seams in his dark face. It lurked in his scowl and in the curl of his long jawline that bit among the sled dogs. No at least thought Willard as he eluded the swinging sledge.

They were skirting the coast, keeping to the glare ice, wind swept and clean, that lay outside the tumbled shore pack. The team ran silently in the free gait of the gray wolf, rump in harness from pure joy of motion and the intoxication of perfect life, making the sled runners whine like the song of a cat.

This route is dangerous, of course, from hidden cracks in the floes, and most travelers hug the bluffs, but he who rides with Pierre "Ferocie" takes chances. It was this that had won him the name of "Will" Pierre, the most reckless, tireless man of the trails, a scouter at port, bolting through danger with rush and frenzy, overcoming sheerly by vigor those obstacles which destroy strong men in the north.

The power that pulsed within him gleamed from his eyes, rang in his song, showed in the aggressive thrust of his sensual face.

This particular morning, however, Pierre's distemper had crystallized into a great contentment for his companion. Of all trails the most detestable is to hit the trail with half a man, a pale, anaemic wretch like this stranger.

Though modest in the extent of his learning, Pierre gloated in a freedom of speech the which no man dared deny him. He turned to eye his companion exactly for a second time, and contentment was patent in his gaze. Willard appeared slender and palid in his furs, though his clear cut features spoke a certain strength and much refinement.

"Bah! I think you dam poor feller," he said finally. "You you going start those trip, eh? She's need beeg mans, too little runt like you."

Amusement at this frankness glimmered in Willard's eyes. "You're like all ignorant people. You think to order to stand hardship a man should be able to toss a sack of flour in his teeth or juggle a cask of salt horse."

"Sare 'tug," grinned Pierre. "That's right. Look at me. Mehle you hear 'bout Pierre 'Ferocie' some time, eh?" "Oh, yes, everybody knows you, you know you're a big bully. I've seen you drink a quart of this wood alcohol they call whisky up here and then jump the bar from a stand, but you're all animal—you haven't refinement and the culture that makes real strength. It's the mind that makes us stand punishment."

"Ha, ha, ha," laughed the Canadian. "What a fenny talk! She'll take the heduate man for stun' the col, eh? Mon Dieu!" He roared again till the sled dogs turned fearful glances backward and bushy tails drooped under the weight of their fright. Great noise came offest with great rage from Pierre, and they had too frequently felt them both to forget.

"Yes, you haven't the mentality. Some time you'll use up your physical resources and go to pieces like a burned wick."

Pierre was greatly amused. His yellow teeth shone, and he gave vent to violent mirth as, following the thought, he pictured a naked mind wandering over the hills with the quicksilver at 90 degrees.

"Did you ever see a six day race? Of course not. You barbarians haven't sunk to the level of our dissolute east, where we joy in Roman spectacles. But if you had you'd see it's will that wins; it's the man that eats his soul by liches. The educated soldier stands the campaign best. You run too much to muscle. You're not balanced."

"I think mehle you'll ave chance for show 'in, thees stun' will of yours. She's going be lone 'mush' trow the mountains, plente snow, plente cold." Although Pierre's ridicule was galling, Willard felt the charm of the morning too strongly to admit of anger or to argue his pet theory.

The sun, brilliant and cold, lent a paradoxical cheerfulness to the desolation, and, though never a sign of life broke the stillness around them, the beauty of the scintillant, gleaming mountains, distinct as emeralds, that guarded the bay, appealed to him with the strange attraction of the arctic.

That attraction that calls and calls insistently till men forsake their country for its mystery.

He breathed the biting air cleaned by leagues of lifeless barrens and voids of crackling frost till he ached with the exhilaration of a perfect morning on the circle.

Also before him modulated the grandest string of dees the coast had known. Seven there were, tall and gray, with tails like plumes, which none but Pierre could lay hand upon, fierce and fearless as their master. He drove with the killing cruelty of a stamper, and they loved him.

"You say you have gruh cached at the old Indian hut on the Good Hope?" questioned Willard.

"Sare! Five poun' bacon, leetle flour and rice. I cache one gum boot, too, in! Good thing for make fire queeck, eh?"

"You bet! An old rubber boot comes handy when it's too cold to make shavings."

Leaving the coast, they ascended a deep and tortuous river where the snow lay thick and soft. One man on snowshoes broke trail for the dogs till they reached the foothills. It was hard work, but infinitely preferable to that which followed, for now they came into a dangerous stretch of overflows. The stream, frozen to its bed, clogged the passage of the spring water beneath, forcing it up through cracks till it spread over the solid ice, forming pools and sheets covered with treacherous ice skins. Wet feet are fatal to man and beast, and they made laborious detours, wallowing trails through tangled willows waist deep in the snow smoother or clinging precariously to the overhanging bluffs. As they reached the river's source the sky blackened suddenly and great clouds of snow rushed over the black hills, rolling down into the valley with a furious drive. They flung up their dusty tent only to have it flattened by the force of the gale, that cut like well honed steel. Frozen spots leaped out white on their faces, while their hands stiffened ere they could fasten the guy strings.

Finally, having lashed the tent bottom to the protruding willow tops, by grace of heavy lifting they strained their flapping shelter up sufficiently to crawl within.

"By gar! She's blow 'nap ver queeck!" yelled Pierre as he set the ten pound sheet iron stove, its pipe swaying drunkenly with the heaving tent.

"Good 'tug she hit as in the brush," he spoke as calmly as though danger was distant, and a moment later the little box was roaring with its oil soaked kindlings.

"Will this stove burn green willow tops?" cried Willard.

"Sare! She's good stove. She'll burn hieles eef you get 'im start one times. See 'in get red?"

They rubbed the stiff spots from their cheeks; then, seizing the ax, Willard crawled forth into the storm and dug at the base of the gnarled bushes. Occasionally a shrub assumed the proportions of a man's wrist, but rarely. Gathering an armful, he bore them inside, and, twisting the tips into whistles, he fed the fire. The frozen twigs sizzled and snapped, threatening to fall utterly, but with much blowing he sustained a blaze sufficient to melt a pot of snow. Boiling was out of the question, but the tea leaves became soaked and the bacon equitized.

Pierre froed and fed the dogs. Each gulped his dried salmon and, curling in the lee of the tent, was quickly drifted over. Next he cut blocks from the solid bottom snow and built a barricade to windward. Then he accumulated a mass of willow tops without the tent fly. All the time the wind blew down the valley like the breath of a giant bellows.

"Snapper," shouted Willard, and as Pierre crawled into the candlelight he found him squatted, for huddled over the stove, which settled steadily into the snow, melting its way downward toward a firmer foundation.

The heat was insufficient to thaw the frozen sweat in his clothes; his eyes were heavy and wet from smoke, and his nose needed continuous blowing, but he spoke pleasantly, a fact which Pierre noted with approval.

"We'll need a habous corpus for this stove if you don't get something to hold her up, and I might state, if it's worthy of mention, that your nose is frozen again."

Pierre brought an armful of stones from the creek edge, distributing them beneath the stove on a bed of twisted willows; then, swallowing their scanty, half cooked food, they crawled, shivering, into the deerskin sleeping bags that animal heat might dry their clammy garments.

Four days the wind roared and the ice liches poured over their shelter while they huddled beneath. When one travels on raibons delay is dangerous. Each morning, dragging themselves out into the maelstrom, they took sticks and poked into the drifts for dogs. Each animal as found was exhumed, given a fish and became straightway reburied in the swirling white that seethed down from the mountains.

On the fifth, without warning, the storm died and the air stilled to a perfect silence.

"These dog had froze," said Pierre, awaiting earnestly as he harnessed. "I don't like eet much. They going play hout, I'm 'frid." He knelt and chewed from between their toes the ice pellets that had accumulated. A malamout is hard pressed to let his feet mass, and this added to the men's uneasiness.

As they mounted the great divide mountains faded away on every hand, barren, desolate, marble white, always the whiteness, always the listening silence that oppressed like a weight. Myriads of creek valleys radiated below, in a bewildering maze of twisting seams.

"Those are the Ass' Ears, I suppose," said Willard, gazing at two great fangs that bit deep into the sky line. "Is it true that no man has ever reached them?"

"Yes, the Hinnun say that's where ball the storm come from, because, when the win' blow trow the ass' ear, look out! Somebody going ketch 'ell."

Dogs' feet wear quickly after freezing, for crushed snow cuts like a knife. Spots of blood showed in their tracks, growing more plentiful till every print was a crimson stain. They limped pitifully on their raw pads, and occasionally one whined. At every stop they sank in track, licking their lacerated paws, rising only at the cost of much whipping.

On the second night, faint and starved, they reached the hut. Lugging away the drifts, they crawled inside to find it half full of snow—snow which had sifted through the crevices. Pierre groped among the shadows and swore excitedly.

"What's up?" said Willard. "Vell effort of the simplest is exhausting when spent with hunger, and these were the first words he had spoken for hours.

"By gar, she's gone! Somebody stole my grub!"

Willard felt a terrible sinking, and his stomach cried for food. "How far is it to the Crooked River Roadhouse?"

"One long day drive—forty mile."

"We must make it tomorrow or go hungry, eh? Well, this isn't the first dogfish I ever ate!" Both men gnawed a molly dried salmon from their precious store.

As Willard removed his footgear he groaned.

"What's the matter?"

"I froze my foot two days ago—snowshoe strap too tight!" He exhaled a loud, from which, in removing his inner sock, the flesh and skin had come away.

"That's all right," grinned Pierre. "You got the beeg will left yet. It take the heduate man for stan' the col, you know."

Willard gritted his teeth.

They awoke to the whine of a gray windstorm that swept the cutting snow in swirling clouds and made travel a madness. The next day was worse.

Two days of hunger weigh heavy when the cold weakens, and they grew gaunt and fell away in their features.

"I'm glad we've got another feed for the dogs," remarked Willard. "We can't let them run hungry, even if we do."

"I think she's be half right tomor," ventured Pierre. "Thes ain't snow—jus' wot, himby all blow hout. Sare! I'll eat 'nuff fore 'ole harry."

For days both men had been cold, and the sensation of complete warmth had come to seem strange and unreal, while their faces cracked where the spurs had been.

Willard felt himself on the verge of collapse. He recalled his words about strong men, gazing the while at Pierre. The Canadian evinced suffering only in the haggard droop of eye and mouth; otherwise he looked strong and dozed.

Willard felt his own features had shrunk to a mask of bone, jawed suffering, and he set his mental screws, muttering to himself.

He was dizzy and faint as he stretched himself in the still morning air upon waking and huddled painfully, but as his companion emerged from the darkened shelter into the crystalline brightness he forgot his own misery at sight of him. The big man reeled as though struck when the dazzle from the hills reached him, and he moaned, shielding his sight. Snow blindness had found him in a night.

Slowly they plodded out of the valley, for hunger gnawed acutely, and they left a trail of blood tracks from the dogs. It took the combined efforts of both men to dash them to foot after each pause. Thus progress was slow and fraught with agony.

As they rose near the pass miles of arctic wastes bared themselves. All about towered bald domes, while everywhere stretched the monotonous white, the endless snow unbroken by tree or shrub, pallid and menacing, menacing to the eye.

"Thank God, the worst's over," sighed Willard, flinging himself on to the sled. "We'll make it to the summit next time; then she's downhill all the way to the roadhouse!"

Pierre said nothing. Away to the northward glimmered the Ass' Ears, and as the speaker eyed them endlessly he noted guazy shrouds and streamers veiling their tops. The phenomenon interested him, for he knew that here must be wind—wind, the terror of the black tundra, the hopeless, one-less master of the barrens! However, the distant range beneath the twin peaks showed clear and distinct against the sky, and he did not mention the occurrence to the guide, although he recalled the words of the Indians, "Beware of the wind through the Ass' Ears."

ALAN, a colored man, slipped the steep slope, wing in the sliding snow, straining silently at the load; again they threw themselves exhausted upon it. Now, as he eyed the panorama below, it seemed to have suffered a subtle change, huddled and odd. Although but a few minutes had elapsed, the coast mountains no longer loomed clear against the horizon, and his visual range appeared foreshortened, as though the inter distances had lengthened, bringing closer the edge of things. The twin peaks seemed endlessly distant and hazy, while the air had thickened as though congested with possibilities lending a remoteness to the landscape.

"If it blows up on us here, we're gone," he thought, "for it's miles to shelter, and we're right in the saddle of the hills."

Pierre, half blinded as he was, arose uneasily and cast the air like a wild beast, his great head thrown back, his nostrils quivering.

"I smell the win'!" he cried. "Mon Dieu! She's goin' blow!"

A volatile pennant flouted out from a nearby peak, hanging about its crest like faint smoke. Then along the brow of the pass whirled a wisp of drifting, twisting smokelets, lifting higher and higher, restless and aimless, setting in a hollow. They sensed a thrill and rustle to the air, though never a breath had touched them; then, as they mounted higher, a draft fanned them, icy as interstellar space. The view from the summit was grotesquely distorted, and, glancing upward, they found the guardian peaks had gone smoke with clouds of snow that whirled confusedly, while an increasing breath sucked over the summit.

Editor of the Courier.

I wish to call the attention of the citizens and authorities of Charlevoix to a condition of rowdiness that is rampant in this place.

On my way to church on Sunday evening, passing up Park avenue, my attention was called to a disturbance around Mrs. Washburn's house when I noticed about a dozen young hooligans peeping in the window and generally kicking up a ruckus. Just then Mrs. Washburn came out and remonstrated with them. At the same time without saying a word, as I was standing on the walk, I got a blow on the head with some missile and then some more. They then scattered but before I reached the church I was again assailed. This is not my first experience of this kind, and permit me to say that after a long life spent in three of the leading nations of the world and years in some of the largest cities, I have never seen anything to compare with the unrestrained young toughs of Charlevoix.

I say (unrestrained) because there is no authority to control them. We elect and pay officials among other things for protection. Oh, we get it! Speak to anyone about invoking their assistance and they will laugh at you as if they think you should expect it.

I hope this will have the effect of arousing the authorities to see to it that a law abiding citizen will get the protection to which they are entitled.

TOMATOES AND MEAT.

BREAKFAST MENU.

Cereal, Cream.
Tomatoes and Bacon.
French Fried Potatoes.
Corn Bread.
Cafe au Lait.

ONE of the most useful summer vegetables is the tomato. Not only may it alone be cooked in many appetizing ways, but it combines nicely with other foods. Tomatoes combined with fish or meats make a wholesome summer dish.

Combined With Fish.

Tomatoes With Fish.—Lay alternate slices of canned tunny and fresh tomato upon a dish and between each slice lay a thin round of onion. Garnish the edge of the dish with a border of sliced cooked, cold potato. Sprinkle the whole with salad dressing.

Tomatoes and Bacon.—Take large, ripe tomatoes and cut them into thick slices. Butter a broiler lightly and broil the slices of tomatoes over a clear fire. Arrange on a hot dish, sprinkle with pepper and place on each a slice of tomato and a slice or two of crisp fried bacon.

Baked in the Oven.

Tomatoes and Eggs.—Take some good sized tomatoes, but not too ripe, remove stalks, halve and seed them, season with pepper and oil, place them on a greased pan, then add some minced mushrooms with a little onion and simmer in an uncovered pan with a small piece of butter. Moisten bread in a little stock, then crush and break up with a spoon. Add the yolks of two eggs, salt and pepper to taste. Remove the mushrooms from the fire and add the above mixture, stirring well. Then garnish each tomato with the mixture. Sprinkle with bread crumbs, add a few drops of oil and cook in a slow oven for about an hour.

Nice Supper Dish.

Tomatoes and Beet.—Take ripe but solid tomatoes and dredge them with flour. Put a tablespoonful of butter in an agate frying pan and when melted add the tomatoes. Stir and cook smooth. Let cook about five minutes. Have half a pound of dried beef chopped as thin as possible and shredded. Add this to the tomatoes and simmer gently for a few minutes and serve. A green pepper with seeds removed and shredded is a nice addition and gives a bit of color.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

PLUM DESSERTS.

WHEN selecting plums be sure that you use only ripe ones. They require plenty of sugar, and when dampness or greenness are cooked the skins should be pricked with a needle to prevent their bursting.

Fruit Cup Custards.

Plum Trifle.—Put stewed plums through a sieve. Add to each cupful of pulp the whites of three eggs beaten stiff and sweetened. Fill the cups two-thirds full of soft custard and heap the fruit of Marquette on top.

Fruit Compote.—Take two pounds of sugar to each three pounds of plums. Wash the plums and drain them. Put the sugar on a slow fire in an enameled vessel with as much water as will dissolve it. Let it simmer slowly. Prick each plum with a needle and place the fruit in another cooking vessel. Pour the syrup over it, and cook until the skins break and the plums are thoroughly heated.

Served Ice Cold.

Scalloped Plums.—Take the large red sweet plums. Peel them, remove the stones and cut the pulp in large pieces. Take a fancy dish, place a layer of prepared plums, then a layer of broken walnut meats, then a layer of sweetened whipped cream and so on until dish is full. Each layer of plums should be well sprinkled with sugar. Cover the top with the cream and set the dish on ice to chill.

With Whipped Cream.

Plum Tart.—Make a crust with half a pound of sifted flour, one-quarter pound of butter, a tablespoonful of sugar, the beaten yolk of an egg, a pinch of salt and just enough milk to mix smooth. Line the edge of a deep pie dish with a strip of this paste, fill it with ripe stoned plums, add a small cupful of granulated sugar and cover the pie with the crust. Ornament the edges and bake in the oven until lightly browned. Sprinkle the top with powdered sugar and serve with whipped cream or a thin boiled custard.

A Substantial Pudding.

Baked Plum Pudding.—Make a batter with two beaten eggs, five tablespoonfuls of flour, a pint of milk and a pinch of salt. Remove the stones from a quart of large ripe plums, crack them and put the kernels inside of the plums again. Mix the fruit with two heaping tablespoonfuls of moist sugar and stir it lightly into the batter. Turn it into a buttered pudding dish and bake in a hot oven till done. Sprinkle powdered sugar over the top and serve hot with half a cupful of butter, a cupful of sugar and a well beaten egg stirred to a cream and flavored

HIS QUEER SENSE OF HUMOR.

It Found Relief In Practical Jokes Upon the Clergy.

Some thirty odd years ago a young man came to New York from England (I have forgotten his name), and for a year or so he posed as a very ardent churchman. He had a mania which seemed to be the making of trouble for other people, with no particular object except that and certainly with no advantage to himself, as he very naturally remained "lame."

An illustrative, he would send out a hundred or more postal cards addressed to as many different plumbers in New York, asking them to call on a certain day, at a given hour, at the residence of the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of Trinity church. Another time it would be an army of bankers, and so on. On one occasion he sent invitations to a dozen of the clergy to dine with Dr. Dix on a given date. Imagine the good doctor's consternation when his unexpected guests arrived!

One of his bits of "funny" work, in which he used the name of the late Bishop Jagger, was as follows: Dr. Cornelius R. Swope was the vicar of Trinity chapel, in Twenty-fifth street, at the time, and Dr. Horatio Potter the bishop of New York. Dr. Dix had become so exasperated as hardly to know what to do, and one day he went to consult Dr. Swope and to ask his advice as to what could be done, taking with him one of the cards that he had received. On looking at it Dr. Swope said:

"I recognize that handwriting because I received a card some time ago in the same hand, which I have kept as a curiosity."

This was the card:

Cincinnati, Ohio.
Dear Cornelius—It is rumored out here that you would like to be a bishop. If this is true please let me know at once. I have great influence with Morg. Dix and will see old Potter about it, so—

If you would like to be a bishop And with the bishops stand. A miter on your forehead

And a crozier in your hand, please write me immediately. Faithfully yours,

THOMAS JAGGAR, Bishop of Southern Ohio.

New York became rather too "hot" for our friend shortly after that, as the police got on his track, and he disappeared. He turned up later at his old tricks in Pittsburgh, I think, where he was exposed, and I don't remember what became of him.—Rev. Dr. W. W. Holley in Living Church.

Books From Unexpected Places.

Not only art, but literature, has been produced in unexpected places. There was, for instance, Robert Bloomfield, who produced his "Farmer's Boy" while working so hard as a shoemaker in a garret with five or six others that he frequently had to carry a hundred lines in his head through lack of leisure to write them down. James Fogg, too, "the Ritz Shepherd," wrote his earliest verses while tending his sheep in the Berkshire highlands. And Taylor, "the Water Poet," combined the very different offices of literary man and Thames waterman.—London Chronicle.

The Third Hand.

How often the little things in life make impressions that linger in our memories long after the larger events are forgotten! Several years ago I was making a visit in a family where there were several daughters. One of the girls brought a hat into the sewing room one morning and prepared to trim it. Before doing anything else she took a hatpin and pinned the hat firmly to her skirts at the knees, so that she had both hands free and held the ribbon and flowers in place with her left hand while she sewed them with her right.—Philadelphia North American.

It's Easy to Learn.

Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, left on his marvelous discovery while studying and while tending the deaf.

Professor Bell once said, apropos of this fact:

"Yes, we can learn valuable secrets from the most unlikely sources. A Persian poet, famed for his wisdom, was once asked by his king where he had learned his philosophy.

"From the blind, sire," the poet replied—"from the blind, who never advance a step until they have tried the ground."—New York Tribune.

Diamonds and Glass.

The diamond, instead of being a real solid, is a mass of atoms all in rapid and violent motion. The edge of the stone is formed of these moving molecules as well as the body. Now, glass is also made up of moving atoms, though they do not move so rapidly or so violently as the diamond atoms. When the diamond edge, therefore, is applied to the glass surface the diamond atoms drive the glass atoms out of the way and force a passage.

The Literal Mind.

All orders to native servants in India must be literally given, for in that manner they will be received. A missionary once took a country lad as a servant when going out on a boating journey. As there are no lavatories on board the country boats, one's ablutions have to be performed in a very simple manner, an ordinary bucket serving as a wash bowl. The boy was told to bring some water and in doing so happened to spill a little on the floor. "Why don't you throw it all over me?" asked the missionary jocosely. "Aha," said the lad, and immediately, to his master's astonishment, he took up the pail and emptied it over his employer's head.

Blissful Ignorance.

He—I am told that he has more money than he knows what to do with. She—Such ignorance must be bliss!

This office was presented last week a large sweet pepper grown by Frank Reed. The pepper measured 5 inches long and was 1 1/2 inches in circumference. It was but one of a large number of the same variety grown by Mr. Reed.

O. D. Hammond, county road commissioner, has been appointed by Gov. Ferns as a delegate to attend the second annual meeting of the United States Good Roads Association to be held at St. Louis, Missouri, November 13 to 15, 1913.

The Baxter W. R. C. No. 173 held their regular meeting at the I. O. O. F. hall Thursday, September 11th. The Petoskey W. R. C. are invited to the next regular meeting October 9th. Mrs. Montgomery of the Petoskey W. R. C. will inspect Baxter W. R. C. at the same meeting. All members are requested to be present.

Marriage licenses issued this week were to William Schellfeld, age 25, and Ollie Warden, age 22, both of East Jordan; Vernal Dolenzel, age 20, of Boyne City and Mary Pellotte, age 20, of Kipling, Mich.; Ardott Everett Watson, age 28, of Boyne City and Ida May Russ, age 21, of Beaumont, Texas. William Campbell, age 31 and Madelle Mand Stokes, age 25, both of Boyne City.

A touring car driven by Harry Gebo, of Charlevoix, while leaving Petoskey Saturday evening, was ditched at the corner of West Mitchell street and Wachtel avenue. Mr. Gebo failed to see the obstruction and the red light blocking West Mitchell street from traffic, until he was nearly on it, and then, in attempting to turn up Wachtel ave., he landed the machine in the ditch. The front axle and the "washbone" were bent but the machine was otherwise unhurt. Neither Gebo nor his companion was injured.—Petoskey Evening News.

"THE TEST"

stronger each second. Dry snow began to rustle softly about their feet. So swiftly were the changes wrought that before the mind had grasped their import the storm was on them, roaring down from every side, swooping out of the boiling sky, a raging blast from the voids of sunless space.

Pierro's shouts as he slashed at the sled lashings were snatched from his lips in scattered scraps. He dragged forth the whirling tent and threw himself upon it with the sleeping bags. Having cut loose the dogs, Willard crawled within his sack, and they drew the dapping canvas over them. The air was twilight and heavy with effluents granules that hurried past in a droue.

They removed their outer garments that the fur might fold closer against them and lay exposed to the full force of the gale. They hoped to be drifted over, but no snow could lodge in this hurricane, and it sifted past, dry and sharp, eddying out a bare place where in they lay. Thus the wind drove the chill in their bones bitterly.

An unmoored human body responds but weakly, so, vibrated by their feet and labors, their suffering smote them with tenfold cruelty.

All night the north wind shouted, and, as the next day dawned with its violence undiminished, the frost crept in upon them till they robed and tossed shivering. Twice they essayed to crawl out, but were driven back to cover for endless, hopeless hours.

It is in such bleak, sunless times that thought becomes distorted. Willard felt his mind wandering through bleak dreams and tortured fancies, always to find himself harping on his early argument with Pierro. "It's the mind that counts," later he reasoned to the fact that his knees, where they pressed against the bag, were frozen; also his feet were numb and senseless.

In his acquired consciousness he knew that along the course of his previous mental vagary lay madness, and the need of action bore upon him imperatively.

He shouted to his mate, but "Willard" Pierro seemed strangely apathetic. "We've got to run for it at daylight. We're freezing. Here, hold on! What are you doing? Wait for daylight!" Pierro had scrambled stiffly out of his cover, and his gabbings reached Willard. He raised a clinched fist into the darkness of the streaming night, cursing horribly with words that appalled the other.

"Man, man! Don't curse your God! This is bad enough as it is. Cover up, quick!"

Although apparently unmindful of his presence, the other crawled back muttering.

As the dim morning grayed the smother they rose and fought their way downward toward the valley. Long since they had lost their griping hunger and now held only an apathetic indifference to food, with a crushing dread of the cold and a stubborn sense of their extreme necessity.

They felt many times, but gradually drew themselves more under control, the exercise expending them as they staggered downward, blinded and buffeted, their only hope the roadhouse.

Willard marvelled dully at the change in Pierro. This face had shriveled to blackened, frozen streaks upon a bony substrature and lighted by feverish, glittering, black, black eyes. It seemed to him that his own lagging body had long since failed and that his aching, naked soul wandered stilly through the endless day. As night approached Pierro stopped, frost on his face, and with legs far apart, he launched. In varying this hour a sound shocked Willard into a keener sense of the surroundings, and it grew to irritate him, for the Frenchman's mental wanderings increased with the darkness. What made him rouse one with his awful laughter? These spells of walking insensibility were pleasant far. At last the big man fell. To Willard's mechanical endeavors to help he spoke sleepily, but with the sanity of a man under great stress. "But no good. I'm going freeze right here—freeze stiff as 'ell. Au revoir."

"Get up!" Willard kicked him weakly, then sat upon the prostrate man as his own faculties went wandering. Eventually he roused and, digging into the snow, buried the other, first covering his face with the ample parka hood. Then he struck down the valley. In one lucid spell he found he had followed a sled trail which was blown clear and distinct by the wind that had now almost died away.

Occasionally his mind grew clear, and his pains beat in upon him till he grew furious at the life in him ever refused to end, which forced him ever through this gauntlet of misery. More often he was conscious only of a vague and terrible extremity outside of himself that goaded him forward.

And he strained to recollect his destination. His features had set in an implacable grimace of physical torture, like a runner in the fury of a finish, till the frost hardened them so. At times he fell heavily, face downward, and at length upon the trail, lying so still that omnipotent coercion that had frozen in his brain drove him forward.

"I'm going freeze right here."

He heard his own voice manning through lifeless lips like that of a stranger. "The man that can eat his soul will win, Pierro."

Sometimes he cried like a child and slaver ran from his open mouth, freezing at his breast. One of his hands was going dead. He stripped the left mitten off and drove it laboriously over the right. Thus he would save at least even though he lost the other. He looked at the bare member dully, and he could not tell that the cold had seared till the bitterness was nearly out of the air. He labored with the flimsy spurs of a machine run down.

Ten men and many dogs lay together in the Crooked River Roadhouse through the storm. At late bedtime of the last night came a scratching on the door.

"Somebody's left a dog outside," said a neighbor and rose to let him in. He opened the door only to retreat at frightfully.

"My God!" he said. "My God!" And the others crowded forward.

A figure tottered over the portal, swaying drunkenly. They shaded their eyes at the sight of his face as it crossed toward the fire. It did not walk; it shuffled haltingly, with flexed knees and hanging shoulders, the strides measuring inches only, a grisly tatter-tale upon sentility.

Pausing in the circle, it mumbled thickly, with great effort, as though gleaming words from infinite distance: "Wild Pierro—frozen—buried—in—snow—bury!" Then he straightened and spoke strongly, his voice flooding the room:

"It's the mind, Pierro—ba, ha, ha! the mind!"

He cackled hideously and plunged forward into a mule's anus.

It was many days before his delirium broke. Gradually he felt the pressure of many bandages upon him and the hunger of convalescence. As he lay in his bunk the past came to him hazy and horrible, then the hum of voices, one loud, insistent and familiar.

He turned weakly to behold Pierro propped in a chair by the stove, frost scarred and pale, but aggressive even in recuperation. He gestulated fiercely with a bandaged hand, but in controversy with some big limbed, bearded stranger.

"Bah! You fellows no good—too beez in the ches, too beez in the forehead. She'll lak the hedicate waus for stan' the 'ardship, lak' me an' Meestair Weelard."

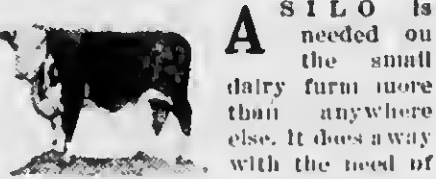

Waterproof Paper Coats.
There is probably no more impervious, serviceable waterproof than the aluminums and cloaks of Mitsunuma paper made from the leaves and stems of a small shrub which grows in the mountains of Japan. Until age of the experts of the department of agriculture discovered it a few years ago its existence was unknown to the outside world. Even now but little is known of it except that the plant is thrived in some mountainous portions of the United States and, further, that the method of manufacturing the paper is crude.

Legend of the Violet.
A Latin poem of the sixteenth century has a pretty legend of a violet that in mythological days was a maiden called Iambis, one of Diana's nymphs. She attracted the attention of Apollo, whose admiration she did not return, and, lying from his pursuit, she implored Diana to destroy the beauty which occasioned her so much trouble. Diana granted her request and turned her face to a dull purple. Iambis, however, soon regretted the loss of her beauty and was pining away with grief, when the goddess laid pity on her and changed her into a flower, which still shrinks from Apollo (the sun) and hides her modest head in the shade.

First Thames Steamboat.
The first steamer on the Thames was the Marjory, in 1814. The Richmond followed her a year later.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

A SILO is needed on the small dairy farm more than anywhere else. It does away with the need of a large pasture and insures a full milk supply during summer droughts.

Fodder preserved in a concrete silo is safe from fire and waste and retains the maximum food value. The cost of building a silo with a capacity of 150 tons need not exceed $200. It varies according to the supply of labor. Concrete costs little more than wood and is so much better in every way that it is confidently recommended.

No fodder is so much by stock as silage. Its influence is beneficial to the animal system, is invigorating and prevents crickets and insectation. Succulent silage makes for good health and heavy milk flow. It is equally good for poultry and hogs.

Corn is the most suitable of all crops for silage. It should be harvested when the bottom leaves are drying off and the grain is doughy and glazing. Without hurrying the work of filling the silo, the best method is to ensile the crop as soon as it is harvested, cutting the stalks and cobs into small bits. The silage is more or less concentrated in the center.

The fodder thus treated is carried by means of an elevator or blower, which should deliver the material as near the center of the silo as possible. This may be done by the aid of a bag chute attached to the mouth of the elevator or the blower.

The labor of distributing the fodder is thus minimized, and an even supply of the material will be distributed all over the silo. If the fodder be allowed to fall direct from the mouth of the conveyor the heaviest parts will fall on one side and the lighter parts on the other. The silage will not settle evenly, and loss will eventually result.

To assist in close packing it is absolutely essential to trample the product all over the silo. Trampling the sides or around the edges is not sufficient, for with the shipling of the center the outer edges creep to ward it and away from the walls, thus allowing access of air and consequent loss. The center should at ways be kept a little higher than the outer edges. The rate of filling should be six to eight feet per day. Quick filling thus may result in generating too much heat, in which case the silage is liable to decompose.

After the silo has been filled the fodder should be covered with a light framework or coarse sheet and weighted down. This should be kept out for use in the spring or summer. It is best to replace this top covering after each day's supply is taken out. Avoid, as far as practicable, slaking holes in the silage. In fact, keep as little of the silage exposed to the air as possible.

The daily ration of silage for a dairy cow is from thirty to forty pounds when fed with other fodders; when there is some grass available thirty pounds per day is ample. Sheep will eat as much as three pounds a day. It is advisable to give horses small quantities only of silage; otherwise there may be trouble from stomach derangements. Limit the amount fed to a few pounds per day. Pigs and poultry will eat small quantities.

Silage may be made of all plants that animals are permitted to eat in the green state, and such fodder preserved in this means losses but little of its feeding properties in the process. In one way there is a slight improvement. That is, the tougher fiber of silage fodder is softened and made thereby more digestible and acceptable to animals.

However, there is great risk in putting vegetable in a silage if it is kept. The milk is apt to be tainted. Oats, rye, millet and alfalfa work well in connection with corn, but the latter is the main staple and may be used by itself.

EIGHT HOUR OAY ON FARMS.
A writer in Farm and Fireside says that the eight hour day with farmers consists of eight hours for work and eight hours for chores.

CAUSE OF BAD FLAVORS IN BUTTER.
Bad flavors to butter come from two sources. They may be absorbed from odors, and they may be caused by the presence of bacteria.

Odors may get into the milk in the barn, coming from the cow, the milker, the utensils or from the food or dust. The second source is in the milk house, from the separator or containing vessels. If the separating is done in the barn, so much the worse for the cream; if done in the kitchen, food flavors are absorbed. The churn is the third source of bad flavor. When not properly cared for it soon grows musty. A churn that is not well cleaned before and after using affects the taste of butter.

Butter churned too soft cannot be properly washed and so contains a great deal of buttermilk. Buttermilk contains, besides water, the solids casein, albumen and milk sugar. Milk sugar is used as a food by the ferments which are secreted by the organisms. These ferments destroy casein.

The American Guernsey Cattle club was the first organization of its kind to establish an advanced registry on the basis of a year's production of butter fat. No animal of any age can get into this advanced registry that does not produce more than 60 pounds of butter fat in one year. The average of the thirty-five leading Guernseys in the list was over 70 pounds of butter fat. Not everybody can own such cows because they do not exist in sufficient numbers. Yeska Sunburst, the Guernsey cow shown, is one of the good ones. She is owned by H. D. Griswold of Wisconsin.

and albumen in the buttermilk contained in the butter and so cause rancid or putrid butter.

Fermentation begins in cream does not cease in butter. It may go far enough to break up the butter fats, causing ill flavored butter.

Odors get into the butter, or they may get into the milk or cream and then be imparted to the butter. The greatest source of bad flavor is from cream that has not been properly cared for. Milk, cream or butter absorbs odors if kept in a fruit or vegetable cellar or in a musty, ill ventilated room. Even musty walls or ill ventilated caves impart peculiar flavors. One of the most common disagreeable flavors is known as "weedy."

The cause is said to be, but in most cases it is due to rapidly growing organisms which get into the cream from insect surroundings.

To prevent bad flavors in butter great care must be used in milking. In handling the milk and cream and in making the butter. Everything used must be kept in a sanitary condition.

Milk in a clean, well ventilated barn, using care not to raise dust. The milker should wear white milking a clean apron or a pair of overalls. Utensils, including the separator, must be washed and scalded after each milking. Use milk utensils with no open seams.

The milk must be removed from the barn immediately after milking. Cream will keep best if kept in a clean, well ventilated room, preferably a separate milk house. Warm and cold cream should not be mixed.

HAMS OF FINE FLAVOR.
Directions For Curing and Smoking According to a Famous Recipe.

After the hogs have been killed and the meat thoroughly cooled the fresh surface is sprinkled with fine salt until the meat is white, says the Farm Magazine in describing a good recipe for curing hams. About three or four pounds of salt per side are used to 1,000 pounds of hams. Fine salt is then rubbed over the entire surface, and the hams are packed in bulk not deeper than three feet.

In ordinary weather they should remain thus for several days, at least three. Then break the bulk and re-salt with the salt and again pack. Each ham should remain in bulk at least one day for each pound of weight. The hams are then hung up and gradually smoked for thirty or forty days with hickory or red oak bark.

When the smoking is complete they should be repackaged and placed in canvas bags to guard against vermin. The hams cured as indicated improve with age, and are considered about perfect.

Hogs Need Much Water.
Water is as essential in the production of gains on a hog as is grain. If grain fell from the sky and we had to grow water our estimation of their value would be reversed. For the reason that water is free and everywhere available, the failure to supply plenty of it fresh for the hogs in summer is absolutely inexorable. With two inches of fat all over its body the hog does not need 90 degrees temperature to keep comfortable. In summer he suffers much from the heat, and his greatest relief is in water. It cools his blood, cools him off and makes him happy. A happy hog grunts. A contented hog is profitable. A contented hog is profitable.

SUMMER MISHAPS.
How to Relieve Stings and Sores Which Come With Outing Days.

Insect stings are among the most uncomfortable of the minor mishaps which befall the seeker for summer pleasure. Even mosquito bites sometimes prove really bothersome. If they are treated with applications of ammonia before they are scratched much of the unpleasant sting and burning will leave them. If they have been scratched so that the skin is broken the ammonia will burn perhaps more severely than the bite does. Salt and water is another good remedy for mosquito bites.

Stings and bites of other insects are even more uncomfortable to bear than those of mosquitoes, but those of the insects in temperate climates are seldom dangerous, and unless they are in the throat or mouth they do not need the attention of a physician. If, however, a bee has stung himself in a speech or other part and with a bite of the fruit reaches the throat, there to stop and apply his sting, it is well to call a physician. Such a sting sometimes produces painful and troublesome swelling. Gargle with water and salt, or horacle acid until the physician comes.

The treatment of bee and wasp stings is similar. The bee leaves his sting in the skin; the wasp takes it with him. So the first thing to do to counteract a bee sting is to press out the sting with a watchkey. If this is possible, salt, soda, ammonia or any other alkali should be sopped on the stung surface frequently until the stinging sensation has stopped. The old method of applying wet earth to a bee sting surely does bring relief to the sufferer, and if nothing else is at hand must should be applied. But considering the uses to which soda of borax can be put on a summer's day a little of it might be carried on every tramping or touring trip. It is useful to dissolve in water and apply to sunburned skin, to use for stings, to use as an antiseptic wash for bruises and cuts, and, moreover, it helps soothe the skin irritated by poison ivy.

How to Go to Sleep.
A man should make his toilet as carefully for going to bed as for the business of the day.

Certain physical things are conducive to sleep, such as plenty of sweet, outdoor air, the absence of noises, of lights and of bad odors, and, above all, a feeling of freshness.

There are also certain mental and spiritual preparations.

To be intensely interested in anything is fatal to sleep; so also are the memory of a rankling failure, plan making, problem solving, apprehension, shame and remorse.

The soul must take off its interest, as the body must remove its restlessness.

Passions of any kind, craving and all, are against sleep.

One is very fortunate who has a habit of prayer, for there is nothing so still the soul like purging the conscience before God, and, caring, pricking annoyances, doubts and all mental tensions can be removed in no way more satisfactorily than by letting the consciousness of God wash the soul.

A sense of friendliness and peace toward the infinite is the surest medicine for sleep.

How to Use Old Raincoat.
There are many occasions when at play children need rubber aprons. Make these from your discarded raincoats. Cut them out in the form of a rectangle. Round the corners hollow out the neck, bind the edge and attach strings to the neck and waist. They can be easily adapted to children of different sizes.

Soap bubbles can be blown, flowers sprinkled and boats sailed in a tub without fear of the children getting wet.

How to Wash Ecu Lace.
To keep the color of ecru lace when washing it add a little yellow ochre oil paint to the starch. Mix a small amount of the ochre with boiling water and add it to the starch or to the last rinsing water. It starch is not used. Other may be bought at any paint store.

HOW TO MAKE FRUIT COCKTAILS FOR SUMMER.
Almost any fruit may be served as a "cocktail," the same strap answering for all. Boil a cupful of sugar in a little water to the thread and set aside to cool, but do not stir, or it will sugar seed and have white grapes, mix them with orange pulp or pineapple grated, sugar and chill, then pour over some of the syrup after half filling cocktail cups and put two or three maraschino cherries in each.

Sherry wine is a fine addition to any fruit cocktail, and apples, grapefruit and oranges may be used. Apples cannot be prepared long before using, as they turn dark, but oranges may be pared, every particle of the inner skin removed, leaving only the pulp. Break this into bits, sugar and chill, then add grapes or any other fruits liked.

Pineapple is one of the best fruits for the purpose, as its flavor always adds to the delicacy of taste, and, unlike most fruits, the canned is very nice.

GROWN IN LEGAL SOIL.
A deaf mute is not incapable of entering into contracts if shown to have sufficient mental capacity. Alex. Vers. Matzke, Mich. 115 N. W. Rep. 251.

Generally every partner is under obligation to exercise due diligence and reasonable skill and devote his services to the promotion of the common profit of the firm without compensation, except wages or salary unless otherwise agreed upon.

The United States patent law requires a "give-and-take" for a patent to make sure that he does verily believe himself to be the original and first inventor or discoverer of the art, machine, manufacture, composition or improvement for which he seeks a patent and that he does not know and does not believe that it was ever before known or used.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

BLACK SILK LIQUID STOVE POLISH

Keeps Your Stove "Always Ready for Company"

A bright, clean, glossy stove is the joy and pride of every housekeeper. But it is hard to keep a stove nice and shiny—unless Black Silk Stove Polish is used.

Here is the reason: Black Silk Stove Polish sticks right to the iron. It doesn't rub off or dust off. Its shine lasts four times longer than the shine of any other polish. You only need to polish once a month or so, yet your stove will be cleaner, brighter and better looking than it has been since you first bought it. Use on your gas or electric stove, kitchen stove or gas stove. Get it on from your hardware or stove dealer. It's the only one that stays on. No other stove polish or shine. It's a real thing. Your dealer is authorized to refund your money. But we feel sure you will agree with the thousands of other satisfied women who are now using Black Silk Stove Polish and who say it is the "best thing for a stove."

LIQUID OR PASTE ONE QUALITY

Be sure to get the genuine. Black Silk Stove Polish costs you no more than the ordinary kind. Keep your grates, registers, fenders and stove pipes bright and free from rusting by using BLACK SILK AIR-DRYING ENAMEL. Brush free with each use of enamel only.

Use BLACK SILK METAL POLISH for silver, ware, metal, hardware or brass. It works quickly, easily on leaves a brilliant surface. It has no equal for use on automobiles.

Charlevoix Grange.

The next regular meeting of Charlevoix Grange will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Dutton, 303 Antrim Street, Thursday evening, September 18. All members are requested to be present, as there is special business which must be taken care of. Visitors are always welcome.

Marion Center Grange.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session Friday evening, Sept. 13. One candidate was instructed in the 1 and 2 degree. The fresh fruit committee reported first prize on fruit at the fair. Other committees to the fair not present, report will be given later. Next regular meeting Sept. 20, work in 304 degree.

Harmony Grange.

It has been some time since you have heard from Harmony Grange. No. 1431, but it is not dead nor sleeping if the correspondent has failed in his duty.

The date of the last meeting was changed from Tuesday evening Sept. 9th to Saturday evening Sept. 6, on account of several members having business at the fair on Tuesday. It was decided that our Grange would make an exhibit of vegetables and the master appointed O. D. Willson, L. D. Willson and Irving Newville to get the exhibit together and see that it was placed on exhibition.

It was also decided to ask the children of members to be present and take part in the program of the first meeting in October and frequently afterwards.

There was quite a discussion in regard to the grange taking the lead in making the community noted for some particular thing, but it was not decided just what would be the best thing to make a specialty of, on account of the prospect of a creamery being established at Buena Vista in the near future. Several advocated that we adopt some breed of dairy cattle as a specialty and prepare to feed them on alfalfa and silage. Some of the members are making a study of the different breeds as to adaptability to our conditions, and we hope to come to some conclusion in time to make a practical beginning in the near future.

A good program was carried out and a very interesting one announced for the next meeting, which will be held on the regular meeting night, the 14th Tuesday evening in Sept. Let's all be there and make the grange do us some good.

Be sure and see "From the Manager to the Cross" Thursday night at the Majestic theatre. 3811

HOW TO BE COMFORTABLE DURING WARM WEATHER.

Savon fenilles and papiers poudres are never really appreciated until warm weather comes upon us. Then the small books of powder paper, which comes in several tins, and the books of soap paper, the leaves of which turn into a free lather as soon as they are wet, seem like gifts from the fairies. A woman who travels with a book of powder papers, a book of soap leaves and a few lengths of the absorbent paper-towel, which can be bought by the roll, neatly stowed in her hand bag, can be comfortably clean wherever she is with little effort.

How to Cure Baldness.

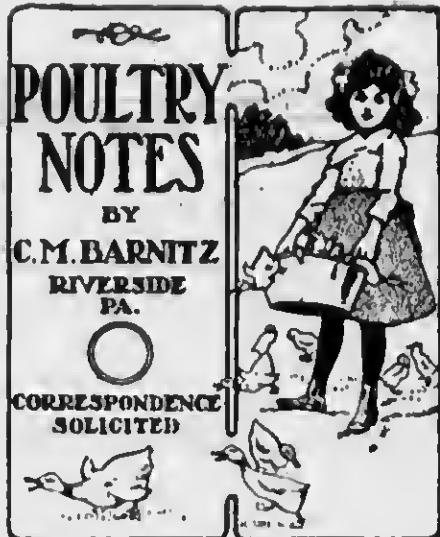

If you are growing bald and want to encourage your hair to remain with you learn to play the violin, cello or double bass, or even the piano will do. M. de Parville, a French scientist, has been collecting statistics of musicians, and he finds that playing stringed instruments has a tonic effect on the hair. This may explain why violinists and pianists so often have long manes.

The vibration of the strings seems to be just the sort of massage that the hair thrives on. On the other hand, woe to your locks if you play a wind instrument. The vibration for such instruments seems to be too much for the poor hairs, and they give up and let go. So accepted is this effect now that the French doctors call it "brass band baldness."

A Good Imitation.

The other day an amateur artist was producing some rapid sketches to amuse his children. He drew a sketch of a hen so naturally that when it was afterward thrown in the waste paper basket it laid there.

THE DUCK EGG.

In England, in school, a cipher is called a duck egg as much as to say that a duck egg amounts to nothing, but in many parts of the old world, Holland and China in particular, the duck egg is an important part of the diet, and millions of ducks are kept not just to get eggs to hatch ducklings, but to lay eggs for the table and trade.

In America the duck egg is fast gaining in popularity, the old prejudice that they are strong in flavor dying out with the advent of the up to date duck egg.

That early duck egg, when streams abounded in fish and other life, was not a delectable appetizing morsel for the ancient quack waddled where its fishy fancy led and feasted all day on tadpoles, minnows and water skippers, and both the duck and its product had a fishy taste that wouldn't come off.

But the day of the public duck is past, and even the day of the green shell duck egg is passing for, though the color of the shell has taught to do with the small, the duck that lays the popular white shell egg is here and these eggs are gaining in the markets right along, and especially in the cities where millionaires are glad to pay a premium on them to serve to their high class Hebrew trade, and the rest.

INDIAN RUNNER, CHAMPION LAYING DUCK son so few are seen is because these Jews gobble them before other people have a chance.

The Pekin and Indian Runner are the prolific laying ducks, but the Indian Runner is well termed the "Leghorn of the Duck Family," and we have seen them in a test with White Leghorns surpass these, the egg machine of the hen tribes.

The Runners are an excellent table duck, but their eggs, much like the fancy Minorca, are par excellence, and we advise any who have that old prejudice against duck eggs to try a few from a pen of Runners, bred, fed and kept on the up to date plan.

The prejudice will vanish almost as quick as that savory golden yolk and delicious silvery white.

THE POULTRY DOCTOR SAYS—

Applying kerosene undiluted for lice is cruel and only kills the bugs which it touches or in close contact to the fumes. It hinders the skin, stops laying and often kills or spoils the bird for breeding.

Gasoline alone should not be applied either, as it is apt to asphyxiate the fowl, and both kerosene and gasoline in pure form are too expensive and impracticable for such work and a poor substitute for dust or house powder, the form in which nature prescribes crawler killers.

Cottontail meal is a mighty poor substitute for beef scrap for feeding fowls, as it invariably causes intestinal disorders. Much of the so called beef scrap on the market also should be handled with care, and the presence of that fertilizer smell should be a quick argument for its return to the slipper or consignment to the dump. The best and safest meat food is green cut bone, but where fowls have good summer range they get enough protein in the bugs and worms and clover they pick up.

Carelessness in disposing of dead fowls is one cause of disease and death among fowls in summer. A neighbor lost sixteen blue hens because a dog dragged another neighbor's dead fowl within reach of her chickens. A delectable carcass often kills off a flock of chicks which feast on it. People who allow filth to accumulate on their premises or carcasses there to rotify are a nuisance to the community and belong to the hushouse period of the stone age.

Many chicks find their early demise in certain commercial chick feeds that are so highly advertised for their freshness and protein content when they are mostly made up of moldy cracked corn, dust, grit, stale grain, weed seeds and old ground garden seed from a previous season.

The wise poultryman examines his feeds closely, and when he finds a bad lot sends samples to the state department, where a department exists for the analysis of feeds and the detection and prosecution of feed dopers.

MY BULLY VACATION.

My vacation? You bet I have had it! Why no, I didn't go away. To the mountains way up in New Hampshire. Nor down to stylish Cape May.

You know, I had the dyspepsia. So I shipped my wife to the sea, and I packed my dolls in a suit case and pulled for the farm country.

I worked in the fields in the sunshine, I chopped wood out in the shed, I mowed the grass in the meadow, and pitched big sheaves overhead.

And soon I could eat like a grubber. Why, the grub just slid out of sight! I was up in the morn with the rooks and slept like a rock all night.

I've lost every trace of dyspepsia. But my wife got it down at the shore. And it cost her five hundred dollars. The Jimjams, you bet, and some more. C. M. BARNITZ.

DON'TS.

Don't expect to raise turkeys on the canny bird plan. Let them roam; they'll come home.

Don't use much grease on young stock for lice. Persian insect powder is better.

Don't parade as a wise guy. If you think you're smart go tell it to Sweden.

Don't start any bunch of poultry culture wholesale unless you first master the details.

Don't growl about your work. Hustle. Don't expect chicks to be free from gaps if they run on rank ground.

Don't let your back yard grow weeds to seed the neighborhood.

Don't let jealousy make you miserable and destroy your friendships.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

The parrot post will be a great factor in bringing about a law for the selling of eggs by weight in states where the law is not yet in force. Selling eggs by the dozen is just as much out of date as trading turkeys for glass beads.

If you are exporting Mondains to get large size the French strains of these pigeons are largest and breed a squab that at four weeks reaches one to one and a half pounds. Mondains are very free feeders and fast breeders and, crossed with Runt and Maltese hens, prove very satisfactory.

An American at a banquet in London while making a speech about motoring remarked: "In London they give two toots before they kill a man. In Chicago they only give one toot, and that is far too short a preparation for eternity." The old firm here crossing the country road doesn't even get one toot from the city joy rider.

"Lady Show You," the White Rock hen that smashed records by laying 281 full weight eggs in a year at the Missouri egg laying contest, was sold by her owner for the tidy little sum of $800.

Fussy hens with chicks are a nuisance. They not only make the chicks afraid of you, but always go where you don't want them to, fight with the other broodfies, skin any strange chicks that come near and generally lurcher part of their own brood by their rough house.

Many, buying their first incubators, secure too large a machine; others buy an incubator that is too small for practical purposes. We advise the 150 egg size for a starter. It's about right for the medium sized duck, is easily controlled and is a size that sells quick second hand.

A Wilkesbarre (Pa.) attorney, while visiting Carlisle, Pa., was so attracted by a fine Plymouth Rock rooster that he went broke to buy him. He later carried the bird to a pawnbroker and pawned him for ticket money to get home. He was a young and inexperienced lawyer or he would have selected a fat goose.

A bill was recently defeated in the New Jersey senate requiring that owners of cats pay a license of $1 for each feline or give up their cats for ruthless slaughter. The Audubon society backed the bill, and the funny thing about it is many of its members are old minks, but perhaps the Jersey branch is not of the cat nursing single sort. We claim that cats catch few birds or chicks when fed a portion of meat, but so many poor Tahlses are half starved, and they must grah what's handy or suffer nine horrible deaths.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

The Housewife's Pocketbook.

In a magazine article J. J. Hill, the railroad tuncate, gives his ideas on how the housewife should spend money.

"There is nothing," he says, "more important in this nation or the life of any other nation than the pocketbook of the wife."

The original question of social economics which we have to consider at the present time is not the tariff or the finances of one of the richest governments in the world, but the pocketbook of the wife. I emphatically state that I do not mean the pocketbook of the husband.

"I will suppose she knows how to expend the money that is placed in her charge. She may have earned it through the truck garden at the rear of the house. The husband may give it to her every Saturday night. The children may through their efforts bring in part of it."

"But the greatest question is not where that money came from so long as it was honestly received, but does she know what to do with it? How far can she make it go, and merely in paying household expenses, but in placing part of it so that it will begin to earn interest and duplicate itself?"

"Contrary to general opinion, the securing of money is not a very difficult task if one is willing to work. The real importance of finances for a man or woman, for a boy or a girl, is what is done with the money after it is earned."

"It makes no difference whether one is purchasing miles of steel rails or underclothing for the children or a bunch of onions. Buy the best, pay the price, keep on working and realize finally that the control of living is within your hands."

How to Use Discarded Paper.

The old paper that comes over butter can be used for papering cake tins, while that which comes from the inside of cracker boxes is good for a dozen different things—for instance, cheese may be kept moist by wrapping in this paper, also sandwiches.

If the cake is getting brown too quickly covering with waxed paper will check it.

Sheets of wrapping paper will save labor very often. One can use it to prepare chickens on for the oven, roll crackers, pare apples or slice bread, when the paper can be rolled up and dropped into the garbage pail.

Newspapers laid upon the door before an open grate when taking out the ashes will save the carpet considerably, and one lighted when shaking down a grate will carry the dust up the chimney.

These little conveniences do not cost a cent, but once they are put in their value is sure to be appreciated.

How to Sharpen a Lawn Mower.

A great many women mow their own lawns, and when the mower is sharp it is a delight, but if the mower is dull it becomes a laborious task. Here is a way to sharpen a dull mower: Get some real fine emery powder and mix it up with a thick oil, such as linseed oil, lard oil or crude oil. The latter is the cheapest and best for this purpose. Apply the mixture to the edge of the knives with a joint brush and turn the mower just as you would while cutting grass. In a very few minutes you will have a cutting edge that will last a long time.

Now try this and you can make lots of pin money sharpening mowers for your friends and neighbors.

DOOMED TO A LIVING DEATH.

French Convicts Leave Hope Behind When They Enter Cayenne.

Cayenne—red pepper to the world at large, hell to the few thousand of convicts transported to this isolated northeastern corner of equatorial South America. Here, it was rumored, existed one of the world's most antiquated and revolting penal systems, where thousands of men are exiled and doomed to a living death. Men from French Guiana had intimated conditions which whetted the curiosities of the old convict ships.

Groups of convicts lounged about or lay sick and incapacitated on the verandas. At night the barred iron door of each dormitory is locked, and outside pieces a guard, revolver in hand. Sometimes under cover of darkness the inmates settle feuds. Occasionally to establish leaders rival gangs fight with edged knives and even paving stones. Some disabled, others dead, the most indomitable are resuscitated and form a tyrannical secret society.

Many a poor wretch dreads the night hours, and one suspected of infidelity may be set upon by an enraged pack. Occasionally murder is committed in profound silence, and daylight finds a dead or dying convict in the passageway or entrance. Questioning is useless, and few guards will risk life in entering the barracks when snatched cries and cursings warn them of internal strife.

All the men I talked with were well disposed toward me, one in particular—a tall, well educated man with a pair of dark rimmed glasses and large eyes fearfully strained through inability to secure proper lenses.

"You must not lose hope," I told a group and almost swallowed my own words. "Hope?" burst out the rich, tremulous voice of the tall man. "It is always the same; there is no hope here." "No; no hope here," was the echoed murmur of his comrades—Charles Wollington Furlong in Harper's Magazine.

VARICOSE VEINS.

Their Causes and Effects and the Treatment They Require.

A varicose vein is an enlarged and twisted vein, generally in the leg. It is caused by stagnation of the blood. Often the patient has a hereditary predisposition to varicose veins or he has a weak heart, with a consequent tendency to sluggish venous circulation.

Anything that interferes with the flow of blood through the veins may bring on an attack. Pressure from a tight garter and very severe muscular exertion are often exciting causes. Persons who are obliged to stand for several hours at a time, like policemen, washwomen and saleswomen, are often subject to this trouble. Under ordinary conditions the blood in the legs must run up hill constantly in order to reach the heart. In the case of those who stand most of the day the blood has to work hard hour after hour in order to overcome the force of gravity, and as a result, the veins gradually enlarge and harden.

In mild cases of varicose veins, especially in young and otherwise healthy people, the symptoms are very slight. There is a feeling of weight in the leg and a dull ache toward the end of the day. The ache is soon relieved by the patient's resting with the leg somewhat raised so that the blood can flow back more easily. Sometimes painful cramps complicate the trouble, and the cramp is likely to return again and again until life becomes a burden.

More serious complications are thrombosis (or the clotting of the blood in the vein) and phlebitis (or inflammation of a vein). Often a form of eczema appears in the skin of the leg, or an ulcer may arise. When varicose veins are very troublesome, surgical treatment is advisable, but the sufferer can be much relieved by rest and proper bandaging. —Youth's Companion.

able about the pronunciation of "valet," says the London Chronicle. "If they had stuck to 'valet' there would have been no difficulty. 'Valet' and 'valet' are the same word, meaning originally just a boy, the diminutive of 'vassal,' a man. Unfortunately when our ancestors applied a word meaning a boy to signify a servant they went on to make it bear a scornful sense. And so 'valet' degenerated happily, just as did 'knave,' which is simply the German 'knaute' boy."

Patients Cared for at University Hospital at Expense of State—Interesting Subject Discussed.

Below we publish verbatim an interesting paper read by Superintendent J. B. Draper of the University Hospital at Ann Arbor, at the meeting of the superintendents of the poor, recently held in our city. The many points covered will be of great interest to many of our readers, many of whom are not well informed as to the care of the class of people mentioned in this interesting article:

"Gentlemen: The subject assigned to me on this, the occasion of your tenth annual convention, 'The Relationship of Superintendents of the Poor to the University Hospital, Pertaining to Treatment of Indigents.' I am sure all will agree with me covers a broad field of work, and one which often requires the most careful consideration on your part when application is made to you to send indigent patients to the hospital for treatment, for in some chronic cases there is not much hope for relief and the chances for a cure of the disease is doubtful, and yet, from a human standpoint, you feel that if there is any hope for relief or a cure, the indigent patient should be given the chance. The case is sent to the hospital for examination and treatment. It must be borne in mind that such a case requires careful diagnosis and study before it can be determined whether the patient can be benefited. By giving the patients good care, proper food and nourishment, they respond to treatment and show signs of improvement.

J. B. Draper, Superintendent

"It has been our custom to keep in touch with such patients and just as soon as we are sure that they cannot be benefited or cured, to notify the superintendent of the poor who sent the patient, then they can remove them to the county home where they can be cared for at less expense to the county. In some cases the superintendent informs me that they are not prepared to care for such cases and if they give them proper medical attention and nursing in the county home, it will cost them more than it would to leave them in the hospital.

"With the increased demands made upon the hospital and the limited number of beds, we are unable to keep many such patients just to house and care for them. I believe such indigent patients are just as much entitled to good care and medical attention as the mentally afflicted indigent patients, who are so well provided for in our large state hospitals, and the state should provide the necessary room in connection with the University hospital and all such patients cared for there at the expense of the state and the county relieved of the expense in a similar way in which the law provides for the care of the mentally afflicted indigent patients at the present time.

"We welcome all indigent patients to the University hospital and always admit and care for them in some way. Yet, I assure you we are often annoyed and perplexed to find room for them.

"During the past two years patients have been sent to the hospital by the superintendents of the poor from counties in the state to the number of 215, making a total cost to the state of $10,770.97.

"The average number of days in hospital for each patient was 36 and a fraction (39). The average cost per patient was 50 dollars and thirteen cents ($50.13).

"Act No. 42 P. A. 1897 provides for the state care of any child born in Michigan with any congenital disease or deformity. All that is necessary in such cases is the certificate of the physician who attended the child at birth and an order from the superintendent of the poor, supervisor, mayor or president of the village as the case may be.

"Act No. 274 P. A. 1913 provides that any indigent child may be sent to the hospital for treatment on an order from the probate judge at the expense of the state.

"At present there is no law providing for the state care of adults.

"Every indigent adult patient must be cared for by the county from which he comes. I am so deeply interested in the hospital treatment of all classes of patients who are unable to pay for medical attention, I fear I may take up too much time in trying to cover the many points along this line. Therefore, with the few suggestions I shall be pleased to answer any questions if in my power to do so. I have always felt greatly benefited in attending your meetings and on behalf of the University hospital, I thank you for your kind attention and the interest you have all manifested in the work the hospital is doing."

MANY SILOS BEING BUILT

Western Michigan Development Bureau Making Silo Census.

Reports Show Over One Thousand Have Been Erected Since Last January.

A silo census for Western Michigan brings forth the information that approximately one thousand silos have been erected in Western Michigan since the first of January. All the returns from the census are not yet in but enough are to give a general idea as to what the final showing will be. The best report received to date comes from Fremont, Newaygo county, where 93 silos have been erected since the first of January. The next best report is from Hesperia, Oceana county, where 60 silos have been put up and the third best report from Hart, Oceana county, where the number of new silos is 25. The reports for the other cities and villages of the territory show that from 10 to 15 to 20 silos have been erected in almost every neighborhood. Elk Rapids, and Stanton each report 7 new silos.

The purpose of the silo census is to discover what is being done toward getting Western Michigan on to a substantial agricultural basis. In order that it may be the farming state that nature intended, it is necessary that provision be made for the maintenance of soil fertility and this calls for large herds of live stock and these herds must be fed and here is where alfalfa growing and silo building came to play a part. Alfalfa and ensilage make possible the keeping of large herds of cattle upon small areas. And with the present prices of beef and the need of fertility the keeping of such herds spells prosperity for Western Michigan.

THERE WERE 206,960 FARMS IN STATE OF MICHIGAN IN 1910

Michigan Agriculture, Its Present State and Wonderful Possibilities of Development—One of a Series of Articles Written by Prof. R. S. Shaw, Dean of Agriculture, M. A. C.

According to the special bulletins recently issued by the census bureau there were 206,960 farms in Michigan in 1910 varying in size from three acres to 1000 acres and over. From 1850 to 1900 the number of farms increased at the rate of 3.097 per year, while from this time on to 1900 the increase dropped to 2.063 per year. During the ten years preceding 1910 the annual increase amounted to 370 farms, only. The total acreage of farm land improved has risen but slightly since 1890.

The average acreage of Michigan farms decreased from 138 acres in 1850 to 85.8 acres in 1890, increasing in 1910 to 91.5 acres. The various sizes of Michigan farms are distributed approximately as follows, viz: 20 acres and under 7.1 per cent—20 to 40 acres nearly 25 per cent—50 to 90 acres about 33 per cent—and 100 to 171 acres 25 per cent. Forty, eighty, and one hundred and sixty acre tracts comprise five sixths of the farms of the state.

The following statement gives the values of Michigan farm property in 1910, viz:

Land	$615,258,348.
Buildings	285,879,851.
Implements and Machinery	929,628,5.
Domestic Animals, poultry and bees	137,803,795.
Total	$1,958,568,599.

These enormous valuations when compared with those of an almost purely agricultural state like Iowa are a trifle under one-third less. We must recall the fact, however, that only 5.5 per cent of Michigan land is now in farms and that the state has four distinctive industries besides agriculture, the products of our manufactures alone being two and six-tenths times greater than those of Iowa for 1910.

This increase in total value of Michigan farm property during the first decade of the present century amounting to 57.7 per cent, a much greater increase than has occurred in any decade since 1870. Even yet, however, Michigan farms are changing hands at figures from twenty to thirty-five per cent lower than for similar lands in neighboring states to the south and west.

To 48.5 per cent of Michigan land not included in farms exists mostly under the following conditions, viz: As land covered with standing timber, cut over lands, sand areas, and lands as yet unreclaimed by drainage. The removal of timber in the commercial production of lumber is rapidly placing on the market lands of good agricultural possibilities. Stump lands upon which hard wood timber grew if promptly rough burned and seeded to grass, and then pastured for a few years until the stumps decay, can be rapidly and cheaply reclaimed for agricultural purposes. A larger portion of the sand lands of the state will undoubtedly be utilized than is at present anticipated. For this purpose fruit growing may be employed to some extent. These very light lands instead of being farmed intensively in small areas will some day undoubtedly be owned in large tracts and utilized for grazing purposes when the methods of proper seeding are solved which they surely will be.

Hebrew New Year's Day.

Hebrew New Year's day, on Oct. 2, which will be observed in Charlevoix as well as throughout the country, will begin that day at sundown. A widespread movement among Jewish people throughout the nation to deepen the religious spirit will be centered upon the observance of this day. A letter has been sent out by the three leading rabbis urging a universal observance of this most holy day of the faith. In this letter it is claimed by the rabbis that increasing lawlessness is caused by carelessness on the part of parents in instilling in their children a proper religious spirit.

The opportunities for agricultural development in the counties of the Upper Peninsula are very great indeed. In this area according to the census report no county except Menominee has more than 20 per cent of its lands in farms. This portion of Michigan will some day be made into an agricultural empire of itself.

Contrary to somewhat widespread opinion that this part of the state consists of an alternation of rocky wastes and swamps, there is to be found there some of the finest agricultural land in the state, particularly that suited to the growth of hard wood timber. It is a land of great capabilities for the production of legumes, pastures and root crops and is, therefore, destined to become a dairy district.

The possibilities of increasing agricultural production in Michigan by drainage are practically equal to the possibilities from irrigation in the average and state of the west. The reclaimable, tillable swamp and overflow acreage in Michigan according to recent estimates of the Bureau of Statistics amounts to 1,400,000 acres.

In respect to the swamp land area Michigan ranks sixth among the states.

In the one reclamation project alone there are great possibilities in the stage. Co-operative effort has already greatly increased the productivity and value of low lying farm lands by means of county and township drainage systems. The recovery of Michigan's low lying lands as far as the work has progressed demonstrates their unusual value for production because of the peculiarities of their formation and composition and the character of the prevailing climatic conditions. Most of these lands when once reclaimed produce farm crops in some cases and are adapted particularly to specialized crops of high value such as garden truck, root crops, peppermint, onions, celery, etc. thus increasing the reasonableness of the state by way of adding variety and wealth.

Of the total number of farms owned in whole or in part by the operators in Michigan including a total of 172,310 in 1910, 51.8 per cent were found to be free from mortgage and 48.2 per cent mortgaged. These figures do not differ materially from those presented for some of the richest agricultural states in the country. Financial indebtedness, however, is one of two chief obstacles standing in the way of agricultural improvements, in fact, may prevent the farmer from introducing live stock, establishing rotations and employing various other improved systems which he himself would like to do if he had the means.

A false impression prevails with regard to the farm tenure in the state. The census report gives the following data, viz: Per cent of farms operated by owners and managers, 84.2 per cent; tenants, 15.8 per cent; share cash 10.3 per cent; cash and non-specified 5.5 per cent. In view of the small percentage coming under the purely tenant system the state is not suffering from the evils of this system to the extent generally anticipated.

THEATRICAL

"The Shepherd of the Hills," Harold Bell Wright's novel, which has been accorded the largest sale in the history of publishing in America, has been made into a play by Mr. Wright with the assistance of Elsbeth W. Reynolds. It will be seen at the Charlevoix Theatre, Tuesday evening, September 30.

It tells a beautiful story of the Ozark mountains, a story that holds the auditor by its thrills from the beginning to the end. It is unique in character-drawing, giving to the stage a somewhat new atmosphere. The beauty of the Ozark mountain region lends itself to some very effective stage pictures, and Gaskill and MacVitty, the producers, are said to have given the play an exceptionally beautiful mounting.

SHOT WHILE HUNTING

Boyer Falls Resident May Lose Hand in Accident.

While hunting rabbits last Sunday, Fred Wagner, who lives three miles north of Boyne Falls, accidentally shot himself in the wrist, which may result in losing his hand, or having it crippled the balance of his life.

He was standing on a stump and had the gun resting near his feet. In turning around he in some way pushed the gun off the stump, catching the hammer and exploding the shell. The charge of small shot entered his right wrist mangleing it in a terrible manner. Several of the shot also entered his right side and several cent slight gashes in his cheek.

He was taken to Petoskey hospital the same evening to have his wounds dressed, and unless blood poison develops, should recover rapidly.

Charlevoix Bean Crop.

The bean crop in Charlevoix county is coming along nicely, and some of the early planted have been harvested. Indications are that the late planted will be the best producers, as the early planted suffered a little by drought. Bean jobbers state that the yield in Michigan this year will be close to 8,000,000 bushels, which is 3,000,000 more than last year, and is twenty-five per cent above the best crop known.

"Rally Day"

"Rally Day" will be observed at the Congregational church Sunday morning, September 28, at 10:30. A short address will be given by the pastor followed by an interesting program from the children. A cordial invitation is extended not only to the members of the church and Sunday School, but all who worship with us.

FRATERNAL SIDE OF CHARLEVOIX

Time Has Arrived When Lodges Will Take on New Life.

Every Member Has a Duty to Perform if He Would Enjoy His Membership.

Just about this time each year the fraternal societies began to take on a new lease of life, and plan for a season of pleasure and profit in lodge work.

The fraternal society plays an important part in the life of every community. Especially is this true of the rural districts, where places of amusements are not so plentiful, and makes it necessary to manufacture, so to speak, wholesome entertainment for the long winter days.

We are just entering upon the season of the year when there is time and opportunity for social functions, and the fraternal orders of the city can do much toward making the social side of life in Charlevoix much more enjoyable. Not only will it be beneficial to Charlevoix as a whole, but by making the social side of the lodge worth emphasizing and at the same time making some noise about it you will get direct results for the lodge.

The time was when men and women joined a fraternity because of the desire to have a band of friends who would be willing to lend a helping hand in time of need, or because they felt a lack of social ties to furnish an important element in their make up.

This is largely a fact, today, but the fraternal order has out grown itself, and has broadened out into the larger field of unselfish work for the betterment of all mankind. The duty we owe each other must and will be performed but to be true Samaritans we must also do the things that will be of benefit to our neighbors and our city.

The leading fraternal societies of this country are well represented in Charlevoix and they can do their order no greater honor, nor the city no higher service, than to plan to give the social life of Charlevoix such a season of entertainment as well do credit to the great orders they represent.

AN EXCELLENT SHOWING MADE

Products of Charlevoix County Made a Fine Exhibit

INTEREST SHOWN WAS KEEN

Displays are Evidence That No Better Can Be Grown

First Prize Merchants' Exhibit a Success—Bushels of Rosy Apples Displayed—Next Exhibit to Be Held in October

That Charlevoix county could produce as good if not a superior quality of fruits and vegetables in the world was fully demonstrated at the first produce exhibition held by the Retail Merchants' Association at Vought's garage last Saturday.

As on former occasions, the number of exhibitors at the first exhibition was smaller than at the one held at a later date, but the interest shown was keen, as was evidenced by excellent quality of the produce shown. Baskets of highly colored, apples of numerous variety, filled the shelves. Vegetables of all kinds were in evidence, showing that exhibitors of previous occasions had made a careful study of how to produce prize winning products.

The list of prize winners are as follows:

Cabbage—First, B. B. Blair; second, Frank Pup.
Carrots—First, John Walker; second, Leagues.
Onions—First, Joe Kemp; second, Thos. Wetzel.
Pumpkins—First, F. Seymour; second, Geo. Anderson.
Squash—First, Geo. Anderson; second, Frank Zeiler.
Tomatoes—First, Jas. Adams; second, F. J. Meech.
Cauliflower—First, A. Ecklund.
Muskmelons—First, Chas. Pierce; second, Wm. Wallace.
Pears—First, Frank Sneathen; second, D. F. Meech.
Apples—Alexander, First, Albert Beattie; second, W. Withers.
Wolf River—First, Will Withers; second, D. F. Meech.
Wealthy—First, H. Gornell; second, Ralph Price.

The next exhibition will take place in October at the same place, when a larger list of prizes will be offered, including several cash prizes offered by the Argo Milling company for bread and pastry made exclusively from their flour. It is to be hoped that more will enter the contest and fill the display room with their products. Watch for the premium lists and exhibit the best products of your season's work.

What could furnish stronger evidence of the efficiency of any remedy than the test of time. Thousands of people testify that Doan's Kidney Pills have brought lasting results.

Grateful endorsements should prove undoubtedly the merits of this remedy. Years ago people right in this locality testified to the relief they had derived from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. They now confirm their testimonials. They say that time has completed the test.

M. Bechtel, assistant supt. of Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 319 Madison Ave., Petoskey, Mich., says: "The public statement given by me in favor of Doan's Kidney Pill while living in Niles, still holds good. For nearly three years I was caused great suffering from a constant ache across my loins and kidneys. If I sat for while it was almost impossible for me to straighten. I was in bad shape when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. One box completely relieved me, although other remedies failed. I had a recurrence of the trouble some time later, but I again took Doan's Kidney Pills, and they removed the attack."

COUNTY NORMAL.
(Edna Strigley)

Miss Isabel Knight, a former student of the Normal, called Wednesday. Miss Knight expects to take a course at Ypsilanti this winter.

On account of the crowded condition of the south side school, Miss LaCount was sent there to assist Miss Hanshaw in taking care of the children.

Prof. Walter H. French of the Agricultural College at Lansing, gave a very interesting talk on the teaching of agriculture, and also of the course of domestic science taught at the college.

The class was very much interested in hearing the experience of one of last year's class, Miss Hazel Miller, who is teaching at Burgess. She has an enrollment of over thirty, and we are very glad that she has a good school, and is well started.

The work of the class is very well started. In language story telling and dramatizing stories has begun, and we have discussed methods, and material for teaching language. The first class in music and drawing started Friday, there being only one who had music and two who have not had drawing, making it much easier for Mrs. Conlier.

The Charlevoix County Normal opened Monday morning with an enrollment of ten. Miss Rhoda Cliffe, graduate of Boyne City, Gladys Johnson of Manton, graduate of Pellston, Esther Walker of East Jordan, Velma LaCount of Central Lake, who has taught one year, Bertha Howe, Willard Howe, Ethyl Jacobs, Lila Howe, Hattie Hamilton of Charlevoix, Edna Strigley graduate of H. To the Editor:

In last week's issue of your valuable paper there appeared a communication signed by "Law and Order" in which would convey the idea to the minds of people who do not know, and to some who do not think, that Charlevoix is a den of vice and crime from end to end, from top to bottom. But to men who think and observe the article amounts to nothing, because the signature is a non-aquaintance pure simple, and certainly originated from the brain of the man who found a little book and after seeing some figures in it, said, "I am convinced that there is a gambling den in Charlevoix." The writer of this takes the liberty to suggest to Miss, Mrs. or Mr. "Law and Order" that instead of writing such articles and requesting their being published, that any one of the judicial in the City of Charlevoix have complaints that fit any case from an independent grin, on up to premeditated murder, and it is just as much the duty of "Law and Order," as the good citizens they pretend to be, to go and have a complaint filled out, and subscribe to and be sworn to it, as it is the duty of the officers, who "Law and Order" says are elected to protect, to arrest the person accused of the crime.

There are many people who like "Law and Order," wish to report this and that—and then hide their identity behind some non-de plume, or non-sequitur instead of coming out in the open like all good citizens should do—and give their aid in keeping good order. "Law and Order" says, "permit me to say that after a long line spent in three of the leading countries in the world—and years in some of the largest cities." A long life in this country means eighty years or more—and years in some of the largest cities means that he or she must be at least one hundred years old, and from age and experience he or she should not be afraid.

WILL HOLD PUBLIC MEETING

Road Commissioner Hammond to Ask Advice of Citizens

At the location of Three Miles of Road to Be Built Next Year

Believing that the citizens of Charlevoix and vicinity should be consulted as to the location of the three miles of state reward road to be built next year, County Road Commissioner O. D. Hammond will ask all interested in good roads to meet at the court house, Thursday evening, September 25, at 7:30, when the question of location will be discussed.

Good roads are of the utmost importance to every community, and when all roads leading into Charlevoix are built under state specifications, it will without doubt make this city the leading trading center of the county.

At present Mr. Hammond has a little over two and one-half miles of stone road completed between this city and Ironton, and the balance is graded and ready for the stone. With ten days of good weather the remaining portion will be completed. The first mile, upon inspection by a state inspector, met all the requirements of the good roads law, and was allowed the $1,000 state reward. The remaining two miles are fully as well built and without a doubt will be granted the same amount per mile.

The question to come before the people Thursday night will be where to build next year. Whether to continue building at the present location or to start from Charlevoix on the Petoskey road or roads leading from the south. Mr. Hammond believes the people should be consulted on this point, and will abide by the decision reached by a majority of those present. The question is an important one. The three miles of road is to be built and should be located where the traffic is the heaviest, and also where it will do the most good to the largest number of people.

WOOD STEAMING BOX.

Simple Device For Fitting Planking to Small Boat Hulls.

The following device for steaming planking on the hulls of small boats will be found very efficient.

A box is constructed of light wood or metal of the shape shown in Fig. 1. The open end should be about twelve inches long and of a breadth not greater than the narrowest part of the plank to be bent. The depth is about four inches, and at the center of the bottom a short piece of iron pipe is secured, to one end of which a hose is attached. A pair of handles can be placed on each side of the pipe to facilitate handling. The edges of the open end should be covered with cloth loosely.

STEAM BOX FOR BOAT BUILDING.

bailed, or, if preferred, weather strips can be nailed on the sides so as to form a tight joint when the whole is pressed up against the board.

The board to be bent being in place, as shown in Fig. 3, a slug is placed over the end and a atlatl inserted in the slug to form a tourniquet with which the end of the board may be pulled. Now by applying the steaming box as shown and attaching it by means of a hose to a boiler or kettle the plank is easily bent and the tourniquet tightened.

There should be no hurry in moving the box, as every part of the plank should be steamed in order to obtain a true curve. A pulley fixed on a drum support can be used instead of the atlatl. As the planking on the sides of a boat tapers from the center in each end, the box, as stated, should not be wider than the narrowest end. In order, therefore, to get good results when working on the wider part it will be necessary to keep moving the steaming box up and down.

Filler For Cracks in Furniture.

Pour boiling water over a quantity of sawdust placed in an earthenware vessel and allow it to set for about one week, thoroughly stirring the mass frequently, then boil it over a fire until it has the consistency of thick paste. Pour this in a coarse cloth and squeeze out the excess moisture. When required for use mix a little of it with a solution of glue water and fill up the cracks or holes with the mixture. When this dries out it has the appearance of wood.

Cleaning Tea Stained China.

A small portion of hyposulphite of soda mixed with vinegar will make a good cleaner for teacups having tannin stains. This process does not injure the finest china and is inexpensive. The same solution works quite well on shales that are accidentally stained with tea. They should be washed out and dried quickly after its application in order to make this method most effective.

POINTS FOR DAIRYMEN.

The farsighted dairyman has provided himself with a series of solving crops to be used during the dry season, when pastures will naturally be short.

There is no prospect of overstocking the dairy cow market. Dairy farming is the best soil fertility insurance.

The dairy farmer is often judged by the amount of clover or alfalfa that he raises and his attitude toward these two crops.

Comfort for the cow has a tendency to increase the milk flow.

It is better to salt the cows every day. Two to three ounces to each cow is enough.

HORSES IN HOT WEATHER.

A Little Thoughtfulness Adds Much to Their Health and Comfort.

Man looks out for himself. No fear of his forgetting that. But too often he is simply thoughtless and so forgets the rights and needs of his horse, says Dr. A. S. Alexander in the Rural New Yorker. Let us give these things more thought. Let us love to be kind and kind to be loved in return. Give the hard worked horse cold water in small quantities often when at work. How would you like to get along all forenoon or afternoon without the help of the little brown jug set in the cool mud of the nearby trough? Shade his head when at work. The cool cabbage leaf in your hat might remind you of his hot head. Sheet his body against sun and flies or at least allow him the help of a fly net. Wash his nose and mouth at noon, and allow a little cold water, then feed one to two pounds of hay while he is cooling off and afterward allow all the water he wants and then feed the oats. Do not feed more bulky food than this small amount of hay at noon when the horse has hard work to do. Much better feed than a dinner the digestive organs, does not nourish and proves a nuisance; also it helps to cause heaves.

The announcement that the Shire Horse society of England, desiring to encourage the owners add breeders of shire horses in America, had resolved to offer ten gold challenge cups, valued at $250 each, has aroused much interest among American breeders. Two of these gold cups will be awarded annually to representative American shows in rotation for five years. The society believed the International Live Stock exhibition at Chicago for its offer in 1913, and the gold cups will be awarded (a) for the best registered Shire stallion and (b) for the best registered Shire mare. Horses entered for these cups must be registered or eligible for registration in the American Shire stud book. The Shire stallion here shown is Tealbridge Future King, first prize winner at the recent show at Ipswich, England. He is owned by Lord Southcliffe.

and direct sun rays from irritating the eyes. Keep the stable clean and perfectly ventilated. Do not allow fly breeding manure to congregate anywhere near the stable. Allow the horse ample time in which slowly and perfectly to reach his feed at noon. If he feed does little good. It is not properly worked with saliva and is not properly digested. Sunstroke and heat exhaustion kill the horse that is suffering from indigestion in hot weather. Care, such as we are suggesting here, tends to prevent indigestion and immediately prevents sunstroke.

Do not forget the daily cleansing of the skin. Wash soiled parts. This is beneficial in hot weather, but remember to dry the parts washed. Groom the skin perfectly. Keep the currycomb off the animal's legs below the knees and hocks. The currycomb should be used mainly to clean the brush, not to scratch the skin.

Indigestion in Cows.

When a cow exhibits signs of indigestion make her take abundant outdoor exercise every day, and she should go on pasture all day. Mix in her feed night and morning a heaping tablespoonful of mixture of two parts of powdered wood charcoal and one part each of granulated hyposulphite of soda and powdered hydrastis. Allow free access to rock salt.

Didn't Move Him Much.

During the time the famous educator, Dr. Jowett, was master of Balliol, a young Japanese undergraduate of the university had been condemned to be expelled on account of unsatisfactory conduct. He obtained an interview with Dr. Jowett, and after pleading that the disgrace of being "sent down" would be unbearable he threatened he would commit suicide.

Whereupon Dr. Jowett replied in his blindest manner: "Not on my carpet, please."—London Graphic.

FEEDING CATTLE FOR THE MARKET

In spite of the important effect of values at marketing time there are a few factors that must be kept in mind by the cattle feeder, says the Iowa Homestead. For instance, steers of poor quality that could under no circumstances be made into prime finished cattle should not be carried to a high finish. The last hundred pounds of gain required to make a steer prime are the most expensive, and the increase in the selling price must be correspondingly larger to secure profit.

from the additional finish. Obviously, therefore, it will not be profitable ordinarily to put on this high priced finish when there is every assurance that it will not command a high price in the market. On the other hand, on a well bred steer this last hundred pounds may make him a market topper, and the result in this case may justify the high finish, though the latter part of this may be made at a high cost.

The relative supply and cost of grain and roughage to be disposed of are factors which should in a measure determine the length of the feeding period. Cattle for short feeding are usually in higher condition at the beginning of the feeding period, and therefore the proportion of grain to roughage consumed is greater than with cattle fed for a longer period. Where feeders wish to dispose of large quantities of roughage the feeding period is necessarily longer than when a larger proportion of concentrates to roughage is to be fed. In a general way, therefore, it may be said that the low grade steer should be used for a short feed only, while in the case of the well bred fleshy steer a high finish will usually bring the surest and largest profit.

In the case of the individual who raises his own feeders and carries them to a finish there is only one type that can be handled at a profit on high priced land—namely, the steer that inherits fleshing tendencies. Such cattle are the outcome of clearly defined breed characteristics, having in color and conformation the stamp of one of the great beef breeds. It does not discount the sound doctrine which requires that corn belt farmers raise only a good type of feeders to say that when feeding cattle are put into the feed lot from outside sources it is, under certain circumstances, unadvisable to put to use steers of inferior grade. If these are brought right and brought to a nicely worked up condition on the cheaper sorts of feed raised on corn belt farms.

DON'T LET CROPS "FIGHT."

Professor Taylor of the agricultural experiment station of the University of Wisconsin agricultural experiment station, says no single crop grown in Wisconsin keeps the farm labor busy all the time, but by a proper combination of crops employment of labor can be extended materially throughout the year. There are, however, limits to diversification. For instance, corn and tobacco require labor at the same time for planting and cultivation and are therefore competing crops, but tobacco furnishes winter employment to labor when there is a scarcity of employment, and therefore to this extent these crops are non-competing or complementary. The use of non-competing crops may well extend the operations of the farm.

ROTATION AND STOCK.

Two Work Together to Bring Greater Profit to the Farmer.

In a bulletin of the North Dakota station R. C. Doughue says of live stock in the general plan of crop rotation:

"In regions of light rainfall the maintenance of the organic matter of soil is the most practical method of increasing their water holding capacity. The plant remains, straw, stubble, etc., in these sections decay very slowly, and much care is necessary in returning organic matter to these soils. If live stock is fed on the farm and the straw and other refuse are worked into the manure it will decay faster when returned to the land. While a rotation can be used with profit if live stock is not kept, it is much easier to return the organic matter contained in the crop residues when they are fed on the farm. "Live stock is not absolutely necessary when beginning a rotation, but for the average conditions when they are kept the profits will be greater. A rotation may be followed without the return of the organic matter for a time, but eventually it must be returned. If not returned in manure more expensive methods must be used."

PUT THE HOG IN THIS.

Homemade Contrivance Good Also For Moving Other Heavy Objects.

Here is the handiest hog chute we ever have seen, and it can be arranged out of an ordinary chute by taking a couple of cultivator or any other small wheels and putting them a little over midway of the floor from the rear end, says the Iowa Homestead.

While any piece of strong timber will make a suitable axle for bearing up the chute, an axle from some old discarded spring wagon or buggy will last practically a lifetime and prove much more satisfactory than a wood axle. When it is desired to move the chute all that is necessary is to tilt the rear end and push the frame to the desired position. Instead of the old cumbersome method of tugging and dragging it around to where it was wanted.

PORTABLE HOG CHUTE.

[From the Iowa Homestead.]

If the wheels are kept well greased or oiled and if the chute is not too heavy one can use it for moving heavy articles around that could not be carried by hand.

The Value of Limestone.

"As valuable as lime is on the farm when the correction of acid soils is necessary it is not necessary to pay exorbitant prices for it," said Porter Elliot of the College of Agriculture, Ohio State university. "At recent extension schools during the discussion of soil liming it developed that farmers were paying as high as $3 a ton for carbonate of lime when ground limestone, which would do the work just as well, could be secured for less than a third of that cost. Get good ground limestone, and it will correct acidity just as readily as the best carbonate of lime you can find on the market. The farm profits will not increase until such useless waste is eliminated from the farm practices."

"GARDEN TRUCK."

The ground dries out more quickly under a high headed tree and more fruit is blown off by the wind.

Manure the rhubarb and asparagus beds. Both crops are the best where there is an abundance of vegetable matter in the soil.

Asparagus roots, properly planted, fertilized and given good culture, will continue to produce large spears for fifteen to twenty years in succession.

If the current or gooseberry bushes become infested with worms the pest can be abated by dusting the bushes with powdered white hellebore or spraying them with a solution made by adding the hellebore at the rate of a tablespoonful to a quart of water.

Lime dust around garden plants will keep away snails. They may also be trapped by putting cabbage leaves, lettuce or bits of raw potato about the infested places, leaving over night and then removing and destroying the snails harbored by the trap material.

WAS HAMLET FAT?

With His Own Words He Doth Prove the Fact Quite Pat.

The traditional Hamlet of our stage is a lean, ascetic young person, an idealized, etherealized, heroic creature evolved for the delectation of the matinee girl. He is a horrid sham. Is it credible that such a man would have lacked the determination, the purposefulness, to put his revenge into operation upon the discovery? It is all very well to argue about his mental balance. It was his sluggish liver that stayed him and hampered him.

Hamlet's father was a fat and lethargic man by his own account.

Sleeping within my orchard, My custom always of the afternoon, he says in his ghostly interview.

We may then look for some clew to Hamlet's character as soon as he is alone on the stage. What are his words?

Oh, that this too, too solid flesh would melt!

It is a keynote that may not be glossed over as a beautiful thought, for the same idea bursts out some lines further on, where he says of the world:

Things rank and gross in nature Possess it merely.

Is it credible that such thoughts are there for any purpose save to guide us as to the nature of this prince? They serve a double purpose. Not merely do we learn that Hamlet was a fat man, but also that he was an unhappy fat man. Hamlet was a man to whom his lack was an affliction. He was hindered and he knew that he was. So, even if he is discernible in every one of the great soliloquies, he seems to us for a sluggard.

What is a fat man?

If his chief good is a market of his time, he but to sleep and feed. His mind, unlighted by a torch, is a mere mass of fat, and in the end of his life he is a mere mass of fat.

Polonius has his thoughts run: We fat all creamies else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots. It bursts out again in the "Oh, what a rogue and peasant slave!" harangue.

Ere this I should have fatted all the region's kites With this slave's offal. And who but a fat, lethargic man would have said in the "To be or not to be" speech:

Who would fardels bear To grunt and sweat under a weary life, Does not the phrase bring to mind at once the picture of a fat man toiling at some loathsome task?—London Express.

WON BY A DOLL.

A Gift That Brought the Rebellious Apaches to Terms.

Major Bourke, as aid to General Crook, once showed himself an effective peace-maker. He persuaded a band of Apaches to go back to their reservation by presenting a doll to a poptoose. This incident was as follows:

General Crook had been trying to put these Apaches back on the reserve, but could not catch them without killing them, an action that did not appeal to him. On one of his forces captured a poptoose and took her to the fort. She was quiet all day, but her black eyes watched everything. When night came the child broke down and sobbed just as any white youngster might.

The fort was in despair until Major Bourke had an idea. From the adjutant's wife he borrowed a doll that had come to her little girl the previous Christmas. When the young Apache understood that it was hers to keep her sobbing ceased and she fell asleep.

When morning came the doll was still clasped tightly in her arms. She played with it all day, and seemingly all thought of ever getting back to the tribe had left her.

Several days passed with no sign of overtaking being made by the tribe, and finally in despair the poptoose, with the doll still in her possession, was sent back. When the child reached the tribe with the prize grasped in her chubby hands it created a sensation among the native Americans, and her mother later went back to the post with it. She was received in a hospitable manner and kindly treated, and the effect of her visit was such that through her overtures were made, with the result that soon afterward the entire band moved back on the reserve.—St. Louis Republic.

The Money Tennyson Made.

Lord Tennyson made a great income from his poems. When Strahan & Co. took over the publication of the poems in the sixties they agreed to pay Tennyson $25,000 a year. In respect to the books already issued and pay the poet all profits on new work, less a modest 10 per cent commission. This second item generally meant $30,000 for each new volume. For many years before his death Tennyson drew a steady $50,000 per annum from his publishers.

Just Like His Tooth.

Small Freddie had the toothache one day, and his mother told him the tooth was hollow and needed to be pulled. A few days later the mother complained of a severe headache. "Mamma," said Freddie wisely, "I'll bet your head is hollow. You ought to go and get it pulled."—Chicago News.

Hog Nulch For Orchard.

A Michigan man uses hog nulch and handles it very successfully. At least, he calls it a hog nulch. His land is not particularly good. He cultivates in the spring and seeds Canada field peas, sometimes using a small quantity of oats. When the peas are pretty well formed he turns in 200 hogs. They do not touch the trees, and, by the use of movable fences he has been able to switch them from one part of the orchard to another until the entire crop is fed down. He finishes his hogs with a little corn and then turns them to market as a by-product of his orchard. The orchard is well cultivated by the rooting of the hogs, and a large amount of manure is available to plow under the following spring.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Sealing the Silo With Water.

Horrell's Dairyman says that the best way to seal a silo is to put a considerable quantity of water into the silo after it is filled with silage. This way of sealing a silo was discovered by accident, a heavy rain on an uncovered silo furnishing the water seal. It was feared that much silage would be ruined by the water, but when the owner began using the silage he found a very thin layer of silage rotted, whereas before the rot had been many times as thick. Now this owner always seals his silo by covering the silage with water.

Stock Ought to Have Grain.

Adding a little grain to the roughage ration of even the stock herds not only saves roughage but by furnishing a greater variety of feed better digestion will be promoted and more nourishment obtained than from a like amount of a single article of feed.

The Resemblance.

"Just been in an auto accident. How do I look?" "Like a portrait of yourself by a cubist artist."—Puck.

THE KITCHEN CUPBOARD

ICED FRUITS.

FRUITS chilled or frozen make enticing summer desserts. Almost any fruits may be used for this purpose.

Plain fresh fruits served with ice cream are refreshing and nice. Recipes for serving some fruits in this way are given here. Others will suggest themselves to the cook.

Baked, Then Iced. Iced Apples.—Pare and core a half dozen large apples. Fill with sugar and a little butter and nutmeg. Bake until nearly done. Let cool and remove to another plate. Chill on ice. Serve with ice cream.

Watermelon Ice.—Take the pink pulp of a watermelon. Remove the seeds and add a cup of sugar. When the sugar is melted add beaten whites of two eggs and stir all together. Freeze but do not mold this. Turn the big round from the freezer on a platter. Dot with huckleberries and, if desired, sprinkle with a tiny glass of cordial or grape juice. This makes about two quarts. Use pulp and juice only, no water whatever. Select a very ripe melon.

With a Rich Sauce. Frosted Peaches.—Pare and slice one quart of ripe peaches, mixing them with a cupful of powdered sugar. Arrange them in a pudding dish. Meanwhile prepare a meringue from the stiffly whipped whites of three eggs and three tablespoonfuls of sugar and beat it over the peaches and brown this lightly in a slow oven. Serve very cold with ice cream or an iced egg nog sauce.

Served With Cream. Quince Snow.—Take six ripe quinces, cut in quarters; boil in water until very tender; then peel and rub through a coarse sieve. Have an equal quantity of fine sugar and the whites of three eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Beat into the quince and sugar the quince puree very gradually and continue beating until mixture is white and frothy. Fill with a spoon into a pretty glass dish and place in the refrigerator to become thoroughly chilled. Serve with one tablespoonful of whipped cream on top of each helping.

A Simple Dessert.

Iced Oranges.—Choose round, thin skinned fruit, all as nearly as possible of the same size. Peel and remove as much of the white pith as you can without actually breaking the fruit. Beat until very light the whites of one egg and mix with it one-half of a pound of powdered sugar. Whisk this for ten minutes until very smooth; string the oranges on a piece of stout thread, roll them in the icing until thoroughly coated and then hang them in the open door of the oven for about one-half hour or until the icing is dry. Chill them thoroughly before serving.

Anna Thompson.

Wild Animals Play Games.

Ernest Thompson Seton, speaking on "Human and Animal Parallels," said that some time or other all animals developed the social instincts. It had been noted that the higher civilized animals had all invented games. He had seen this trait in badgers playing "king of the castle" for hours on end in much the same manner as played by children. Others were especially addicted to taggong and sliding down a deep slope into a river—in other words, "shooting the chute." Elephants were known to have special spots to which they resorted for dancing and prairie hens also were very fond of dancing in the early hours of the morning.

W. P. DAVOLL DEAD

One of the Oldest Residents of Boyne Falls—Passes Away.

W. P. Davoll, one of the oldest residents of Boyne Falls and Charlevoix county, passed away at 12:45 Tuesday noon at his home in Boyne Falls following an illness of more than three years. Before his illness he was a merchant and property holder in his home town and one of the best known citizens in this part of the state. His wife died about two years ago, but he is survived by four sons, W. Alva and John, of Boyne Falls; Ed, of Postoria, O., and one other.

Superintendent I. M. DeVoe and wife entertained the teachers of the public schools Friday night. After gathering at the house, the party went to the beach where a corn and marshmallow roast was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

THE FLOCKMASTER.

The time has come when every farmer who is in the sheep business should preserve a part of his corn crop in the silo. It means much in the efficient production of mutton.

Sheep cannot eat silage in as great proportionate quantity as do cattle, though no one seems to know why. However, they do well on it, and it saves a great deal of hay and other feed. Sheep will do better on rough land than will any other kind of stock save goats.

Success in the sheep business depends as much on more upon the care taken as upon the sheep.

Ollmeal is greatly relished by lambs and helps greatly in obtaining a fine finish for the market.

Be sure the flock has plenty of fresh water. If the sheep drink from springs keep the approaches dry.

Corn silage is a safe feed for lambs when it is free from mold and does not contain an excessive amount of acid.

MILK COWS REGULARLY.

Carelessness in This Matter Tends to Lessen Milk Flow.

No greater mistake can be made with good dairy cows than to milk at irregular hours. No good cow will keep up her milk flow under such treatment, writes H. F. Burton in the Orange-Judd Farmer. Two milkings a day, twelve hours apart, is the only rule which the cows will abide by. On my own farm we milk at 5 a. m. and 5 p. m., which are as convenient hours as any. If anything happens to delay the milking even an hour it is noticeable that the cows resent it by giving less milk for a day or two. The reason for this is not far to seek. The solids of the milk are secreted at a very uniform rate between milkings, but the liquid part is mostly formed just before and during milking.

If a cow giving six quarts of milk at a milking was killed half an hour before milking there would not be more than two quarts of milk in her udder. This addition of the liquid to the solids that have accumulated since the last milking constitutes a large part of "letting down the milk" and is under the control of her nervous system. I do not mean that it is voluntary on the part of the cow, though I have seen men club a cow to make her let down the milk. We all know how emotion, such as anxiety or fright, makes our mouths dry. It is just in this way that any sort of disturbance shuts off a cow's milk.

I have several times found men who failed to milk their cows clean thus drying them up after six or seven months. The best security against this is found in keeping daily milk records. A spring balance with a dial face and a ruled sheet of cardboard will pay many hundred per cent in the larger flow of milk. I know that many a man who is dishonest enough to leave milk in a cow's udder is not bold enough to put record of his dishonesty down for his employer to read.

HOG CHOLERA CHECKED.

Methods by Which a Community Stamped Out Disease.

George Glover of the Blah expertment station writes that in one community with which he is familiar and in which hog cholera was rampant the disease was stamped out by the following method:

A competent veterinarian was made a deputy sheriff with instruction to clean up cholera. He did it by first ordering the carcasses of cholera hogs destroyed by fire. Healthy hogs were isolated from sick ones, serum was used with discretion, pens were ordered cleaned once a week and the litter destroyed by fire, lime was scattered in the yards and the pens white-washed, the hogs were placed in quarantine, and notices to that effect were posted conspicuously, the moving of hogs on the public roads was prohibited, and all imported hogs were held fifteen days before exposing them to other hogs.

This procedure in a general way, if enforced vigorously, will control hog cholera, and there is no other way. The sanitary authorities must enforce the same general rules in quarantine and disinfection that they do with smallpox and scarlet fever in the human, and there is no reason why the disease cannot be equally well controlled.

Taking Calf From Its Mother.

The exact time will depend upon the condition of the calf and its mother at time of milking. If the calf is strong and in good condition it may be taken away immediately, without allowing it to nurse. If the calf is weak at birth or if the cow's udder is inflamed or caked it is probably a better practice to allow it to remain with its mother for several days. In case the calf is immediately taken away from its mother it should receive the mother's first milk by all means, as it acts as a laxative and tonic and is very effective in cleaning out the digestive tract and stimulating the digestive organs.—American Agriculturist.

NUTS ON HUB BOLTS.

Drivers of Motorcars Should Use the Wrench Frequently.

In some cars the hub bolts are placed with the heads out and the nuts on the inside of the wheel, and in some of these no means of locking the nuts in position is provided. If your car is in the latter class be sure once in a while to go over these nuts with a wrench to be sure they are as tight as they should be. Those in the front wheels may be seen and easily reached, but looking at them only will not do it. It is the "feel" that tells. With the rear wheels the necessity for tightness and the chance for looseness are even greater, and getting at the nuts means pulling off the wheels. But it will pay—as the one who did not do it when he should have known—and after all, it does not take much time.

Even if the nuts do not work loose through jarring, the wheel which is clamped between the fanges will shrink somewhat and wear so that the "bite" of the nuts is lost, after which the looseness rapidly increases. When extreme looseness exists side thrusts and driving twists are taken by the tire fange, and the work required of it may prove more than it can stand. A sheared off fange is a hard thing to mend in a road repair, and the average spare parts box does not contain an extra one.—Automobile Dealer and Repairer.

Hint For Boat Owners.

When the sides of a boat become scored or bruised scrape the parts clean and fill the depressions with wood cement. The wood cement or stick cement, as it is called, can be procured from a paint store. Heat the cement with a blow torch and apply it to the bruised parts. Use a heated putty knife to smooth the cement and make the surface level. After sandpapering the hull and applying a coat of paint the boat sides will look as good as new. The cement will not chip or fall out.

PROVISIONS OF NEW SEED LAW

Contains Some Important Provisions Not Included in the Old Law.

Regulations For Analysis and Elimination of Weed Seeds in Rigid.

The state board of agriculture is directing attention to the new law passed at the last session of the legislature regarding the sale of seeds in Michigan. Contemplated in the act are the following seeds:

Alfalfa, barley, Canadian blue grass, Kentucky blue grass, bromegrass, timothy, clover, crimson clover, red clover, white clover, field corn, Kafir corn, meadow fescue, flax, millet, oats, orchard grass, rape, red top, rye, sorghum, timothy and wheat which are to be used for sowing or seedling purposes.

The act covers a wide field in the text, but of particular interest to seed dealers throughout the state are the provisions of sections 2, 3, 4 and 8. Whereas the present law provides that packages under one pound in weight do not come within the provisions of the law, the new law lowers the limit to eight ounces. The most important provision, however, is that provides that all such packages of eight ounces or more that are offered for sale shall be labeled. This does not mean that it is necessary that there shall be formal printed labels, although it is probable that wholesale dealers, both outside and in the state, will furnish such to retail dealers to be affixed to packages made up from the bulk of seed sold by the wholesaler.

The features that will require the greatest care are those that require the approximate percentages by weight of contaminants, specifying the kinds that are present in quantities greater than one per cent, and also the provision that no seeds may be sold or offered for sale that contain more than one seed in 2,000 of quack grass, Canada thistle, and the two dodders mentioned.

This point will make it necessary that the seed dealers or the wholesaler from whom the smaller dealers purchase their seed, must analyze their seed. In case this is done by the wholesalers or by the larger seed firms, these analysis will naturally be furnished to the retail dealers either on printed reports furnished by the wholesalers or on the label itself, that is attached to the lot so that the retail dealer will be able to obtain his analysis in that way. However, where the retail dealer buys his seed from the growers, it will be necessary that he make an analysis before he can sell that seed. If it is not possible for him to make the analysis himself, he can have this made by another person who is competent to do the work or, on payment of 25 cents for each sample analyzed, can have it made by the state board of agriculture or, more accurately, by the seed analyst appointed by the state board of agriculture and placed under the supervision of the department of botany of the college. To ease the dealers make their own analysis, these should conform in general to the regulations and methods of testing used by the United States department of agriculture.

The act does not apply to growers selling seeds to seed merchants or growers shipping seed to be cleaned and graded before being sold or to seed which is held in storage for the purpose of being cleaned or for seed marked "not cleaned" and held or sold for shipment outside the state. The latter, however, must conform to the government regulation governing shipment of seed in interstate commerce.

Of interest to the consumers are the paragraphs concerning the purity of the seed. It is particularly desirable that consumers take great care not to buy seed that has not the proper labels, as the very fact that this seed is not labeled should be prima facie evidence that the dealer is not conforming to the provision of the law. It should also be noted that seed containing quack grass, Canada thistle, and the dodders to the amount of one seed in 2,000 is not only forbidden to be sold, but also may not be sown.

SEASON OPENS TODAY

Hunters May Kill Partridge Until Midnight, November 30.

The fall hunting season in Charlevoix county for partridge opens today, and the partridge hunters have had their guns ready for some time in anticipation of some good shooting, especially during the early days in the season. The season will last for sixty days but it will be unlawful to take more than six in one day or to take more than fifty during the season. You are also likely to make a trip to the justice court with the game warden if you are caught with more than fifteen birds in your possession at one time.

Reports from the surrounding territory brings the news that there are this year plenty of partridges, especially in sections a little farther away from the city. Persons who care to hunt outside of their home counties will, this year, be required to secure a hunting license from their county clerk, a charge of a dollar being made for the license.

In some vicinities the report comes that there are more birds than there has been in years. The continued dry weather began at the time the first brood of young were hatched, and but few if any were lost by cold weather. The second brood are five or six weeks old, and in most cases were a good hatch.

CHURCHES AS SOCIAL CENTERS

A Seven Day in the Week Church is the Modern Solution.

Can be Made a Factor in Development of Character Among All People.

Not only have the fraternal societies a duty to perform in providing good wholesome entertainment in a community, but the church should and must arrange a program for the winter that will be attractive and instructive if they hold the young people.

The work of the church today has become more and more an every day proposition. Young people especially must have a diversified incentive to keep them in close touch with the church. The young mind and manner calls for new ideas and new conditions. No set "order of business" will last long in retaining the attention and interest of young people, nor many older ones for that matter.

If the church would succeed it must provide some means for drawing the people into closer communion with it. People are determined to go where the fun-dam of life will relax and give diversified recreation. The church is simply able and equipped to provide this in a wholesome manner.

All churches cannot provide for the same time. Here is where "unity" comes in, and they should get together and arrange their programs so as not to conflict and still provide ample social functions.

Looking at the proposition from a financial standpoint, there is no other property that has a greater investment than the churches that is used so little, as compared with what could be done. There are unlimited schemes that would provide two or three evenings social entertainment and are entirely proper in connection with the work of the church.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS, POULTRY AND BEES TO AMOUNT OF $137,803,795

Percentage of Increase in Value Since 1910 Runs High—Michigan Agriculture, Its Present State and Wonderful Possibilities of Development by Professor R. S. Shaw of M. A. C.

According to information issued by the Census Bureau in 1910 Michigan possessed domestic animals, poultry and bees to the value of $137,803,795, an increase of 74.3 per cent over the preceding decade. The percentage increase in value during this period for the different classes of animals are as follows, viz: For horses 98.4 per cent, cattle 43.8 per cent, swine 112 per cent and sheep and lambs 34.7 per cent. Cattle valuations are only about four-sevenths of those for horses and colts but the two together represent 80 per cent of the total live stock valuations, swine representing 7.1 per cent and poultry 11 per cent.

Of the 205,999 farms in Michigan 106,657 or 51.5 per cent report domestic animals of some kind. Cattle numbering 1,497,823 valued at $40,300,318 are reported on 187,081 farms. Horses and colts numbering 610,033 valued at $71,312,474 on 181,267 farms, swine 1,215,833 valued at $9,755,042 on 131,658 farms, sheep and lambs 2,306,456 head valued at $9,645,565 on 51,865 farms, mules and male colts 3,700 worth $93,825 on 1,865 farms.

Data procured from the 13th census report showed Michigan's ranking among other states in numbers of live stock to be as follows, viz: Horses, 14th, mules, 10th, all cattle, 15th, sheep, 8th, swine, 19th and poultry, 11th.

Horses are reported on 98 per cent of all farms but only 15.6 per cent report colts born in 1909 despite the fact that horses are both scarce and high priced. There is no reason why a farm work more properly led and handled cannot produce a good year's work and a strong vigorous foal at the same time. The climate, soil and crop products of a large portion of Michigan are eminently adapted to the production of heavy horses for which the market is so willing to pay a premium. Michigan is a purchaser rather than a seller of horses, in this respect she is neglecting a valuable opportunity.

Eighty-nine and four-tenths of the farms in Michigan reported cattle in 1910 but in some cases they consisted of one or more cows only for the production of farm dairy supplies. At this time there was a total of 767,083 dairy cows. In 1900 Michigan stood 7th among the states in order of total farm value of dairy products, 7th in amount of milk produced, 5th for quantity of cheese and 3rd in condensation products. The last census credits Michigan with 220 establishments manufacturing butter, 128 cheese factories and 5 condensed milk factories. Recently there has been a marked increase in interest in dairying in Michigan and this has been manifested in the rapidly with which pure-bred cattle breeding is being extended including the Holstein, Jersey and Guernsey breeds. A large part of the unclaimed portions of Michigan toward the north can be converted into good dairy districts.

The ranking of Michigan for cattle other than dairy cows was 20th in 1900. While the state has been notable for the quality rather than the quantity of horses, sheep and swine produced this is not true of beef cattle during recent years. The conditions confronting the settler were not favorable to cattle production for the country was heavily timbered and the grasses growing within the forest shades and along the water course and swamps were sparse in the former case and coarse and unwholesome in the latter. The settler was all absorbed in land clearing for crop production and his live stock equipment was meager, consisting of one or more cows and a few pigs and

THOROUGH CLEANING NEEDED

Suggestion of Business Men to Rid Bridge Street of Oil and Grease a Good One.

It has been suggested by several of our merchants, who take considerable pride in the appearance of their places of business, that it would be greatly appreciated if the common council or street committee would have Bridge street thoroughly cleaned.

This suggestion should not be construed as a criticism of the city "dads" of their method of cleaning the street during the past summer, for all admit that the street has been kept as clean as possible.

But now that the resort season is over and practically all of the heavy touring cars are gone, why not give the street a thorough cleaning and get rid of the oil and grease left by the cars standing along the street. In numerous places can be found large spots of grease and oil, which, if tracked in to the stores, makes it a hard proposition to keep the floors clean.

Why not take the fire hose and give the street a good cleaning? Get rid of the grease and oil now. The street sweeper simply sweeps it over the surface and does not take it up. The force of the water from the hose will drive it into the sewers and one thorough washing will last practically until spring.

TAKES HER LIFE BY HANGING

Daughter Finds Dead Body of Her Mother Hang From Nail.

Mrs. Vine Crane of Boyne City During Despondency Commits Rash Act.

Mrs. Vine Crane, for 23 years a resident of Boyne City, took her life by hanging at her home in that city about 9 o'clock Friday morning. Her body was found lifeless by her daughter at 9:15.

For years Mrs. Crane had not been well and was generally considered an invalid. She suffered frequent attacks of depression and had threatened to kill herself a number of times. This morning she was unusually despondent and difficult to manage. About 8:30 she walked toward the river, which is only a short distance from the home. Mr. Crane followed her and induced her to return home. He went to work in the yard, leaving his wife quietly reading in her bedroom. That was the last time he saw her alive.

Hattie, the daughter, said her mother seemed utterly despondent and went upstairs to her bedroom about 9 o'clock. She was heard moving about in the room for a few minutes and then all was quiet. Thinking her mother had gone to sleep the daughter went upstairs to see if she was resting comfortably. She found her hanging perfectly lifeless with a wire pant presser around her neck. The upper end of the wire was suspended from a large nail and the suicide was kneeling with her head thrust through the other end.

Mrs. Crane was born 52 years ago the 10th of this month and when 20 years old was married to Mr. Crane. In 1890 they moved to Boyne City. Besides her husband and daughter, one son, Fred, survives.

Auction Sale.

This week's Courier contains the announcement of the first auction sale for the season 1913-14. On page 7 will be found the advertisement of H. B. Wood, who will hold a sale Saturday, October 4, at his barn near the Courier office. Sixteen head of horses, besides numerous other articles will be sold to the highest bidder. W. E. Byers, the well known auctioneer, will conduct the sale.

In next week's Courier will be advertised the sale of Frank Sneathen, three-fourths of a mile south of the Maple Grove grange hall. Mr. Sneathen has some exceptionally good stock, including a registered Holstein bull. The date of his sale will be October 10.

FARMERS FACING GREAT PROBLEM

Bean Diseases Are Ruining Crop Throughout the Entire State.

State Agricultural College Issues Bulletin Giving Symptoms of Diseases.

The farmers of Michigan are facing one of the greatest problems they ever encountered in the bean diseases that are ruining the crop in practically every county. In order that the growers may know how the two diseases act the State Agricultural college has prepared the following bulletin which gives the symptoms of the diseases and the only known means to counteract them. The bulletin is as follows:

There are two serious diseases of beans in Michigan—bean anthracnose and bean blight. Bean anthracnose is caused by a parasitic fungus whose scientific name is Colletotrichum lindemuthianum. It is found on practically all parts of the bean plant and causes blotches, more or less circular, usually about the size of one's thumb nail, upon the leaves. On the stems long rankers, sometimes extending along the stem and into the ground are caused by this pest. On the pods typical areas are produced. Red or brown colored spots appear on the pods and these enlarge in a day or so until they are about the size of a bean. In general these spots are circular but two or more may run together to make a kidney-shaped "sore." These spots have a sunken center and soon this sunken becomes yellow with masses of spores. These spores do not blow about as do most spores because they are sticky and dry down to a crust but with rain or heavy dew these spores spall loose and are brushed about by the swaying plants, or transported by insects and the infection is soon spread so that no pod escapes. Cultivation of fields immediately after a rain or early in the morning is to be avoided. The growth of the fungus is not restricted to the pods but the threads of the pest grow into the seeds beneath the fungus spot. Examine a badly spotted pod and you will find the seeds beneath the pod are all discolored. This discoloration shows a dangerous condition in the seed.

A very serious disease of beans in this state is caused by the bacterial organism, Bacillus phaseoli. The attack of this germ is much like that of the anthracnose with the exception that the spots are not so large nor so regular and the color in the advanced stages is not so deep a red as is produced by bean anthracnose. In general the pods and the leaves are spotted with amber blotches.

Prof. Whetzel has shown that it is possible to avoid absolutely bean anthracnose. To do this the farmer must recognize the disease and select pod-free seed which are absolutely free from spots. These pods must be thrashed apart from the general run and such seed should be kept in tightly sealed jars and planted in clean ground at some distance from the infected fields. If selection is careful these seeds will give plants entirely free from anthracnose. It is not possible to secure seeds enough for this entire field, the selected seed may be planted in a separate patch and be used as a source of seed supply for the following year. There is no general control measure for bean blight since it is much more difficult to find pods absolutely free from blight germs.

Spraying with bordeaux mixture as found by Prof. Halsted is said to have a beneficial effect on the crop. Its value for controlling bean anthracnose has been questioned by Whetzel. With the lack of experimental evidence it cannot be said whether it is best to spray or not.

MAY PROVE FATAL

When Will Charlevoix People Learn the Importance of It?

Backache is only a simple thing at first. But if you find 'tis from the kidneys. That serious kidney troubles may follow. That dropsy or Bright's disease may be the fatal end. You will be glad to know the following experience.

'Tis the statement of a Charlevoix citizen.

Mrs. R. M. Mekeel, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix, Mich., says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly. I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. My body bloated quite badly and I had weak back and severe pain in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I obtained Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they have given me relief in every way."

The normal class began their work in manual training this week.

Miss June Stafford, a member of the class of '10, has gone to Ypsilanti.

Miss Janie Mitchell, a member of the class of '06, has gone to Kalamazoo.

A bird was found dead on the school grounds and brought over to the normal by some of the grammar school boys for the purpose of finding out what kind of bird it was. The students had some difficulty determining what class the bird belonged to but after comparing the descriptions of many other birds with the bird in question they decided it was a red eyed vireo. The red eyed vireo is a beautiful bird that is seldom seen on the ground but sings his beautiful notes from the top of some tree or telephone wires. This bird is an insect eating bird and is estimated to be worth twenty dollars each to the farmer. It was thought that the bird must have been killed by some one shooting sparrows who could not distinguish them from a sparrow. Edna Strigley gave an interesting talk to the students of the grammar

Once Upon a Time

ONCE there was really no way out of it for the farmer. Flooding him from the field with his team at close of day, he saw before him the waiting small jobs about the house, barn, and yard, jobs that took time and labor, and never seemed to end. There was water to be pumped, wood to be sawed, various machines to be run by hand. It was a weary prospect—but that was once upon a time. Today he lets the engine do it.

Buy from the I H C engine line. I H C engines are built right and consistently all through, to work efficiently for years. Whether you want it for sawing, pumping, spraying, electric light plant, for running separator, or repair shop, or for all sorts of tiresome energy-wasting small farm jobs, you have need of an

I H C Oil and Gas Engine

An I H C engine will develop from ten to thirty per cent more than its rated capacity. Perfect combustion makes it economical in fuel consumption. Its simplicity makes it practically trouble-proof.

I H C engines are built in vertical, horizontal, stationary, portable, skidded, air-cooled and water-cooled styles. The line includes sawing, pumping and spraying outfits. Sizes from 1 to 50-horse power. They operate on gas, gasoline, kerosene, naphtha, distillate and alcohol. I H C oil tractors range in size from 6-12 to 30-60-horse power, for plowing, threshing, etc.

Rev. Quinton Walker and Family Presented Fine
Wilton Rug

Nearly every Methodist in the city and many from the sister churches were present Monday night in the parlors of the church to extend a welcome to Rev. Quinton Walker and family, and express their appreciation of their return for another year.

The church was a profusion of cut flowers and potted plants artistically arranged. The Wilkinson Bros. Quartette furnished the music.

The chairman of the board of stewards in behalf of the church reviewed the work of last year and paid an earnest tribute to the pastor for his brotherly business-like administration, and as a token of appreciation presented the family with an elegant Wilton rug. Elder Dropped Dead.

David Isaman, aged 75 years, a pioneer resident of South Arm township, dropped dead Saturday while in the woods near his home cutting a pole. He had told members of his family where he was going and after being absent for some time, they became worried and went to find him. He had been dead for some time when the body was found, having been stricken by heart trouble. He leaves a widow and six children. The funeral took place Tuesday from the house.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE
BIBLE STUDY ON GRAVES OF GREEDINESS.
Numbers 11:4-34—Oct. 5.

"The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working."—James 5:16.

THE Israelites remained at Mt. Sinai about a year, learning important lessons. The Tabernacle was set up as a meeting place between God and the people. God was represented by the pillar of cloud resting upon its top, and at night flaming like a torch.

God's presence within the Tabernacle was seen only by Moses and Aaron, in connection with their privileged services. He was represented by the Shekinah brightness upon the Mercy Seat. Thus the Tabernacle became the center of the nation's life and interest in relation to God, who communicated to them through the mediator of the Law Covenant—Moses.

The Sin of Murmuring.
Those who accept God as their Lord or should never murmur—never complain. To do so is to dispute the Divine Wisdom and the Divine promises, and to that extent to break the covenant of faith, obedience and loyalty. St. Paul reminds us that the murmuring of the Israelites carried such a lesson to us.—Hebrews

3:7-10; 4:1-11
The Lord's dealings with Israel show us that justice, love, mercy, loyalty to God and to principle are to the Divine estimation the highest qualities, and their violation the most serious crime. If we have not looked thus at matters, it behooves us to change our viewpoint and to take the Almighty's.

This murmuring against the Lord was concerning the manna, for which at first the people had been very thankful. They allowed their minds to become so vexed that they wept like children at the thought of the fleshpots of Egypt, and murmured in desiring to return to the old conditions. Little did they comprehend the situation. Had they returned to bondage, even after a year's freedom, their lot would have seemed more wretched than before.

Moses Too Greatly Burdened.
The result of this murmuring was severe upon Moses. He was the people's representative before the Lord and the Lord's representative before the people. Heart-broken, he sought the Lord, saying that the burden was too heavy for him to bear.

Then it was that God directed the institution of the Jewish Sanhedrin, seventy Elders, to be the court of judges, responsible to the people, to deal with and to counsel them. While Moses remained head of the nation, the seventy shared his responsibility.

By Divine direction Moses made out the list of these Elders, and requested them to meet him at the Tabernacle. All but two came. There God honored Moses as the head of the nation, and then placed a share of the responsibility upon the 70. This was indicated by their prophesying. Even the two who remained in the Camp prophesied.

Quail In Over-supply.
God then sent word to Israel through Moses that he was about to send them a thirty-days supply of flesh, such as they had murmured for. Under the Lord's providence, a strong wind drove thousands of quail to the vicinity of the Camp. Two days and nights the people gathered quail.

Agnostics have questioned this statement, thinking it a declaration that birds fell in a solid mass two cubits high. The proper thought is that the birds, driven across the sea, were so fatigued that they flew low, about two cubits (three feet) above the ground, where they could be easily caught.

The murmurers ate so heartily that pestilence broke out among them, a fever from over-eating, called "a fire from the Lord." Many died and were buried there. The place was called Kibroth-Hattavah—"Graves of Greediness." Thus the Lord permitted the unthankful to cut themselves off from further opportunity for mourning.

The happiest mental condition conceivable is that which is satisfied with God's appointments. The spirit of discontent looks away from the Heavenly Manna, longing for other food. For such the Lord grants opportunity of feasting to the full on what they crave; but the murmurers cease from being members of His family.

The Bible supplies the Manual of Divine Truth. The Truth needs to be gathered, ground and baked. But it is God's provision, wholesome, nutritious, necessary for our perfecting as God's people. Yet some crave the fleshpots of Egypt—the world's theories.

These God allows to come within their reach. They fill themselves with Higher Criticism and Evolutionary theories and perish as New Creatures.

Greed, selfishness, stands connected with sin of every kind. It leads to every form of immorality, to satisfy its selfish propensities. It leads to injustice and untruthfulness in its endeavor to acquire a large share of God's blessings. It leads to anger, malice, hatred, envy, strife and murder. It endeavors to obtain a superhuman share of this world's goods. Selfishness is thus unrighteousness, and "all unrighteousness is sin."

Judge Mayne and family, who have been spending the summer at Bay View, have returned to this city, and are in their home on Michigan avenue.

Dave Sanquist, who has been ill in the Petoskey hospital, is much improved. Before returning here he visited his home town, Hancock, a couple weeks.

Frank M. Clark of Harbor Springs, was in the city Sunday. Mr. Clark was formerly employed at this office, but is now in the printing business in his home town.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong left Sunday evening for a short professional visit to Michael Reese Hospital Chicago, expecting to return Tuesday night. Bruce accompanied the doctor to make his sister Helen a surprise visit.

Wm. Mitchell and Lynn Thomas left Monday for Ann Arbor where they will attend the University of Michigan. William will enter for his second year of dentistry and Lynn will take a course in Mechanical Engineering.

The Courier received a post card Monday from Chris Lyngklip, requesting that his paper, be sent to Racine, Wisconsin, until further notice. He states that Racine is a beautiful little city, but in no way equal to his home town, Charlevoix.

Mrs. R. B. Armstrong returned Friday night from a two weeks stay in Chicago with Miss Helen, who is attending the Chicago School of Physical Education and Expression. She is nicely located in Orvis Hall, a girls' dormitory near the university.

Road Commissioner Hammond makes a splendid report to the county road work out from Charlevoix. As we noted some weeks ago, he had already got the $1,000 state award for the first mile of his road, the second mile was inspected and approved by the state engineer this week, and with good weather the third mile will be completed inside of two weeks. He is now asking that another section of a half-mile or a mile more of road be surveyed, taken over and improved this fall, which he thinks he can complete

AID TO INTELLIGENT STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Sunday School Lessons Educational to All.

An Illustrated Commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons May Be Obtained by Saving the Articles From This Paper—Handy Compendium For Bible Students.

The Brooklyn Tabernacle articles on the International Sunday School Lessons bring out the instruction intended in a way which can be seen to be more harmonious, beautiful and reasonable than is generally understood.

There never was a time when religion was investigated as generally by all classes of people as it is today. There never was a time when helpful explanations of the Sunday School Lessons were more needed. The Brooklyn Tabernacle Lessons are the timely and for all. They present the various fragments of truth on the different subjects in such language as best enables all classes of readers to grasp the general thoughts of the lessons clearly.

The Sunday School Teachers and pupils who devote fifteen minutes of study carefully, with the hope of mastering their lessons, are often disappointed; but to those of our readers who will give just time enough for a careful reading of the Brooklyn Tabernacle single-column article we offer assurance of pleasant and lasting results.

It is the design of many readers to save the Lessons for a period of time and then have them bound together. This will constitute a valuable and helpful commentary upon Sunday School Lessons.

The Brooklyn Tabernacle International Sunday School Lesson will be a regular feature in this paper each week.

MAN AND HIS THOUGHTS.

The future for each man lies in the thoughts that his heart broods upon secretly day by day. If they are pure and high his future is sure to unfold nobly. If they are evil and low no circumstances can save him from an inferior and ignoble future.

A SERIOUS PROBLEM

Farmers Unable to Get Competent Help to Harvest Fall Crops.

The help question is becoming more and more serious to farmers every year. There is an alarming scarcity of workers and the matter is becoming a serious problem with Michigan farmers. On every hand, the complaint comes that it is impossible to obtain competent help to harvest the fall crops. One prominent farmer stated to the Courier the other day that he had offered $2.00 per day and board, but was unable to get help even at this high price.

VISITED AT HER OLD HOME

Interesting Letter From Mrs. Ada M. Shockley on Her Recent Trip.

FEW AUTOMOBILES IN EAST

Saw More in Detroit Than Was Seen on the Entire Trip.

Many Changes Have Taken Place in Her Childhood Home—Still of Opinion That Charlevoix is Best Place to Live.

Following is an interesting letter from the pen of Mrs. Ada M. Shockley, who left Charlevoix a few weeks ago on a visit to her birthplace. The letter was written at the request of the Courier, and we feel well repaid by the excellent description of the country enroute, and many interesting sights witnessed:

Prince Edward Island, Maritime Provinces, September 25, 1913.

Editor Courier:—We left Detroit Sunday evening September 11th on a train made of fifteen pullman sleepers, most of the passengers being students going to the eastern colleges. I heard one of the conductors say they had been going like that for a week. Wonder what the author of "The Second Generation" would have said to that? Very few stops were made between Detroit and Boston and many interesting sights were passed in the night.

One is much surprised along the way with the great manufacturing industries of New York state. Every city seemed to be filled with huge smoke stacks. The canals and flat boats were indeed a change from our active bustling lake shipping, and only made us more contented with what we have at home.

New York has a great deal of waste land, owing to the very high hills and rocky soil. Here as in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts the land is too broken and stony for farming purposes, and we did not wonder that so many people went west where land is productive and workable.

The Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts are an ever ending source of delight. Now we are passing through a tunnel of solid rock, next following a winding river or brook, then through miles of rocky lands, and wood lands, with here and there a small clearing planted to corn, and miles from any city or town, a cottage will be seen hanging from a rocky ledge, where someone is passing the time with gun and rod. Two engines were needed to pull our train over and through these hills, and at times we could see them, and the rear coach at the same time, so winding and twisting is the road. The towns are long and narrow, nestling at the foot of the hills, and in the country, stone fences are seen everywhere. Fruit trees look old and neglected.

Boston, the Hub of the Universe, old and historical, is always interesting to the traveler. We found our way very easily, and again viewed old and familiar scenes. The narrow, crooked, congested streets are just the same. One is amazed at the great seething mass of humanity we see, and cannot help exclaiming, "where can all the people be going?" but one thing is sure, we saw more automobiles in Detroit in half an hour than we saw all the rest of the time we were gone.

We took a sight seeing car and visited many of the places which makes Boston famous, one being the navy yard where we had the privilege of going through the famous wooden battleship Constitution, better known as "Old Ironsides," which was built in Boston in 1776. The old ship is kept in splendid condition, and is visited by many thousands of tourists. This ship was manned by 400 seamen, and all the cooking was done on a big iron fire place built on the second deck below. Great was the contrast between this old warrior, and the two modern ships lying near her.

To get to commercial wharf one has to pass block after block of fish ware houses where all kinds of the finny tribe were being unloaded from smacks and schooners, the same as coal is unloaded from our lake freighters, others were lifting them with trolleys, as men lift hay, on wagons and carts—salmon, cod, haddock and mackerel, besides many others whose names I did not have time to learn. Thinking of all the friends in Charlevoix the desire, to take a load back with me was strong.

At 12:00 in the beautiful new S. S. Evangeline of the Plant line left the wharf, amid the blowing of whistles, and waving of handkerchiefs. It is the custom when an ocean steamer is leaving, for all the surrounding boats to blow a long farewell, and very animating it all is.

Historical Boston harbor is dotted with every kind of a sailing, and steam craft from many parts of the world, and we found ourselves imbued with a youthful enthusiasm, as we threaded our way through them, and the many islands which make a novel sight. [To be continued next week.]

PAPER REACHES THE PEOPLE

Use The Courier When You Want to Advertise an Auction Sale

Many Reason Why the Newspaper Bigger Crows and Better Prices

This week we publish the auction sale of Frank Sneathen. The sale will be held at his farm, three-fourths of a mile south of Maple Grove Grange hall, on Thursday, October 10, commencing at 10 o'clock sharp.

The sale will be a large one. Fourteen milch cows, six head of half-blood Holstein heifers with calf by side, eight head of half-blood Holstein calves, a full-blood Holstein bull, and several of exceptionally good colts will be sold. Wm. E. Byers, the popular auctioneer, will cry the sale. For full particulars see advertisement on page 7.

The foremost consideration with the man who holds an auction sale is to get a fair price for his property; the best price he can obtain for it, when the buyers know its value and desire to come into its ownership.

As between the auction bill and the auction sale advertisement in The Courier, the former has had its day, and is as out of date as the stage coach. But why The Courier as the medium for advertising auction sales?

The Courier plan for advertising auction sales is a demonstrated success, for in the past five years we have advertised hundreds of sales. People have come to expect to see an auction sale advertised in the Courier; it is the recognized auction sale advertising medium for this section.

The Courier puts the man having the sale in touch with the man who wants the goods or live stock advertised because he has use for it, and he goes to the sale because he is interested as a buyer, and not because he expects to pick up some at a ridiculously low figure. The Courier plan makes the auction sale a county matter, not a mere neighborhood matter.

It costs but a trifle more to get an advertisement in The Courier giving full details of the property offered at the sale than to get out the bills in the old way. And in every case, so far as we have learned, the results have been unvarying satisfactory, except where winter storms interfered, and yielded the owner more than he expected in many instances by hundreds of dollars more. Often the price realized on a single article above what the owner had expected to get, paid all the expenses of the sale.

We make dates for the auctioneers and this office has become the recognized headquarters for auction sale advertising and information.

The Courier containing the information or advertisement is laid away for reference by the person who reads the auction sale notice, so that it can be readily referred to. This is quite different from the bill which is tucked on trees or fences, and which cannot be easily read and the information it gives can be easily forgotten.

1909 CEREAL CROPS IN STATE OF MICHIGAN VALUED AT $70,544,250

Leading Cereal Crops Rank as Follows in Importance, Corn, Oats, Wheat, Rye and Barley—Area Devoted to Fruit Growing Being Rapidly Developed—Michigan Agriculture by Prof. Shaw.

In 1909 according to the report of the Census Bureau the total area of cereal crops grown in Michigan was 4,415,929 acres, producing 121,892,638 bushels valued at $70,544,250 distributed among the various crops as follows, viz:

Crop	Acres Harvested	Amount of yield	Value
Corn	1,589,506	52,000,842	$20,580,929
Oats	1,429,976	43,800,502	18,506,103
Winter Wheat	703,006	15,800,501	10,158,878
Spring Wheat	8,368	124,082	125,081
Muscatel Wheat	103	2,408	2,300
Rummer or Spelt	5,712	151,003	97,111
Barley	33,005	2,132,101	1,232,344
Buckwheat	75,000	938,119	501,748
Rye	119,929	5,811,391	3,911,010
Kafir Corn	81	1,780	1,136

These figures are given in detail because they are considered to be of general interest. Attention is directed to the great variety in cereal production. With the exception of two of the ten crop products listed above the annual valuations run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. In order of total acreage and valuation the leading cereal crops rank as follows in order of importance, viz: Corn, oats, wheat, rye, and barley. Corn included one-third the total area of all cereals and two-fifths of their value and though therefore grown largely in southern Michigan the increased area to the northward is very marked. The acreage of wheat is about half that of corn and rye half that of wheat. One-fourth the rye acreage of the state is in Montcalm, Kent, Jackson, Mecosta, Oakland and Livingston counties. Oats are reported by 50 per cent of the farms of the state, wheat by 40 per cent, barley by 10 per cent and rye and beans about 25 per cent each.

The following statement includes the amounts of "other grains and seed" produced in Michigan in 1909, viz: Dry edible beans 3,525,511 bu., dry peas 1,022,193 bu., clover seed 138,289 bu., timothy seed 10,882 bu., flax seed 2,943 bu., millet seed 2,226 bu., peanuts 1,111 bu., alfalfa seed 203 bu., other tame grass seed 165 bu., sunflower seed 10 bu., and gum seed valued at $362.00. The total value of the products in this class amounts to $120,253.92.

Hay, forage, soiling and root crops (not including sugar beets) are reported from 175,063 farms including a total area of 2,513,301 acres of these crops with a combined product of 3,652,339 tons valued at $369,495.87.

Timothy and clover mixed included 1,625,229 acres which produced 1,901,618 tons valued at $21,276,325. Timothy alone stood second covering 740,543 acres with a product of 920,115 tons valued at $10,492,364. Clover alone was third, area 165,180 acres, product 218,802 tons, valued $1,033,841.

The other crops in this class included alfalfa, millet, tame and wild grasses, soiling crops, coarse forage and root crops.

The order of Michigan staple farm crops according to their value is as follows, viz: (1) Hay and forage

Crop	Year	Production	Rating
Apples	1909	15,332,000 bu.	2nd.
Pears	1909	600,000 bu.	3rd.
Peaches	1909	987,000 bu.	5th.
Cherries	1909	338,945 bu.	11th.
Plums and Prunes	1909	181,188 bu.	19th.
Grapes	1909	120,000,000 lbs.	3rd.

There are two leading possibilities for greatly increasing the horticultural productions of Michigan. In the first place the area devoted to fruit growing is rapidly being extended and occupying large tracts of new land not now included in farms. The possibilities of fruit growing in the northern part of the state are just beginning to be realized. In the second place the state is about to reap an abundant reward from the stimulus which has been given the rejuvenation of older established orchards thus greatly increasing the quantity of the product by employing improved methods of pruning, spraying, tillage, packing, marketing, etc. There are great possibilities before this industry in Michigan.

Apple Blossoms in October.

Saturday the Courier was presented with a fine bouquet of apple blossoms by Mrs. Albert O'Brien of Hayes township. Mrs. O'Brien stated they were picked from a small tree in her yard and that the tree was covered with blossoms. Early in the spring the tree leaved out but shortly afterward, to begin to fall, until there was scarcely any left. Then the tree seemed to take on a new lease of life, and again leaved out, and at this late date, is in full bloom.

Have you tried them. The Courier want adds

ENLARGES STORE

H. R. Fowler Making Needed Improvements on Bridge Street Property.

Finding his present quarters too small for his rapidly increasing business, H. R. Fowler has begun improvements on his store at 113 Bridge street, which when completed, will make it one of the best business places in the city.

The front of the present store will be built to the sidewalk line and a ten foot addition will be made on the south side. Also the entire store will be lengthened, so that when furnished the building will be 28x55 feet.

The front of the new building will be built of brick and the addition cement blocks. At the rear corner, the balance fitted up in an up-to-date and sanitary manner. We understand Mr. Fowler will put in a full line of groceries, in addition to the line of meats, fruits and vegetables he has carried during the past year.

THOUGHT TABLETS WERE CANDY

Deadly Poison Takes Life of Little Annie Bacot.

Ate Several Strychnine Tablets and Died After Two Hours of Suffering.

After about two hours of untold agony and suffering, Annie, the little 22 months old child of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Bacot died Friday afternoon from eating strychnine tablets.

The little tot had been left at the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Joseph Seymour, while her mother went on an errand. In her play about the house she went into a bedroom, which was occupied by a member of the family who was ill.

The physicians in charge had left strychnine tablets to the number of ten, to be taken by the patient under his care. It is thought the child saw the tablets on the dresser, and thinking they were candy, and ate several of them. Six of the tablets were missing, as four of them had been used as prescribed by the physician.

The strength of each tablet was one hundred times the dose for a child, and within five minutes after eating them, she was taken with convulsions. Physicians were called, and the child's stomach emptied by use of a stomach pump. The agonizing convulsions were also controlled, but the action of the poison was so rapid that it was impossible to save the life of the little one.

Funeral services were held Sunday at one o'clock p. m., from the Catholic church. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the entire community in their loss.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING

Miss Ada M. Pierce Becomes the Wife of August Cellner.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pierce, who lives about a mile west of Ironston, was the scene of a pretty home wedding Monday at 8:00 o'clock p. m., when their daughter, Ida M., was united in marriage to Mr. August Cellner.

The bride is well and favorably known in this vicinity, having lived here all her life. The groom has been a resident of this section some three or four years, and well is well spoken of by those with whom he was acquainted.

The ceremony was performed by Justice J. M. Felts of Charlevoix, after which a bountiful wedding supper was served. The guests present were confined to immediate relatives and close family acquaintances. The happy couple have the best wishes of their many friends.

CHARLEVOIX IN FOR GREAT TREAT

This Winters' Lecture and Entertainment Course the Best Ever Held.

OPENING NUMBER OCTOBER 17

Should be Enthusiastically Supported by Every Citizen.

Three Entertainments and Two Lectures Constitute the Course and Are the Best Listed by Bureau.

Charlevoix citizens are again to be given a treat in this winters' lecture and entertainment course. Three entertainments and two lectures constitute the course and the talent is the best listed by the Coit Lyceum Bureau.

The opening number, the International Operatic Company, booked on the most expensive lyceum and chautauque courses of the country and it was only by special arrangement that they were secured for Charlevoix. Three members of the company have been associated with grand opera and every member of the company is a musician of note. The personnel of the company includes Leckla Farm, who sang with Schumann-Heink in "Love's Lottery," Rose Hedenrich, recently with the National Grand Opera company, Bert McKinnon, leading baritone with Savoye Grand Opera company, Allen Grubb, a prominent Chicago tenor, and Margaret Ray, an accompanist of rare ability. They give a varied program of light opera and concert work.

Elias Day says of the Orpheans, the second number, that "there are only four first class male quartets on the Lyceum platform and the Orpheans are one of them." They have been together for a number of years and their voices blend perfectly. The Orpheans give a varied program of vocal and instrumental music, cartoon work and impersonations.

The Cambridge Players, coached by Elias Day, is the only organization to which Mr. Day has given his name as coach and director. The company have banded together in the form of a joint stock company, thus insuring stability and continued service. They offer to the public entertainments of purpose, variety and thoroughly artistic modeling, with an attention to detail that will be a revelation. All costumes are historically correct and procured without regard for expense. The scenes taken from famous plays are the most vital; the humor clean and wholesome; the staging above reproach.

I. B. Wickersham says of H. V. Adams, the fourth number: "If a committeeman should ask me to name a man who would please all, entertain all and edify all and one who would leave the whole community admiring a manly man and saying nothing but good words for the Lyceum movement, I would say, 'Get H. V. Adams.' I will class him as the 'all-round man.' I am fully conscious that the above are strong words, but ten years of acquaintance explain why I use them and go thus on record."

The course closes with Roland A. Nichols. For ten years he was a minister in Worcester, Mass., and Chicago, in the latter city, serving as pastor of the Jackson Boulevard Christian Church, and of the Union Church at The People's Institute. For six years he has divided his time between the evangelistic field and the lecture platform.

Buy New Locomotives.

General Superintendent W. C. Hurst, of the Pere Marquette, has announced that the road has recently purchased four new Mikado type of locomotives. These are the way to the system now from the shops in Schenectady, N. Y. The engines cost about $25,000 each and are over ten per cent bigger than the largest type used on the system at present. The engines are eight drivers with trailer and pony truck and weigh 151,000 lbs. They boom up large beside the consolidated type which has heretofore been the "mogul" on the road.

THE UNWASHED CUP

If You Would be Safe Also Up-To-Date Don't Use It.

The unwashed cup—Do you use it? Do members of your family use it at home or elsewhere? If you do it is up to you to wake up and realize that you are not only behind the times, but so far as this practice is concerned, in the stone age of civilization. Don't you know that the trend of all the centuries is away from the gregariousness of the primitive man and toward the privacy and individualism of modern life? In thought and action men are becoming more social but in habits of living more individual. In the dark corners of the world today you will find people eating from one dish, smoking a common pipe, bathing in a common tub. Do you want to be classed with these people, or even with the crass boarding school boy who borrows his roommate's pantaloons to go to the ball game? You stopped using a family tooth brush several generations ago. Why do you continue to use a family, or worse, a school or railroad station cup that is practically certain to have been used by uncleanly and diseased people and Get at the root of the trouble. Rubbing an aching back may relieve it. But won't cure it if the kidneys are weak.

You must reach the root of it—the kidneys. Reach the cause; relieve the pain. Begin at once with Doan's Kidney Pills.

Are recommended by thousands. Here is a statement from a resident of Petoskey.

Mrs. William Genshow, 722 Maple street, Petoskey, Michigan, says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly. I have used them occasionally for kidney complaint and backache and they have done me more good than any other remedy I ever used. A few months ago I was suffering from backache and pains across my loins. My kidneys are also giving me a great deal of annoyance. Doan's Kidney Pills quickly relieved me."

For sale by all dealers. Price, 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

CORRESPONDENCE

NORTH BAY.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Cain returned to Cecil Bay, Monday, September 29. Several farmers in North Bay and West Resort filled their silos last week.

The evening services at North Bay church Sunday were conducted by Rev. McEllan.

Mrs. Alma Critchell of Petoskey visited her people Thursday afternoon at Long View Farm.

Kolla Long had the misfortune to get a sliver in his finger Saturday and Sunday he went to Petoskey and had his finger lanced. A piece of the sliver one half inch long was removed.

The surprise party gotten up by Miss Martin, teacher of District No. 1 on Leona Priebe, was a success, when 16 of her friends gathered at her home to give her a hearty welcome when she returned from her school at Boyne City Friday. The evening was spent in various ways of amusement and was greatly enjoyed by all. Ice cream and cake was served.

Morrell Long died at Petoskey hospital Wednesday at 1:01 a. m. Funeral services were held at North Bay Church Thursday 10:30 a. m. Services were conducted by Rev. McEllan assisted by Rev. Belknap. Interment at North Bay cemetery. Morrell Long was born February 1, 1853 in Grand Blanc, Genesee county, Mich. In 1878 he came north locating in Hayes township. In 1882 he moved to North Bay township, where he resided for several. About 18 years ago he had paralysis and shortly thereafter he moved to Petoskey where he has resided most of the time since. He is survived by one son and two brothers.

THE FUNNIEST EVER!

"The Colognizing of Kansas"

all ranks. Mike is lit up like a Dewey arch, a thousand candles strong, with a long fur trimmed overcoat, pointed yaller shoes, tan gaiters and a pearl gray felt hat. For a theatrical make-up he has John Drew run under the bed.

"I am Papirky Curranba, the Arizona bandit. You see, I am some black, anyhow, so I lease myself in a greaser habit of speech, a bewhiskered buckskin suit and am a dangerous desperado.

"Here's the program. We open with a quartet by the diggers. Oh, yes; I near forgot the diggers. We have four Senegambians from Topeka that slug from all points of the compass to a common center. One of 'em plays 'Turkey in the Straw' on the banjo, while the others dance. They cost us fourteen a week.

"Well after the music the Mexican desperado gives exhibitions of throwing the bowie and pistol practice, after which we have more music, and Mike does 'marvelous, mystifying feats of sleight of hand too baffling for the mind and too rapid for the eye.' Then we have some 'back and whingler' by the African team, after which Mike addresses the pacified and radiant hay diggers as follows:

"No doubt, ladies and gents, you have been delighted by our educational entertainment, but to give fleeting pleasure ain't our only mission. We have a higher motive. It is a blessed privilege to make the arduous path more pleasant, and we are here to conduce to them scenic effects by alighting the nuisances of life. One man may like music and his neighbor prefer the screech of a sled runner on bare ground. This one may have a sweet tooth, while his friend's is hollow and the nerve exposed; but, dear friends, all the world loves a sweet smile.

"We admire the Jassamine and would fain preserve the fragrance of the rose. Let us have done with the sordid scents of the stables and imported cheese and tinkle our bonnets with the breath of forest flowers. That, ladies and gents, is our sacred errand amongst you. We are the distributing agents of the Kansas Cologne company, unlimited. Remember, we have nothing to sell; we only advertise the perfume so that you can buy direct from your local druggists. We simply charge a nominal price to cover the cost of the bottles and the hand painted labels, giving you the contents as free as this program, which ain't yet over.

"To conclude this evening's entertainment I propose to spar three rounds with Senior Curranba, demonstrating in a refined and gentlemanly manner the blows with which I won the title of middleweight champion of the world. This is not a brutal exhibition, but a clean and scientific lesson in that greatest domestic accomplishment, the 'man and womanly art of self defense.' It is endorsed by the leading society ladies of the great cities and has received the highest encomiums from prominent divines. While we are changing costume the four Moorish gentlemen will pass amongst you with free samples of the cologne. After you have smelled it they will offer for sale the few remaining bottles. Remember, four ounces for the rich; four ounces for the poor; four ounces for the four blis-riddleous cheap, too, when you consider that it stood us $8 an ounce in Topeka—that is, the real stuff that the coons carried around did, but of course the four ounce bottles, being as we filled them with filtered water and soaked the corks in real cologne during the afternoons when we wasn't busy. Yes, sir, they sure did like the smell of them corked up water bottles, and we was doing well.

"Quick sales and small profits is our motto," says Mike. "We make 49 cents a bottle, which is small enough, and we sell out of a place as quick as possible. All it takes to run the biz is a barrel of spring water and a little eight dollar cologne to smell up the corks with. It's a secret process.

"We used to drink Kansas cologne with our meals, it was that harmless, and I guess we disposed of several thousand of the 'few remaining bottles.' Nobody ever left the show before the night, and they took home cologne to gladden the dull hours after our departure. Every night Mike is sued a challenge to meet and box all comers, but of course nobody ever took him up, except once. We had drifted through Kansas like a hint of sweet spring, dissolving away in magic and pseudonymous, different drinking water till we had colonized the whole state like Bill Penn back east, when one day we landed in a little place called Fowler. It seemed like I noticed a good many familiar faces in the audience that night, and I remarked about it to Mike.

"It hit him abreast of the lower maxillary."

"It looks like some of our former customers has drove over from the last village. I wonder do they like the show or have they become so addicted to the cologne that they want more?"

"Our entertainment went off badly that night, every line a scream and the house as warm as an August camp meeting. Moreover, everybody clinched with them four corner battles, so they could stay and see the fight. Me and Mike does our customary stunts; then he steps to the front of the stage and issues his challenge to spar any man present for any sum. Well, sir, I was near strangled at the sight of a farmer about six feet long who miffs himself from the bosom of the populace. From the noise of the merry villagers I sort of detected a sub'rosy feeling as though he was some local celebrity. The outline map of this bawdy was ridiculous, however. He had a kind of long lead pipe symmetry to him except at his joints, where he looked and looked like the main had been welded—just an awkward job of plumbing. Mike he's like the consumptive, thinks I, 'thin, but good'.

"He was thickened up and turned over at both ends with the turriest looking hands, and feet soldered on that I ever see, and he displayed his bashfulness by cracking his knuckles. I'd aggravated them days up into a parcel and wring them out with the rattle of nutcracker or the sound of a man splitting kindling. Then to cover his cognosed head pull each one separate and make it pop. It rounded me of breaking an armful of chair legs.

"He was open and simple to gaze at, though, and appeared to be incapable of deceit, for you could look plumb into and through him by his nasal passages. He was a double bar'l looking youth from the front, and meeting him in the gloom I'd have felt like he had me covered with a breech-loader, for his nose rard back and stared you right in the eye. Yes, that was a strange proboscis of his'n, and you felt that by flashing a dark lantern down its dim and distant vistas you could see plumb back to his secret soul. He seemed devoid of guile absolute, and I think to myself:

"Plainly this poor, becheille party is too slow in wit and movement to hit Mike with a handful of shot. It's really a pity to wallow him. But I senses a sort of thrill through the audience and can hear 'em shifting their feet. We had to split the gloves to get them over the protruberances this youth called hands.

"The Fowler Opera House ain't built for no parsifal productions, and what with the organ, the sleight of hand fixtures and cologne boxes we are plucked for room on the stage. However, I place two chairs in opposite corners and call the men out to the center to shake hands. Mike is in red tights, while the stranger has took off his shoes and is in sock feet, with his sleeves rolled up like he is out to beat a carpet.

"Gentlemen," says I in my Mexican similitudes, "you fights 'free will' and rests one. Shaka han! Time?"

"Say, this world is a place of sad surprises. There's only one thing so deceitful as appearances, and that's other appearances. Mike comes forth, chin down, shoulder up, left foot straight, all in perfect position and aggressive as a grizzly, while the home product hangs his arms loose and swings back and forth, looking at Mike's feet like it's milking time and he is afraid of being kicked. Then of a sudden he makes a motion of one glove like he is flagging a train. Mike parries and turns boss an upper cut for the farmer's kitchen that would have broke every dish in his pantry, but somehow the man happens to be out when it arrives and can't receive it in person. He shifts his feet at the right instant and is as quick as a mouse. Mike drives up with another assortment of wallops, but the Rubie isn't there to sign for 'em. The lamp-light grew maddy with Mike's blows, when all at once Mr. By Heck reached down, plucked up his right hand, plied his knuckles up in a heap on it and threw it at Mike.

"It hit him abreast of the lower maxillary and sounded like a butcher beating steak with a cleaver. When Mike struck the floor he howled, and you'd 'a' thought it was a Semblode cur dance from the floor that rose from that audience. I didn't count him out. He wouldn't have understood, and then disciples would have been an extra-charge. I steps to the front of the stage, lifting my voice. I am a good loser, and a smile is always on my face in adversity.

"Ladies and gents," says I, "Senior Curranba wins the fight. Congratulations! Then I steps, for I'll tap me on the shoulder.

"You're next, Papirky."

"Me what?" says I.

"You're next."

"No sabe," says I, shrugging my shoulders.

"Yes, ye dew. Get into them mittens, for I'm going to clean up the whole catalogue of you, while, yeller and black."

"I appealed to the Roman populace with all the chili con carne accents in my vocabulary, but their thumbs is down. A gray bearded goat in the rear of the hall hops up and cries:

"Hiram, kill the dogs. The perfume ain't no good."

"Jaw!" says I, getting sore. "I ain't a dog. I'm as white as you, you old dill pickle."

"To him up, Hiram," says a motherly lady in the front row, shaking her bonnet. "He ain't no more of a Frenchman than I be."

"Well, sir, I'm getting pretty mad by this time. And yet I don't haake none for Hiram and the pillows. No, I ain't east in the heroic mold of a Roman gladiator, and the sands of the arena sets my teeth on edge, but I'm fairly forced into them boxing gloves, and we go at it like we was killing snakes. Thinka I: 'I've got to rish this Kansas thistle off his feet. Mike was too gentle with him.' So I chop up the air around him and remove it to get more room. I swing and jab and counter and cross, but I am unlucky in hitting the places he had just left. That boy is too shifty to hit with a shotgun, which is surely a pity, and somehow I don't connect up with him none whatever. Likewise he don't hit me, just keeps a glove in my eye or brushes my hair with it till I have suspicious that he is playing with me and that I'm being put through my paces like a horse. I'm getting tired and wobbly in the legs, and in one of my rushes I run into the organ, leaving a kneecap and create certain discords on it which don't sound like the 'Maiden's Prayer.' Sweat is running into my eyes, my lungs feel like they had on tight shoes, while, like the rose that was born to bluish unseen, I have wasted all my efforts upon the desert air.

"We have fought mebbe five minutes, with never a single blow landed, when I grow desperate and make a last appeal to the audience.

"Ladies and gents—I pants, 'for heaven's sake, stop this brutality! But the old man yells:

"Nothing but rainwater, Hiram! And then Hiram commenced to go over me like a copper hoopding a bar'l. He sounded me all around to see if I had any hollow spots; then he played a xylophone solo on my short ribs, boxed the compass with short arm jabs and hit me from four directions at once, so that I fell forward toward him. He stepped back, shot one into my shak, then crossed to my butter's pantry, and at last I saw the pretty, pretty fireworks.

"Late that night me and Mike caught the local at the water tank, and when we was involved amongst the straw he says, feeling the humps on his head tender and gingery:

"Them nibstrels had just one weak point, Kink."

"What was it?" I groans.

"We ought to have kept Balm."

Look Over Your Mail.

There is a postoffice ruling which imposes a fine of $500 or a year's imprisonment on anyone who through carelessness or otherwise takes a mail not belonging to him from the post office and fails to return it immediately. This applies to newspapers, as well as letters. To say it is the postmaster's fault cuts no figure under the ruling. Better look over the mail before leaving the office.

A Word About Our "Clothes Service"

Here's what we're aiming at—to sell clothes that fit and that become the man who buys them—to sell clothes that are so much better than ordinary clothes that every customer becomes a friend—to sell clothes on a smaller margin of profit than is customary, knowing that the man who buys the suit from us will come back for many another.

In a word—to build up a reputation in the present that shall mean an ever-increasing business in the future.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

BROKE HIS ARM

Little Son of Mr. and Mrs. Benj. Brown Met With Painful Accident.

Floyd, the little 6 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Benj. Brown, met with an accident Monday, which will keep him under the physician's care for some time.

Shortly after dinner Monday he was playing on a large box in the store, when in some manner he slipped and fell from the top of the box to the floor. Upon being asked if he was hurt by his father, who was in the store, Floyd said his arm hurt him quite badly. Upon examination it was found that his arm was broken, the bone slightly protruding through the flesh, and bleeding badly.

He was at once taken to the office of Dr. Wilkinson, where a thorough examination showed that his left arm was broken just below the elbow, and also thrown out of joint at the elbow. But one bone was broken, and it is thought that the dislocation of the elbow saved the fracture of both bones. The accident is a serious one, and the little fellow will carry his arm in sling for some time.

Have about twenty nice rooms. Will rent for winter two dollars ($2.00) per week. Mrs. C. E. Nottle, Hotel Elston. Silverware to exchange for vegetables. 41tf.

ROSE WON OUT

Received News of His Appointment as Postmaster Last Week.

E. L. Rose, one of Petokey's first citizens, and a leading Democrat of Emmet county, was appointed postmaster of that city, last Thursday, to succeed C. J. Pailthorp, who resigned in August, and will probably take up his duties sometime this month.

Mr. Rose has been a resident of Petokey since 1878, when he was sixteen years of age. For 10 years he was clerk in the general store of E. L. Rose & Battars. In 1883 he opened a grocery store, which he continued until but a short time ago. He has held public offices in his city on different occasions, and was one of the substantial men of his home town. His many Charlevoix friends extend him the heartiest congratulations on his appointment.

HOME IS CLOSED

Last of Homeless Waifs Removed from Beach Home Friday.

Beulah Land Home for Boys is closed. The last of the homeless waifs were removed Friday morning. This is the end of the chapter which was started several years ago by Herman L. Swift, now confined in the state reformatory at Ionia.

"I am taking the last of the boys to the Starr commonwealth at Albion," said Miss Ruth Bacon. "Floyd Starr took two boys with him recently. I have been engaged in the work here for the last six years and will be associated with Mr. and Mrs. Starr at Albion. We are joint owners in the enterprise. We have one cottage with accommodations limited to 15 boys. We hope to build another cottage next year and enlarge our work."

What will be done with the Bentah home and farm is uncertain. Its disposal rests with the board of directors. A caretaker moved in Friday.—Boyer City Journal.

BOOTLEGGER NIPPED

Frank Pearl Arrested for Violation of Local Option Law

After a period covering several years of boot-legging, Frank Pearl, a cripple, was taken into custody by Undersheriff Novak Thursday, on a charge of violation of the local option laws.

For some time it has been known that Pearl was selling "booze," not only from his residence, but from a stand which he has conducted during the resort season near the city drinking fountain at the foot of Antrim street. On several occasions his dwelling has been searched by the officers, but he managed to conceal the liquor, if at the time had any in his possession, where the officers failed to discover it. Last spring he paid a United States internal revenue tax amounting to somewhere near $31, thus preventing arrest and imprisonment at that time. During the summer he has furnished liquor to the thirsty ones almost without discrimination.

He was taken before Justice Cooper, and placed under $200 bonds, which he was unable to furnish, and now will spend the time in the county jail until the December term of circuit court.

L. O. T. M. M. MEET

Held Second Meeting of Association in Bank Hall Tuesday

The second meeting of the Charlevoix County Association, L. O. T. M. M., was held in bank hall, Tuesday, seven hives being represented. The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock by County Commander Mary Baker of Boyne City. The forenoon was given over to business and the following officers elected and installed: Commander, Lydia Alcock of Charlevoix; lieutenant commander, Lady Berry of East Jordan; past commander, Lady Baker of Boyne City; chaplain, Lady McCarty; record keeper, Lady Todd; finance keeper, Lady Gates; sergeant, Lady Alexander; master at arms, Lady Hyldorf; sentinel, Lady McDonald; picket, Lady Thompson. Lady Francis E. Barnes, great commander, was present and addressed the convention in her usual pleasing manner. Deputy Great Commander Jennie Watson was also present.

Business concluded, a social hour was enjoyed and there they adjourned to meet in Boyne City in May.

Change of Date.

This is the second thousand received so far this year for roads built by Mr. Hammond. His third mile is completed and has been inspected, and will in due time be granted the same award as the other two miles.

GRANGE CONVENTION

Delegates Elected to Attend State Grange at Flint in December.

Delegates to the number of about 45 were in attendance at the grange convention held with Charlevoix Grange, Tuesday. The meeting was called to order at 11 o'clock and the visiting delegates were welcomed by E. B. Ward, in a short and interesting address. Brother John Knudsen then took the chair and appointed committees on credentials and good of the order, as follows: Credentials, L. D. Willson, Ney P. Smith and George Meggison. Good of the Order, A. J. Usher, F. S. Brintnall and Sister Sadie Hammond. Recess was then declared until one o'clock in the afternoon.

After a substantial dinner served by Charlevoix Grange, the meeting was again called to order to complete the regular routine business of the convention. The committee on credentials reported that eight out of the seventeen subordinate granges were represented, those having delegates present being Charlevoix, Maple Grove, Pine Lake, Marion Center, Ironton, Peninsula, Harmony and Wilson.

The election of delegates to the state grange then followed, which resulted in the following being chosen:

District No. 1—Mr. and Mrs. Axel Thomsen, Bay Shore.

District No. 2—Mr. and Mrs. John Knudsen, Ironton.

District No. 3—Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Willson, Boyne City.

Upon motion the delegates were authorized to appoint their alternates and report at the coming meeting of Pomona.

The invitation from Pine Lake Grange, to hold the next convention was accepted. Charlevoix Grange was given a vote of thanks for their

SILOS GREAT HELP TO FARMER

One of the Most Valuable Assets That a Farmer Can Have.

Over 3,000 Have Been Constructed in Northern Michigan the Past Four Years.

It is evident that the silo is one of the most valuable assets that a farmer can possess. It not only supplies his stock with food that never becomes stale, but it makes his fodder go a great deal farther and also eliminates the element of waste which is one of the greatest handicaps with which the farmer has to contend. Farmers are coming to see this important point and are building silos in greater numbers than at any time in the history of the region. During the past four years there have been 3,000 new silos constructed in Western Michigan which is a showing that the district may well feel proud of.

The value of a silo is found in the fact that plenty of fodder can be secured for stock in the sections that are not well adapted to the growing of forage plants, and in the fruit belt a small acreage of forage crops can be made to go farther than under any other system that has as yet been discovered. Western Michigan is destined to become a great dairy and stock country, and no other element will help to bring about this desirable condition as much as the building of silos upon every farm in the district.

Methods in farming change the same as in any other business and the farmer who keeps in touch with the modern ideas is the one who will profit as the years go by. A silo on every farm will mean that there will be a much greater profit in farming than there is at present through the prevention of waste and the systemizing of the business. The more silos there are the greater will be the prosperity, and when the farmer is prosperous all other lines of business and industry feel the effects of his condition.

BOYNE CITY TEAM WAS OUTCLASSED

Goes Down to Defeat by Score of 40 to 0 Saturday

Charlevoix Placed in Limelight in Race for Championship of Northern Michigan

In the opening game of the local football schedule last Saturday, Charlevoix high school defeated the Boyne City eleven by the overwhelming score of 40-0, and subsequently placed herself in the limelight in the race for the championship of Northern Michigan. At no time during the game was Boyne City dangerous, while the local aggregation circled the ends and pounded the center for repeated gains. The visitors made first down but six times.

The game opened with Boyne City defending the west goal. Boyne City received the kick and ran the ball back twenty yards. The local lads were a little unsettled and played wild for the first half of the quarter, but gradually settled down to regular form and crossed the line for a touch-down just as the whistle sounded the end of the quarter. The second quarter was more disastrous than had been anticipated and the half closed with 20 points chalked up for Charlevoix. The remainder of the game was a repetition of the first half, the local team crossing Boyne's line for three more touchdowns. Time was called with the ball in Boyne's two yard line in Charlevoix's possession.

There were no individual stars, eleven men were in every play for Charlevoix. The field management of Captain Ned Durance and the line plunging of McGeagh were responsible for much of the ground gained. Mascho playing at center behaved in a wonderful manner for the knowledge he has of the game. Toulie at half for Boyne played stellar ball.

Charlevoix meets East Jordan on the local gridiron next Saturday. The team is one of the best that has ever represented the local school. Support and enthusiasm helps to win games. Get out and assist the team by your presence Saturday.

THEATRICAL

"Brewster's Millions," will be the attraction at the Charlevoix Theatre Saturday, October 25th.

Louis Nilsen will be seen in the role of "Monty" Brewster, the young man who is committed to the task of getting rid of a million dollars hampered with a lot of conditions as to expenditures that render his squandering a difficult, albeit, an amusing task. "Brewster's Millions" is a ripping flow of delicious and wholesome comedy from curtain to curtain, throughout its four acts.

The supporting company is headed by Miss Katherine Francis as "Peggy Gray" and includes Earl Christie, James Morey, Will Lyons, Frank Hacks, Jack Murray, Willard O. Nixon, Emily Burke, Maise Iyle, Beniah Leighton, and a score of others.

MORRELL LONG DEAD

Former Resident of This County Dies from Result of Accident.

Morrell Long, aged sixty years, a long time resident of Petoskey, and who for the past seventeen years has been a cripple from the effects of a stroke of paralysis, passed away Monday evening.

Mr. Long came to northern Michigan thirty-four years ago and purchased a farm near Charlevoix. After living there for some time he moved to Petoskey, and made his home there. Following his attack of paralysis seventeen years ago, he engaged in the candy and popcorn business. He was forced to give up even this work a year or so ago because of illness, and had once made his home with his brothers, George Long, at North Bay, and Samuel Long, at Bay Shore.

A few weeks ago he went to Belaire to attend the Antrim county fair and there sustained a fall, causing internal injuries, from which resulted his death. He is survived by one son, Charles D. Long, of Detroit, and two brothers, George and Samuel Long. The funeral was held at ten o'clock Wednesday forenoon from the North Bay church.

"It's THE BEST POLISH I EVER USED"

That's What Every One Says Who Tries

Black Silk Stove Polish

DON'T imagine for a moment that all brands of stove polish are the same. Don't get the idea that to keep a nice glossy shine on your stove you must black it every few days. It's not a question of oft-repeated application. It's a question of the stove polish to use. Black Silk Stove Polish is so much better than other stove polishes that there is absolutely no comparison—it's a class all by itself. It makes a brilliant glossy shine that doesn't rub or dust off. It adheres to the iron—becomes a part of the stove. It makes old stoves look like new and lasts four times as long as any other shine. Get a can and give it a trial. Try it on your parlor stove, your cook stove, or your gas range. If you do not find it the best stove polish you ever used, your dealer is authorized to refund your money. Black Silk Stove Polish has been made by the same formula and sold under one name for 30 years. Here is what some of the ladies write us:

"I sent you for a can of Black Silk Stove Polish and found it so much better than any I had ever used that I asked my hardware dealer to order a supply. He did so, and is now selling nearly everywhere in the place your polish. I had no idea there could be such a difference in stove polishes."

"I was visiting friends and they used Black Silk Stove Polish on their stoves. It made the best shine I ever saw, and after blacking, the polish did not rub or dust off. It is way ahead of any polish I have ever used."

Ask Your Dealer for Black Silk Stove Polish and before a counterfeit brand. Check you for more than the ordinary kind, so why not have the best. Made in liquid or paste—one quality.

Black Silk Stove Polish Works, Sterling, Ill.

Use Black Silk Air-Drying Iron Enamel for cranes, leaders, registers, stove pipes, etc. Prevents rusting. Not affected by heat or cold. Produces a permanent glossy black surface. Can, with brush for applying enamel, only 25 cents. Ask your dealer. Use Black Silk Metal Polish for metal, brass, silverware or tinware. It has no equal for use on automobiles.

He is no theorist. By his contract with humanity and his experience in the business world, he knows men and things. His had been a fruitful ministry—over five thousand converts and many boys and girls inspired to larger, nobler endeavor. He met Harold Bell Wright, the famous author of "The Shepherd of the Hills," "The Calling of Dan Matthews," "The Uncrowned King" and "The Winning of Barbara Worth," when the future writer was a homeless, friendless, unknown young man of twenty-two, recognized his talent, believed in his possibilities, took him into his own home as a member of his family and for two years bore his expenses at Hiram College. Later, he read the manuscript of the author's first book, suggested the title and introduced him to his publisher.

We believe the Lyceum should be brought to our town and should be enthusiastically supported. E. V. Cooke has said: "The Lyceum as an institution is the highest embodiment of the dramatic instinct in man. It is the stage, plus. It is literature illuminated and interpreted. It is the novel condensed into an hour. It is poetry personified. It is the epic epitomized. It is classical music made popular and popular music made classic. It is oratory with a message. It is entertainment educationalized. It is education emotionalized. It is both entertainment and education vitalized."

And for these reasons we are glad we live in a community that supports the Lyceum.

COURSE IN AGRICULTURE

To be Given This Year in Boyne City Public Schools.

The decision of the board of education at Boyne City to make agriculture a part of the regular course of study in the high school faculty in looking forward to a marked success along this line. It is the plan of the supervisors to have all pupils who elected the course in agriculture to give at least twenty-five per cent of their time to the subject. The active instruction in work is being given by a special teacher who is a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural College and well prepared to accomplish what is desired. So far this year 33 students have elected the agricultural course.

SECOND ANNUAL PRODUCE EXHIBIT

To Be Held at Vought's Garage Saturday, October 18

Liberal Prizes Offered for All Kinds of Produce —Bread Baking Contest

On page six of this issue of the Courier will be found the advertisement of the Charlevoix Retail Merchants' Association, announcing the second 1913 exhibit of farmers produce. The exhibit will be held at Vought's garage, Saturday, October 18, and the auction sale will take place immediately after the award of prizes, which takes place at 2:30 o'clock.

Charlevoix and vicinity or the entire county has never received a bigger advertisement of her agricultural possibilities than is given at these exhibitions, and it is the duty of every farmer, fruit grower and truck gardener to enter the best samples produced during the season. We have heard stated at former occasions that "not an exhibit of apples at the state fair could compare in any respect to our display." Nor do we believe any one can question the assertion, for the displays have been magnificent, excelling anything ever before attempted in this section.

We are also of the opinion that though the exhibits the fame of our county is sure to spread far and wide, and will be directly responsible in bringing more people to locate permanently in this section. The committee in charge will gladly place on exhibition all produce brought in that is not mentioned in the adv. This will be placed on sale, the proceeds to go to the owners.

At this time the Argo Milling company offer cash prizes for the best loaves of bread, cookies and biscuits made from Iron Duke or White Rose flour. The prizes are liberal ones and will undoubtedly have a large number of contestants.

Interesting Letter From Mrs. Ada M. Shockley, on Her Recent Trip.

FEW AUTOMOBILES IN EAST

Saw More in Detroit Than Was Seen on the Entire Trip.

In a short time we are out of sight of land, the bugler sounds the call for dinner, and we all settle down for the three days trip ahead. Sunshine could not be brighter nor water bluer, and more rippling than on this September day. During the first afternoon we watched whales spouting the water high, and at intervals their huge black bodies could be seen lying on the water.

Late in the afternoon of the second day we entered Halifax harbor, said to be the heaviest fortified and mined harbor in the world. The citadel and ramparts were plainly visible long before landing. After landing we piloted a party to the citadel, where a guide showed us all through. It is only in the last eight years that people have been able to explore this wonderfully constructed fort.

Built in 1757 by the Duke of Kent, and used ever since by the English, one has to see and explore it to understand what such a fort is really for. We entered the enclosure where thousands of soldiers held their drills, and where the barracks for the unmarried are located on through miles of tunnels it seemed to us, hewn from and through solid rock, even to the dungeons away underground where the poor men used to be imprisoned for the most trivial offenses. We were fearful that through some means the draw bridge might fly up and we would be cut off from the world forever.

After the lapse of many years we found our way easily over the city, even to the house we lived in. These old English cities do not change like our American cities, neither do they improve with age, still one of the finest public gardens in the world is located here. It was very amusing and interesting to visit the market place of this wonderful old town, which proved to be the sidewalk of the most prominent business block. Every farmer and truckster draws his team close to the curb, unloads his wares to the walk and sits himself and her self on a box, and opens up for business. Two days in the week are given over as market days, then automobiles are excluded from these thoroughfares. Every kind of a vegetable, fruit and flower grown in that climate is in evidence. Before night the streets and sidewalks are clean and orderly again. Oh! these Canadian customs of ours are slow, very slow.

On the afternoon of the third day Prince Edward Island came into view. When God made North America he dropped his brightest jewel down at the mouth of the St. Lawrence River, where it laid for many years unnoticed. Now as we beheld it, all cried with one voice, "how beautiful." Miles upon miles of broken shore line, land sloping in every direction to the sea, covered with fields of ripening grain, native spruce groves and hedges white farm buildings everywhere and lastly the bright red soil all combined to make a picture of unsurpassed loveliness. No wonder people call it the garden of North America. Beautiful Isle of the Sea, I'm proud to call thee my birthplace.

The soil is highly productive, and all kinds of grain yield heavily, while fruits, vegetables and flowers are grown in great production. At present the raising of the silver black fox is bringing this little island before the world in its true light, and to those engaged in the industry much wealth. A pair of high grade foxes for breeding purposes sell for from $5,000 to $10,000. Yes, I know it sounds "fishy," but here is the printed figures to bear me out in the statement. One needs to see the ranches and the foxes to understand this.

At last after a week of beautiful weather and a most enjoyable trip, we reach our childhood home. Yes, there has been changes, and some of them sad ones, and while we are glad to be here, we will also be glad in a few weeks to be back again in "Michigan, My Michigan."

Sincerely Yours,
Ada M. Shockley.

STAY IN MICHIGAN

Passenger Agent of Pere Marquette Declares Western Movement is Stopped.

"Two remarkable conclusions can be drawn from the Pere Marquette railroad's passenger business which reflect conditions on Michigan farms," says General Passenger Agent W. E. Wollenfien. "The first is that this year there has been a marked decrease in the movement of homeseekers from Michigan to the Canadian west and to the southern and western states as well."

"The second is that there is a perceptible increase in inquiries for farm literature pertaining to Michigan as well as a steady influx of homeseekers coming into Michigan this season."

"From conversations with the representative of other lines I am convinced that it is now much more difficult to obtain prospective homeseekers from Michigan than it has ever been. Michigan farmers are beginning to realize that this state has not only the soil, but advantages in marketing that surpass any other state in the Union."

BREAKS LEG IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Collision Between Automobile and Bicycle on Antrim Street

Arthur Wooden, Receives Broken Leg in Mixup With Rev. Walker's Car

Friday evening a very unfortunate accident occurred at the corner of Antrim and Grant streets, in which one man received a broken leg and the other a scare that will last him a lifetime.

Rev. Quinton Walker was on his return trip from Atwood, where he had gone after his son, Quinton Jr., who teaches school at that place. It was about 5:15 when he reached Charlevoix. The car was coming down Antrim street and had reached the turn at Grant street, when Rev. Walker, who was driving the car, noticed a man coming up the street toward him on a bicycle. He sounded his horn several times, and started to make the turn onto Grant street.

Arthur Wooden, who was on his way home from his day's work as fireman on the St. Beaver, was riding his bicycle and was on the right side of the street. Evidently he heard the warning of the car, for he nearly stopped, but thinking he could cross the corner before the car could make the turn, continued his way up the street. Rev. Walker, on noticing Mr. Wooden slack his speed, turned the car to make the corner. Both started at about the same time, and seeing that a collision was sure to occur, Mr. Walker turned the car, making an effort to avoid striking Mr. Wooden. They met near the curb, Mr. Wooden's bicycle striking the front wheel of the auto, throwing him forward, the auto running full length over him. He safely passed the front wheels, but in some manner the car either rolled him or in making an effort to get from under the machine, he shifted his position so that rear wheel ran over his left leg, breaking both bones.

Mr. Wooden was at once taken home by Rev. Walker in the car that injured him, and everything was done to make him comfortable. It was a clean break, and he was not even bruised by the car going over him. Statements from both parties, also from bystanders, plainly indicate that the collision was purely accidental, and no blame could be attached to either Mr. Walker or Mr. Wooden.

MICHIGAN IS A GOOD STATE IN WHICH TO LIVE COMFORTABLY

Has More of the Comforts and Luxuries of Life Than Any State of the Union—Last One of Series of Articles by Professor R. S. Shaw.

Former articles of this series have briefly reviewed the leading industries of Michigan and have also given data in detail relative to the extent and value of the various phases of agriculture in the state. This data showed Michigan's high ranking among other states in agriculture, manufacturing, mining, lumbering and marine interests. The data also showed large values and unsurpassed variety in agricultural production. The state was shown to have a total area of 36,787, 200 acres with but 5.5 per cent included in farms and only 3.9 per cent of the total area listed as improved land. Attention was also directed to the fact that like all numbered countries the development of Michigan agriculture was slow and that later abundant and cheap production to the west formed a keen competitive factor.

Despite the fact that 5.5 per cent of our land area produced the great variety of products of such enormous lands within the class are selling at from 25 to 35 per cent below the prices procured in other states for similar lands. This portion of Michigan must consist of the best agricultural land or it could not have attained its present high comparative rating in crop production. A variety of conditions enter into the 18.5 per cent of Michigan land now included in farms. This area consists of large areas of good agricultural land withheld from the market because of the timber standing on them, 2) large areas of cut over timber land. While it is not true that all lands of these two classes are of the very best still they include enormous areas of good promise agriculturally. 3) Light sand and almost pure sand area of this class. The sands not underlaid by a clay subsoil somewhat near the surface will not likely be used agriculturally but this condition pertains to part of this one group only. 4) Undrainable areas. In the state the amount of land in this class comprises 4, 400,000 acres or about one-eighth of the total area. The possibilities of increasing the agricultural values of Michigan are about as great as the west. So far as drainage has progressed on account of individual and co-operative effort the results have been very satisfactory as the conformation and composition of these lands makes them very valuable for crop production when the excess of water is removed.

The position of Michigan is unique agriculturally because of the great variety of soils and unusual surroundings through close proximity to large bodies of water and somewhat wide range of climatic conditions due to geographical location.

As a stimulus to agriculture the market situation is a very favorable one, the state being located between and within access of the largest markets of both east and west. The home market itself is no insignificant factor. The people of one industry alone, namely agriculture, have an opportunity to provide for those of four other great industries. 1000 the manufacturing industry of Michigan alone gave employment to 251,071 persons.

Transportation facilities have developed sufficiently to become a great stimulus to agricultural development. In 1900 Michigan had 9,070 miles of railroad, standing sixth among all other states in total amount of trackage.

Michigan is a good state in which to live comfortably. There may be newer countries in which money might be made more rapidly for a time, but when it comes to the matter of comfortable living the wide range of natural resources, industries and possibilities for greatly varied production make it possible for the farmer in Michigan to provide as many, if not more of the comforts and luxuries of life than any state in the Union. By way of farmers organizations established for both business and social purposes, no other state is so well (Continued on page 3.)

OPENING NUMBER OCTOBER 17TH

Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course at Opera House

International Operatic Company Well Spoken of by Press—Curtain at 8:00

The opening number of the Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course will be the International Operatic company, Friday evening, October 17. One of the distinct advantages gained by our patrons in engaging a company of this kind in the great variety of work they are able to offer, and the wide experience they have had in concert and operatic work.

Their program will include vocal solos, duets, quartets, piano solos, and an operatic production in costume. These thoroughly trained artists are continued in a rich, beautiful manner for their character songs and the selections from grand opera and popular operas, at the same time have shown good taste in recognizing the limitations of lyricism requirements.

The following from the Two Rivers, Wisconsin, Chronicle, shows that the company made a hit in that city:

"We do not possess the musical knowledge to make comment on the work of the artists who presented this program. Tekla Faur is a singer with a remarkably sweet voice and a charming personality; Burt McKinnis captivated his audience in his singing of 'The Brigand' by Spencer and was called back repeatedly; Miss Heldenreich did her part of the program in a faultless manner and her acting the last act from 'Martha' was delightful. Mr. Mathisen has a delightful tenor voice which was greatly appreciated by all and while we could not understand his Norwegian songs they sounded good to us. Last, but by no means least, the pianist, Mr. Michling, scored a triumph not only in his work with quartette but in his delightful solos. If the other members of the lecture course are as good as the first every person in the city should support the movement. They are entertainments of a class seldom if ever seen outside the larger cities and we have them at our door."

Reserved seat sale starts Wednesday, October 15, at the Central Drug Store. Curtain at 8:00 o'clock.

EMMET POULTRY SHOW

Will Be Held at Petoskey December 30-31 and January 1-2

Arrangements are being made by the Emmet County Poultry association for their annual show, which will be held at Petoskey on December 30-31 and January 1-2. Charlevoix will have no poultry show this year, but will join with Petoskey, thus making an effort to make this the largest poultry exhibition held north of Grand Rapids. Last year over 800 birds were exhibited, and this year the entries are expected to go beyond this.

At a recent meeting E. J. Hiller was named to act on the executive committee, and R. C. North as third vice president. Charlevoix poultry fanciers will make an effort to hold the reputation the city has already attained as producers of fine exhibition birds, and will no doubt bring home a goodly number of prizes.

HIGHWAY AWARDS

No More Will Be Paid by the State Until After January First.

Auditor General Fuller has notified the state highway department that the state is not in a position to pay any more state highway awards until next January, when state taxes will be paid in and the general fund of the state treasury will be reimbursed. So far this year $153,000 has been paid for state award roads and $11,000 from the trunk line highway fund. The legislature appropriated $450,000 last session for the highway fund, to be used in paying state awards. Auditor Fuller has received replies from 12 state institutions in answer to his letters, suggesting that they do not draw on their funds any more than is absolutely necessary, and all the replies are favorable. Charlevoix county was fortunate in getting her last $2,000 in awards just before the order was issued.

Died From Tuberculosis

Schuyler C. Samby, age twenty-seven years, died Sunday night at his home at Bay Shore, after a long illness from tuberculosis. He is survived by a widow and his parents. DEATH COMES TO MRS. LAMOREAUX

Had Been Ill For Many Months With Pernicious Anemia

Had Lived in Charlevoix for a Number of Years
---Funeral Monday

Shortly after 10:30 Friday night, death came to Mrs. Charles Lamoreaux at her home, 708 Bridge street. The immediate cause of her death was pernicious anemia.

Mrs. Lamoreaux had been ill the past 14 months, but at times gained to such an extent that it was hoped she would live for some time. About Christmas she was again taken quite suddenly and gradually faded until death claimed her.

Devotee Crittendon was born at Ypsilanti, Michigan, December 27, 1850. She was married to Charles Lamoreaux at Romulus, March 18, 1873. To their union were born two daughters, Mrs. E. A. Ruegger of Boyne City, and Miss Edith, who lived at the home of her mother. She moved to Charlevoix about thirty-three years ago, and has since made her home in this city.

Mrs. Lamoreaux united with the Presbyterian church many years ago. She was a consistent Christian, a loving mother, and will be missed by a large circle of sorrowing friends to whom she had endeared herself by her loving ways.

The funeral was held from the home Monday, at 2:30, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating. Burial at Brookside cemetery. Many loving remembrances of beautiful flowers were in evidence, fitting emblems of the gentle spirit called to the one who gave it.

BE OUR GUESTS

The Courier ever alert to be of service to its subscribers and locality extends an invitation to all to become our guests Saturday, October 18. Of course on this day you will attend the produce exhibition given by the Charlevoix Retail Merchants' association of Charlevoix.

To rural subscribers we make this offer: All who come to the Courier office and pay a year's advance subscription, whether a new or old subscriber, we will give a ticket good for a dinner or supper at any of the restaurants in the city.

Those who pay up all arrears of one year or more, will also be given a ticket, and two tickets will be given for the payment of arrears and one year in advance. Come in and be our guests on this day.

CITIZENS ARE OF PROGRESSIVE TYPE

Indications of Wide-Awake, Progressive Farming to be Seen Everywhere.

SCHOOL HOUSES NEGLECTED

Not in Touch With General Make-Up of the Community.

Buildings Badly Lighted and Ventilated—Some Observations of the Commissioner of Schools.

As one travels in the various communities of Charlevoix county from year to year he is impressed with the fact that as a rule the citizens of the county are of the progressive type.

New silos, new buildings, new machinery, young orchards and many other indications of wide-awake, progressive farming are to be seen on each successive visit to any particular community in the county.

It is a lamentable fact that in many of the seemingly most progressive portions of this great country and we of this county are no worse than in other counties of the state or in other states of the union our educational facilities do not keep pace with other things in the march of progress.

We can see in many communities that are studded with big, sanitary horse and cattle barns, warm and well ventilated, supplied with silos, cement floors, litter carriers and many other modern conveniences, poultry houses that are the pride of the farmer's heart, and other modern conveniences, that are and should be the pride of any community, a school house that is by no means in keeping with the general make-up of the community.

That same school house will be so lighted that the child will be forced to face a strong light which constantly annoys him; so seated that a number of children will be forced to sit all day with their feet swinging; so ventilated that the children will either be forced to sit in a draft or breathe the same air over and over, so heated that part of them will be roasting while others will be freezing.

In the same community in which you find the newest and most up-to-date tools, the most modern conveniences, the latest modes of travel, etc., you will find a school teacher who is forced to use a text book that is entirely out of date, a map that gives Cuba and the Philippine Islands as a part of the Spanish domain, a history that does not mention either Roosevelt or Taft and a wooden blackboard that is shiny and can be clearly seen from just a certain angle of the room.

But why this crotch? In spite of conditions such as have been described our schools are doing a bigger and better work than they have ever done before.

In these same school houses will be found teachers who have had special training for their work, and who are training the young people of the county in many things which are new to the parents of the community.

What is there to the making of a paper chain or a paper toy or working the picture of some animal on a piece of card board?

It is true that the intrinsic value of the thing made may be small, but the habits of industry that are being taught, the pride that is developed in being able to do something well will more than repay the time and trouble taken in the development at this time of the development of children who are taught to employ (Continued on page 4.)

Miss Hines received a letter from Merle Brechsen, a member of the class of '13 on Wednesday of last week. She is teaching between Clarion and Petoskey and has seven students. On Sunday she attends the Episkop church where many other teachers attend. She met Marguerite Munger, a member of the class of '12. We all enjoyed hearing from her.

When the normal opened this year the students were pleased to see two new pictures in the room. One picture is the "Divine Shepherd," by the Spanish painter, Murillo. This painting shows the beautiful Christ child with his staff and lamb. The other picture is the "Windmill," painted by the Dutch painter Ruysdall. They were presented to the normal by the classes of '12 and '13.

C. H. S. NOTES.

(Editors: Misses Marena Goss, Gladys Pulcifer, and Berice Pulcifer)

One month has gone, but another started which can undergo a great change.

Mr. Ewing: How would the ocean appear if all the water suddenly evaporated?

Miss K.: Rather dry.

Teacher: "Sometimes a fool will ask a question which a wise cannot answer." Freshie: "That is the reason we can't pass on exams."

The faculty is very enthusiastic.

CERTAIN RESULTS

Many a Charlevoix Citizens Knows How Sure They Are.

Nothing uncertain about the work of Doan's Kidney Pills in Charlevoix. There is plenty of positive proof of this in the testimony of citizens. Such evidence should convince the most skeptical doubter. Read the following statement: L. B. Lancaster, 203 May street, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have proven a valuable remedy to me. I suffered for seven years from my kidneys. My back ached at night and when I arose in the morning I was stiff and lame. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and my rest was disturbed. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got them from the Ivy Drug Store. They have done me a world of good. I can rest better at night, my back is stronger and my aches and pains are gone. I am pleased to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me."

about the foot ball games and are showing this by attending outside games to find how our boys could improve.

High school visitors so far have been the Misses Mildred Eckinger, Lottie Cohen, Anna Kaufman, Marjorie Weaver, Lula and Christine Krulik and Mrs. Leo Powers.

During the first week of school, the juniors had a class-meeting, electing Helen Parsons president, Ruth Mitchell vice-president and Herbert Taggart secretary-treasurer.

There are three new teachers this year, Miss Hirst, language; Mr. Ewing, history; and Mr. Fletcher, science; and with our former teachers we are glad to welcome them to our school.

The first number of the high school lecture course will be given Friday evening, of this week, when the International Operatic Company will be here. Season tickets are $1.00 for students, and $1.50 for adults.

The senior class this year is the largest one for some years, having at present 30 members. Dean C. Scroggie was elected president of the class, Ollie Lyngklop vice-president, and Bessie Allen secretary-treasurer.

The chemical laboratory has been moved down stairs, which is a good improvement. The room is larger and lighter than the laboratory was last year, which is now a classroom. Regular laboratory work will begin Wednesday.

Miss Lombard entertained about fourteen of the faculty last Friday evening, by taking them for a hay-rack ride out in the country to a chicken-pie supper. The ride proved to be a great success and although the weather was rather disagreeable, the latter part of the evening a good time is reported.

The high school has opened with an enrollment of 135, mostly freshmen as usual. Several students from Bay Shore entered, Grace, Mabel and Marion Worth. Orla Hooper, Bessie Tibbott, Ethel and Fred Zipp, Fred Langley and Dean Scroggie also three seniors from the Catholic school, Ellen Graham, Caroline Ross and Stanley Finnegan.

C. H. S. has entered what promises to be a successful foot ball season. The team is made up of veterans mostly, and the new material is showing fine form. The coaching is being done by Mr. Ewing and Mr. Fletcher. The first game was played with Central Lake September 26, being played at Central Lake, and Charlevoix won 34 to 0. This cheered the team and they were ready for Boyne City on the 4th of October. Boyne City came over confident of their success, but were slaughtered 40 to 0 October 10th. After a very enthusiastic mass-meeting, a game between East Jordan and Charlevoix was played on the home grounds, the score being 35-0 in favor of Charlevoix. Next Saturday, Charlevoix will play in Petoskey. Already we have a total score of 108 to 0 in favor of C. H. S. and are hoping to gain the championship of Northern Michigan.

If we didn't have an eye to the future, and if we didn't care what you or anybody else was going to think of us, we could sell engines and other machines for much less money, but we could not put I H C quality into them. The kinks would start coming right away, and soon there would be no market for I H C engines.

I H C engines stand for everything that is opposed to such a policy. The I H C way is to build always for the present and a good will of the American farmer, and to that end it has been successfully working for many years. The dealer who sells you an I H C engine expects on its merits to do business with you again. The purchaser of an buys security and safety with it. He banks on the many years of square dealing and the reputation back of all I H C machines. He knows it is the best engine bargain because it gives him efficient service in all kinds of farm work—pumping, sawing wood, spraying, running repair shop, grindstone, cream separator, etc. He knows that I H C responsibility for it lasts as long as the engine is in service on his farm.

I H C oil and gas engines operate on gas, gasoline, naphtha, kerosene, distillate, and alcohol. Sizes range from 1 to 50-horse power. They are built vertical, horizontal, portable, stationary, skidded, air-cooled and water-cooled. I H C oil tractors range in size from 6-12 to 30-60-horse power, for plowing, threshing, etc.

Look over an I H C engine at the local dealer's. Learn from him what it will do for you, or write for catalogues to

Woman Suffrage

Items of Human Interest.

Some of the good results of equal suffrage in California are as follows: Bill for a state training school for delinquent girls. Raising the age of consent to eighteen years.
Joint guardianship of children.
Changing polling places from livery barns and barber shops to school houses, halls, and tents.

Over one and a-half Illinois women will vote for president at the next election. Governor Dunne said when he signed the bill enfranchising the women of Illinois: "There has been no event since the Civil War of such far-reaching national significance as the passage of the Woman's Suffrage Bill in this state."

The official organ of the Wisconsin Retail Liquor Dealers' Association declares that all liquor interests should unite in combating woman suffrage because the ballot for women means prohibition. It says: "A campaign against woman suffrage and other dangers of the brewing and affiliated interests that threaten the trade must be waged without ceasing."

California women when asked what were the chief sources of opposition to granting them the ballot said: "Liquor, vice and ultra-conservative men and women are opposed. Protected women and maidenly self-helpers, their support from the measure. Women's clubs generally throughout the country did splendid educational work and furnished leaders for suffrage."

The newly enfranchised women of Illinois are proving themselves indeed a foe to the saloon and a friend to the home. In every election held since the last of June when the bill was signed the results have shown the strong interest of women in good government. Saloons have been voted out in some towns, bond issues for public improvements carried in others, and better city officials elected in still others. "A new broom sweeps clean," says the Springfield Republican, "and anyway the broom is a woman's natural implement in house-keeping."

tion carried.

Moved by Ald. Powers and seconded by Ald. Barney that the plans for standard curb and gutter and standard drainage inlet submitted by the City Engineer and approved by the Board of Public Works be adopted. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. See and seconded by Ald. Shapton that $500.00 of the amount appropriated for highway purposes be used in resurfacing
Belvedere Ave. with crushed stone.
Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Priest, See, Barney, Cartier,
Powers and Shapton. Nays, none.
The Street committee reported that in the arrangement with the County Road Commissioner in regard to the steam roller, that the county was to pay $100 per day for its use.

Moved by Ald. Powers and seconded by Ald. Cartier that Mayor and Clerk be authorized to execute the contract with Peter Benson for the laying of a 4 inch water main in the grounds of the Charlevoix Summer Home Association. Motion carried.

There being no further business
the council adjourned.

THEATRICAL

"Brewster's Millions" the most successful farce comedy of recent years, will be the attraction at Charlevoix theatre, October 23, 1913.
Louis Nilsen will be seen as "Monty" Brewster, which he plays so well that one forgets the absurdity of the thing and sympathize with the young millionaire in his desperate effort to get rid of one million within a year in order to be eligible for a second inheritance of seven times that amount. The other characters are in practically the same capable hands identified with the play during its run of ninety-eight consecutive weeks. Katharine Francis a charming and winsome actress, will be seen as "Peggy" Gray. The yacht scene and the storm at sea is the masterpiece of Frederic Thompson's stagecraft.
"Brewster's Millions" is a play one can see several times and still chuckle.

Local theatre goes will be given an opportunity very soon to prove or disprove that Charlevoix is a possible stopping place for theatrical offerings of the highest class —that an attraction of known merit will or will not be as well patronized here as in other cities of this size or slightly larger. Manager Luskot has just closed a conditional contract for the presentation of the big romantic religious drama,
"The Light Eternal," at the Charlevoix theatre on Tuesday, October 28
—the condition being that a sufficient advance sale of seats can be secured to warrant him in guaranting the company management profitable patronage. A thorough personal canvass of the local field will be made within a few days, and upon the result will depend the answer.

bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties, 52,331 in the central counties and 29,028 in the northern counties and Upper Penninsula

The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the two months, August-September is 1,700,000. Forty-eight mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in September.

The per cent of acreage sown this fall as compared with last year is in the state, 89 in the southern counties, 98 in the central counties, 96 in the northern counties and 92
in the Upper Peninsula. The average date of sowing wheat in the state is September 19th, in the southern counties the 22nd, in the central counties the 17th and in the northern counties and Upper Peninsula the 11th.

Rye—The per cent of acreage sown this fall as compared with last year is 94 in the state, 89 in the southern counties, 92 in the central counties and 90 in the northern counties and Upper Peninsula.

Barley—The estimated average yield per acre in the state is 25, in the southern counties 22, in the central counties 26, in the northern counties 27 and in the Upper Peninsula 32 bushels.

Oats—The estimated average yield per acre in the state is 33, in the southern counties 25, in the central and northern counties 35 and in the Upper Peninsula 17 bushels.

Corn—The estimated average yield in the state is 32, in the southern counties 30, in the central counties 35, in the northern counties 31 and in the Upper Peninsula 38 bushels per acre.

Potatoes—The estimated average yield in the state is 87, in the southern counties 89, in the central counties 98 in the northern counties 95 and in the Upper Peninsula 163 bushels per acre.

Beans—The estimated average yield in the state is 12, in the southern counties 11, in the central counties 11, in the northern counties 13 and in the Upper Peninsula 20 bushels per acre.

Sugar beets—The estimated average yield in the state and central counties is 10, in the southern counties 9, in the northern counties 11 and in the Upper Peninsula 10 tons per acre.

Buckwheat—The estimated average yield in the state and northern counties is 15, in the southern counties 13, in the central counties 14 and in the Upper Peninsula 27 bushels
per acre.

Pleasantly Surprised.

and Mrs. Bert Jones second. Lunch was served by Mesdames J. C. Shaw, R. C. Korth and A. B. Thompson, and the evening proved a very enjoyable one. Mrs. Thompson was presented a fine photograph of her by the visiting neighbors, as well as one from her wife.

their time in doing something well will not be inclined to loaf later in life. Many people are unable to see the value of this and many other lines of work now being introduced in the public schools, but that is not surprising for scores of people said that Fulton's boat would not go, but it did. It is to be hoped that we may get our schools under the control of boards who can see the same necessity for modern improve-in other lines of work.

 Rogue River.

Below we publish two clippings from Rogue River, Oregon, papers, which indicate that Mr. and Mrs. F.
 N. Chapel, who left Charlevoix about two years ago, are making good as fruit and grain producers, and have this year exhibited at their home town some of the prize winning varieties:

"An assortment of fruit such as would astonish an easterner was sent to the Courier office last week by Mr. and Mrs. Chapel of the Charlevoix ranch. There was a choice sample of peaches, pears, plums, and strawberries."

"Franklin Chapel sowed some Red Fife Canadian No. 1 wheat which he got at the Alaska Yukon Pacific Exposition and last fall he carefully harvested his crop and this spring he sowed it all and the crop of acclimated wheat was very good. He had a plate full at the Festival and received a 50 cent prize and the blue ribbon. He also took the blue ribbon on tomatoes."

One woman said: "I would have bought before if I had known the price was so low." Have you seen

First Early Frost

The first killing frost of the early fall came Sunday night, or rather Monday morning, leaving a coat of white over the ground in sections where the wind did not strike.
 North of the city back of Mr.
 McSamba, the frost was heavy,
 as it was also in low spots in other sections. In the valley there was practically no frost at all. Reports from over the entire county indicate that in the valleys there was a killing frost, but on higher ground no damage was done.

They are the housewives delight and the low price will surprise you.

Newly-weds Leave For Petoskey Where Wedding
 Breakfast is Served

Miss Winifred P. Weaver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Weaver, and T. George Finucan, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Finucan, were quietly married in this city Tuesday morning. The ceremony was solemnized at the residence of Mr.
 Garton at 5:30 o'clock a. m. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Margery, while William Finucan Jr., brother of the groom, acted as best man.

Following the ceremony the happy young couple drove to Petoskey, where a wedding breakfast was served at the Cushman House.
 They later took the morning train on their honeymoon trip, and will visit Grand Rapids, Detroit, also take in the U. of M. M. A. C. foot ball game at Ann Arbor Saturday, and visit other points of interest in southern Michigan.

The bride has a large circle of friends and is known to everyone in this section, having lived in this city since she was born.

The groom is well known here
 and has a large circle of friends.
 Both Mr. and Mrs. Finucan are graduates of the Charlevoix high school, and although it was known they were to be married, the exact date was made known to only immediate members of the family.

They have the best wishes of their host of friends for a happy future.

A reception to their friends will be held October 24, at the home of the bride's parents, 22 May street.

This part of Michigan has this year got the best corn crop ever ripened here, together with the largest acreage. In anticipation of just this condition the Argo Milling Co. has made arrangements to help in handling it, having put in machinery for shelling the corn, for grinding corn, shelled, or "cuh and all," or, if you have more than you want to feed or are short of crib room they will give highest price for it.—East Jordan Enterprise.

It seems that a twenty-five cent piece is about the most unlucky article a person can carry. On the American quarter there are thirteen stars, thirteen letters on the scroll held in the eagle's beak, thirteen marginal feathers in each wing, thirteen tail feathers, thirteen parallel lines on the shield, thirteen horizontal bars, thirteen arrow heads, and thirteen letters in the words, "quarter dollar." These twenty-five cent pieces unlucky and curse-laden as they are, gratefully received at this office.

Notes made at Courier Office

MICHIGAN IS A GOOD STATE TO LIVE IN COMFORTABLY

equipped. The school system of Michigan ranks among the best in the country and the same thing is true of both religious and social opportunities. Michigan has no race problem for of her 2,500,000 farm owners, 117,000 are native white, 58, 224 foreign born white, 300 are Indians and 600 negroes. The second group comprising generations recently extracted from emigrants from Northern Europe is given a good type of citizen who generally speaking are religious, honest and industrious.

The conditions which have developed in Michigan make it come what more difficult to stimulate agricultural development than in a purely agricultural state because of our great diversity of industries and production in agriculture. Our citizens are not all interested in the same things but in many things, thus state wide campaigns for agricultural betterment do not attract as in the case of a state where every square yard is capable of supporting a bill of corn. During the past few years a world wide movement has developed tending to stimulate agricultural production. It is a theme which has found a place in the messages and addresses of the country's presidents and of the state's governors as well. It has been subject to discussion by the greatest railroad magnates, financiers and statesmen. The United States government has supplemented state aid for agriculture with generous appropriation and private organizations controlling much wealth have given material aid and assistance. The agricultural journals are no longer alone in their efforts, for agriculture has become a favored subject with the country town weekly newspaper, the city daily, the metropolitan press and the most notable weekly and monthly periodicals of the country. In view of the great stimulus favoring the improvement and extension of agriculture, coupled with the fact that people have long been accustomed to look to the West which is now approaching its limitation it seems desirable for us to study the great possibilities of the home state of Michigan and make them known to the rest of the world.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

To be held in Congregational Church October 28-29.

The district convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at the Congregational church in Charlevoix, October 28-29.

On Tuesday evening, October 28, the local entertainers will bring delegates with a banquet, in the dining room of the church. Every one is invited to attend the convention Wednesday morning, afternoon and evening. A matron's contest, and a debate by the county normal class will be held.

We feel confident in saying that every session will be of great interest. Turn out, see, hear and enjoy for yourselves. We hope to be able to publish the entire program next week.

Gun For Sale.

Good 35-50 calibre Winchester rifle for sale cheap. Inquire at office—Adv. 3314

BE CAREFUL IN WOODS

Hunters Should Use Every Precaution Look Twice Before You Fire.

Every year the number of sportsmen increases and the game and hunting area decreases. Human habitations spread out further into the woods, and more powerful arms are used. Hence the number of accidents during the hunting season constantly increases.

Formerly these mischances happened mostly when a gun was accidentally discharged and hit the huntsman or his immediate companions. Now our huntsman is constantly mistaking the motions of some concealed man for game, and long distance shots find their way to only living homes.

During the autumnal shooting season, the woods are full of novices at the sport, to whom every noise in the distant bushes means game. They have acquired none of the habits of observation by which the trained woodsman watches for wild life. These beginners at woodcraft should have a care, or this increase of accidents will lead to strict laws against shooting by night men.

Keeps Your Stove "Always Ready for Company"

A bright, clean, glossy stove is the joy and pride of every housekeeper. But it is hard to keep a stove nice and shiny—unless Black Silk Stove Polish is used.

Here is the reason: Black Silk Stove Polish sticks right to the iron. It doesn't rub off or dust off. Its shine lasts four times longer than the shine of any other polish. You only need to polish one-fourth as often, yet your stove will be cleaner, brighter and better looking than it has been since you first bought it. Use on your parlor stove, kitchen stove or gas stove. Get a can from your hardware or stove dealer. If you do not find it better than any other stove polish you have ever used before, your dealer is authorized to refund your money. But we feel sure you will agree with the thousands of other appreciative women who are now using Black Silk Stove Polish and who say it is the "best stove polish ever made."

LIQUID OR PASTE ONE QUALITY

Be sure to get the genuine. Black Silk Stove Polish costs you no more than the ordinary kind. Keep your grates, registers, fenders and stove pipes bright and free from rusting by using BLACK SILK AIR-DRYING ENAMEL. Brush free with each can of enamel only. Use BLACK SILK METAL POLISH for silver, brass, copper, tinware or brass. It works quickly, easily, and leaves a brilliant surface. It has no equal for use on automobiles.

Grange Column

Ironton Grange.

Ironton grange No. 707 met in regular session Friday evening October 7. As the Master was absent the meeting was called to order by the Worthy Overseer. The delegates from the county convention reported that Brother John Knudsen and wife were elected as delegates to state grange to represent this district. All the committees from plowing match turned in good reports. The advisory election for state executive committee members was held with good results.

Lecture's hour consisted of songs, stories, readings and recitations. Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks. There were 20 members present, but as the busy season is now over, large numbers of members are expected to turn out later. Visitors are always welcome.

DEATH ENDS HIS SUFFERING

Capt. Henry C. Plum Was Well and Favorably Known Here

Falls to Survive from Shock of Operation—Funeral Saturday

Capt. Henry C. Plum was born at St. Joseph, Michigan, December 10, 1843. He moved from that place to Petoskey 27 years ago. In the fall of 1902 he removed from Petoskey to Charlevoix where he has since resided.

He was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Nelson, at St. Joseph, Michigan, in 1873. Four children were born to them, all of whom are living.

Capt. Plum had not been in good health since the latter part of August. He was out of the house and down town on Thursday prior to his death. For the last 15 years he had been a constant sufferer from Bright's disease, and upon advice of his physicians, was operated upon Saturday, as a last resort for relief from his sufferings.

He failed to recover from the shock and passed away Sunday morning. He leaves to mourn his wife, three daughters, Mrs. Sandberg of Portland, Oregon, Mrs. Ora Bigge of St. James, Mrs. Fred Marsh of Charlevoix, and one son, Charlie Plum, also of this city. Also three sisters who reside in various places. He was a member of the G. A. R., having served four years during the civil war, enlisting at the age of 18. When he was 25 years of age he became a sailor, and has followed the lakes ever since. He received his papers as captain 35 years ago.

Everybody always spoke a good word for Capt. Plum, and his death is mourned by a host of friends. He was not a forward man but earned a deserving popularity through a naturally winning personality. He neither sought trouble nor gave any man occasion to question the uprightness of his character and the sincerity of his motives.

The funeral services will be held from the house Saturday, October 18, Rev. Quinton Walker in charge.

Friday night's storm wrought havoc at the Little Traverse Bay resorts. The Northern Michigan Transportation Co.'s warehouse at Harbor Springs, situated on the end of the big pier, was literally hurled into the lake, and Agent James Roe leaped from the building barely in time to escape. Another building destroyed at the harbor was the Grand Rapids & Indiana suburban station.

A WORD TO MOTHERS

ATHENA UNDERWEAR

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mother appreciate the difficulty of securing proper-fitting garments for their children.

Most underwear makers seem to forget that children are proportioned altogether differently from adults. Children from two to six years old are usually round, chubby, broad in proportion to their height, while those from six to sixteen are inclined to be slender.

The Athena scheme of sizes takes these important facts into consideration.

The Athena garments for children are sized by ages—not by numbers; so it is easy to obtain a correct fit for your child by asking for "Athena garment age two" for a two-year-old child, "age ten" for a ten-year-old, and so on. Union suits and separate garments fit with equal comfort. In many weights and qualities.

The sixty first annual meeting of the Michigan Teachers' association will be held in the city of Ann Arbor on October 30, 31 and November 1.

The officers of the association are aiming to make this the best meeting in the history of the association and a study of the program of the meeting will convince any teacher that they are going to be successful in their efforts.

The citizens of Ann Arbor will offer a complimentary concert to the teachers of the state, which will be a rare treat. Teachers will have an opportunity to witness one of the big university foot ball games.

The instructors are educators of national fame and no teacher who listens to the various addresses can help but go back to her work with a clearer conception of her duty and better prepared to perform that duty.

This is a state institute and teachers are authorized to close their schools and attend.

I know that all rural teachers who can possibly do so will be well repaid if they will attend this great meeting.

CHANGES IN NEW PRIMARY LAW

Voters Should Read Law and Become Acquainted With New Provisions.

BALLOTS DIFFER IN FORM

Each Party to Occupy a Column of Its Own.

Primaries Must Be Called to Select Candidates for Election to Fill Vacancies—Other Changes That Have Been Made.

In the last session of the legislature amendments were made to the general primary election law, making quite a little difference in the working of the same. In order to become familiar with the new provisions of this enactment every voter should read over all the sections and consider them as fitting his individual case. The entire law is too long for publication in The Courier, but here are a few of the provisions that will be found in a complete perusal of the same:

As before, the primary elections are to be conducted along the lines of the general elections, and instead of having to register in advance of the election or lose your vote in the primaries, one can register and vote on primary day by appearing before the election board and making affidavit similar to that of the regular registration.

These primary elections are to be held on the last Tuesday in August preceding the election to select candidates for governor, lieutenant governor and United States senator, and on the first Wednesday in March for candidates to be voted for in the spring elections. The law also provides that primaries are to be called to select candidates for elections to fill vacancies. In all these primaries the ballots are to be prepared so voters may insert names other than those who filed petitions for the same. There is also a provision against peddling slips of papers or soliciting for or against candidates within 100 feet of the polls. Also the law gives opportunity to persons who may desire to become candidates after the expiration of the time in which they are supposed to file their petitions. Such names are to be received and declared by the election commissioners as nominees for the respective offices and the sheriff notified of the same, that the names of the applicants shall be placed on the ticket. Delegates to the county convention are to be selected in a convention.

There is a set rule for the formation of the official ballots for the primary election, differing somewhat from the former style. In one respect it is changed so as to read from the top downward, each party occupying a column of its own, rather than from left to right for each office as before the change. There shall be printed at the top and to the right of the ballot in large type the words "Official Primary Election Ballot." Underneath is to be printed the date of the election at which the ballot is to be used, followed, when necessary, by the designation of the political subdivision, county, city, district or ward. At the top and to the left of the ballot shall be printed the instructions to voters. Then shall follow names of the political parties, each at the head of a separate column, and directly under such name a circle one-half inch in diameter. The order of offices on the ballot shall be the same, as far as may be, as is required by law in the making up of the ballot for a general election. The title of the office shall be immediately above the name of the candidates for such office, and under such title the words "Vote for," followed by the word, "one," "two" or a word designating the number of candidates under that head to be voted for. To secure the printing of a name on the official ballot the voter must file a petition bearing the names of not less than two per cent nor more than four per cent of the voters, but for county officers the percentage is to be not less than one per cent, nor more than four per cent, and any qualified voter may sign these petitions. However, there is a provision for candidates in the large cities where a candidate is to pay the clerk a sum equal to one-half of one per cent of the salary fees of the office he seeks, which qualifies him for a place on the official ballot. Candidates for the offices of governor, lieutenant governor and United States senator must file a petition signed by at least 3,000 registered voters, and candidate of any new party must file a petition signed by at least 100. It is also unlawful for any man to sign the petitions of more than one candidate for the same office.

All of these and other provisions are included in the amendments, together with penalties for the violation of same, there being many changes from the former law on this primary election matter. The new law should be carefully considered by every voter who has an opportunity to get hold of the same.

The following dates are to be remembered for the various requirements of the new primary election law:

March 13—Last day for filing petitions for city office.

March 21—City primary registration.

March 23—City primary election. If no more than two candidate's petitions are filed for any city office, there need be no city primary registration or election.

April 1—Registration day.

April 6—Election day.

August 15—General fall primaries.

Within 10 days from primaries, the county candidates elect chairman and secretary of county committees.

Within 15 days from primary are held the county conventions.

Within 10 days from primary must be held the state conventions.

October 21—Fall registration day.

November 3—Fall election.

PAINTERS FALL TWENTY FEET

Rung of Ladder Breaks While Men Are at Work

W. H. Cooper and Elmer Donaldson Severely Injured in Fall to Cement Walk

The second chapter of a series of serious accidents from the breaking of ladders which has occurred in Charlevoix this summer took place in front of the Carpenter block on Bridge street Monday morning, about 11 o'clock.

W. H. Cooper and Elmer Donaldson were engaged in painting the front of the stores, and while at work about twenty feet from the ground a rung of the ladder broke, letting the plank upon which they stood to fall, allowing both men to plunge down to the cement sidewalk below.

Mr. Donaldson in falling pitched toward the front of the building and caught upon a cornice with his left hand, partially stopping his sudden descent, but in doing so, badly sprained his wrist, besides a severe shaking up from his contact with the cement walk.

Mr. Cooper fell the entire distance from where he stood working on the plank at the top of the ladders, and struck the walk with the full force of the fall. He was immediately picked up and taken into Fagan's store, where it was found he had a compound fracture of his left arm at the wrist, a deep cut over an inch long in his scalp, and a badly wrenched back. The arm was set by Dr. Armstrong and he was taken to his home on Mason street, where a further examination revealed that he was suffering from internal injuries of a serious nature.

It was a miraculous escape from death in both instances. While Mr. Donaldson will be laid up but a short time with his sprained wrist, it is doubtful if Mr. Cooper will be able to resume work for a long time.

Won High Standing

While at Grand Rapids last week Mason Rose took the civil service examination of mailing clerks, which was required to be taken this fall by all clerks in the state.

Advice state that he passed with a standing of 97½ per cent. He was required to memorize all postoffices in the state, know their locations, and on what railroad they were situated.

TWO EXCELLENT PLAYS BOOKED

To Appear at Charlevoix Theatre Within the Next Ten Days.

Future Attempts to Have High Class Attractions Depend on Attendance.

Charlevoix theatre goes over two exceptionally good treats in store for them during the next few days. Brewster's Millions which appears here Saturday night needs no introduction to the public, as it is safe to say that the majority of people in this city have read the book from which this play is adapted. The play is better than the book. It is one continuous laugh from rise of, to drop of the curtain.

The Light Kernal appearing here on Tuesday, October 28, Manager Loskot positively guarantees to be the greatest, spectacular dramatic production ever seen in this city. Every bit of scenery, properties, lighting effects which are gorgeous and all other stage settings are carry to the company. The only way in which Manager Loskot could secure this great play for this city was by posting a heavy guarantee of first money to the company, and as special inducements for all to see this play the price have been put within the reach of all, ranging from 25 cents in the gallery to one dollar for box seats, which are unheard of prices for this style of a play, the usual price ranging from 30 cents to $2.50. Manager Loskot advises that he paid two dollars a seat to see this play in Jackson, Michigan, a year and a half ago and would willingly pay the same price to see it again.

Any future attempts on Manager Loskot's part to obtain high class attractions on same conditions as were necessary in order to secure Brewster's Millions, Light Kernal and Five Brothers appearing next month will all depend on appreciation shown by the public in attending these plays, as it takes money to run a show the same as any other line of business. It will no doubt surprise the average person when they learn that the daily average expense of the Light Kernal is $1300 and in order to stay in business they must receive liberal patronage.

Charlevoix is on the theatrical list as a poor show town and if you want the city to hold that rank which will eventually mean that it will be impossible to obtain shows of any kind, just continue patronizing shows as you have for the past year, while if you want the city listed all over the United States as a live city as East Jordan now is, you can do your share by showing a little appreciation in attending a show occasionally.

PETITIONS ILLEGAL

Local Option Question Cannot Be Submitted at This Meeting.

Just as we go to press we are informed that the efforts of the wets to bring the local option issue to a vote next spring has failed. Errors in getting out the affidavits is the cause of the rejection of the proposition by the board.

The final action of the board was based on an opinion of the attorney general that the affidavits were wrong and the question could not legally be submitted at this meeting.

It is now up to the board whether to adjourn sine die or to a later date. If they adjourn sine die, the question cannot be submitted for another year. If to an adjourned meeting, new affidavits can be prepared by the wets, and submitted at this meeting. If this is done, it will cost the county in the next election of from $1200 to $1500 dollars, for the accommodation of the wets, who have had two years to prepare proper affidavits. The decision of the board will be made Thursday.

EXHIBITS WERE THE BEST EVER

Variety Not so Numerous But Gave Evidence of Better Care

List of Prize Winners at Merchants' Produce Exhibit—Sold at Good Prices

While the total number of exhibit at the Retail Merchants' Produce exhibition held at Vaughn's garage Saturday, were not as many as on previous occasions, they showed a marked improvement in regards to quality and care in raising. The apples were of a better color, more uniform in size, showing that scientific care had been taken in the orchards where they were grown.

That good corn could be raised in Charlevoix county was proven by the numerous baskets exhibited. In fact, everything was of excellent quality, and brought a high price at the auction sale.

Below we publish the entire list of prize winners.

Wheat—First, H. H. Smith; second, Fred White.

Oats—First, Frank Smith; second, Mr. Ward.

NECK BROKEN IN AUTO ACCIDENT

W. H. Quick of Boyne City Instantly Killed by Car Overturning

Accident Happened on Boyne City Stone Road—Companions Injured

Stricken without a moment's warning, W. H. Quick met a sad and untimely end when thrown from his automobile on the Horton's Bay road at 6:30 Thursday evening. He struck the ground on the back of his head. The blow fractured the vertebrae of his neck. Death was instantaneous.

B. J. Quick, his brother, jumped as he left the car tipping. He escaped with minor cuts and slight bruises.

Sam Stone and George Saunders were other occupants of the machine. Stone had two ribs cracked or broken. Saunders received bad cuts about the face and head and was bruised.

The accident happened at the eastern terminus of the state award road not far from Horton's Bay. W. H. Quick was driving. The survivors state that the auto was traveling at a moderate rate of speed, possibly 42 to 45 miles an hour. In this they may have been deceived by the splendid road over which they had just been traveling.

When the car hit the uncompleted portion of the highway improvement—littered in with sand—it swerved sharply to the right and toppled completely over, finally righting itself and facing east parallel with the road way. W. H. Quick lay beside the machine. His brother and companions rushed to his assistance but life was extinct before they reached him.

Word of the accident soon reached the city and Dr. W. H. Marshall, coroner, hastened to the scene. He gave his opinion that the fall caused instant disease. Dr. Marshall examined the witnesses and decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The body was brought to that city, prepared for burial at the Stuckus rooms and taken to the home.

W. H. Quick was born in Hillsdale county and would have been 39 years of age had he lived until October 25. He was married 16 years ago to Mary Doherty of Mt. Pleasant. He resided for a time at Mt. Pleasant, Caro., Carson City, Onaway and came to Boyne City seven years ago. Until three years ago he was associated with his brother, H. J. Quick, in the furniture business. Since then he had been engaged in real estate and insurance. He was a justice of the peace.

Decedent is survived by a widow and two sons: Hildred, aged 13 years, a student in the high school, and Bernard, aged 12, a pupil in the public school.

W. H. Quick was a big-hearted, jovial business man. He looked on the bright side of life and always had a cherry word for everyone. His tragic demise is deeply regretted by a host of intimate friends.

The funeral was held Monday from St. Matthews church, Fr. Burchard officiating.

MUST FILE A CERTIFICATE

Co-Partners Must Comply With New Law Within Ninety Days.

All Concerns Doing Business Under Firm Name Must File Papers.

Very few of the partnership concerns doing business in the county realize that under the new law, passed by the last legislature and in effect August 11 last, they are required to file a certificate of co-partnership, showing the names of those interested in and connected with the business. This certificate provided for in the new law, must be filed, under oath on or before November 11th, that is the date the 90-day limit, set by the legislature, expires.

The operation of the law is claimed to have a tendency to make more public the names of those interested in firms or co-partnerships doing business under a firm name. For instance John Doe & Co., is the name of a firm doing business in the grocery line. The general public know John Doe, as he is the head of the firm and comes in contact with the public. But associated with him, there may be half a dozen or more persons, as a part of the co-partnership, who are unknown to the public and the intent of the law seems to be to give this information. The law also provides a 25c filing fee, which must accompany the certificate at the time it is filed. Several firms filing statements under this law have neglected to send in the fee and as the law is clear on this point it is necessary that this part of the law be observed. The fee goes into the county treasury. A fine or imprisonment is provided as a penalty for anyone neglecting to comply. Blank forms can be secured on application from Richard Lewis, county clerk at any time.

During the past week the different committees of the board of supervisors have had their hands full with the work that has been assigned to them, and are still hard at the labors.

On the opening day Frank C. Burnett, supervisor of Hayes township, was selected as chairman for the current year. Tuesday morning he gave out the following as standing committee appointments, which were confirmed:

Claims—F. J. Meech, Elmer Ingalls, Wm. Spring, John Lewis, Wm. J. Gallagher.

Ways and Means—Wm. J. Gallagher, W. W. Niles, M. A. McDonald.

To Settle with the County Treasurers—Wm. F. Boshaw, W. Herschel Miller, Frank Bricker.

To Settle with the Superintendents of the Poor—Charles Hopkins, Clive Hutton, C. D. Osborn.

Equalization—E. C. Chew, John W. Green, John Parker, George Durance.

Appointments—Charles J. Zeitler, Jacob E. Chew, Frank M. House.

Township Clerks' Reports—Jacob E. Chew, M. A. McDonald, Wm. H. Carter.

Rejected and Charged Back Taxes—John Parker, Whitfield Totten, C. D. Osborn.

Printing—Whitfield Totten, W. W. Morehouse, F. L. Smith.

Insurance—Frank M. House, John W. Green, George Durance.

Court House—M. A. McDonald, Charles Hopkins, John Parker.

Roads, Bridges and Dams—Clive Hutton, Frank M. House, W. W. Niles.

County Road Commissioners—Elmer Ingalls, E. C. Chew, Frank Bricker.

Wednesday the regular routine business was taken up, and the committees began active work on getting out their reports. Other business of importance which has been completed are as follows:

Thursday $600 was voted for aiding the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

The treasurer was authorized to pay the agricultural society which holds a fair annually at East Jordan $800 as usual.

The city of East Jordan petitioned the board for an appropriation of $1,000 toward rebuilding the 700 foot bridge there. The estimated cost of the new structure is $15,000.

Petition granted.

South Arm township asked $100 for a bridge. L. H. Parker suggested that Boyne City put in a request for a plumb. South Arm took the hint and withdrew its resolution.

The "wets" petition for re-submission of the local option question, having some thirteen hundred signatures, was presented and referred to a special committee as follows: W. Herschel Miller, Elmer Ingalls, Frank M. House, M. A. McDonald and W. W. Niles.

The wets, believing their petition for a local option election was defective, filed new affidavits Friday. The matter is now in the hands of the committee and is booked for a hearing some time today.

BIBLE STUDY ON A GOOD MAN'S SIN.
Numbers 20:1-13—Oct. 26.
"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my Redeemer."
Psalm 138.

FOR thirty-eight years the Israelites resided in the wilderness, making Kadesh-Barnea their camp center, but occupying a considerable portion of the wilderness with their flocks and herds. In April of the fortieth year after leaving Egypt, by Divine command through Moses, they assembled at Kadesh, prepared to enter the Land of Promise.

But the water supply was scant Murmurings arose, and inquiries which it were not as well to have perished in Egypt or elsewhere as to perish there from thirst. Moses and Aaron went to the Lord
with the matter, desiring Divine guidance.

"The glory of the Lord appeared unto them." This glory is surmised
to have been a ray of light emanating from the Mercy Seat in the Most Holy. They were instructed to take the rod, presumably "Aaron's rod that budded," and that was kept in the Ark in the Most Holy. That rod would remind the people of the Lord's special acceptance of Aaron as the high priest and Moses' assistant. It would be a sign to them of the Divine favor which hitherto had guided them, and which would continue to guide all who trusted in the Lord.

Smiting the Rock a Sin.
The Lord particularly directed that Moses should speak to the rock, and that in response waters would gush forth. About thirty-eight years before in a similar experience near Mt. Sinai, Moses had been instructed to smite the rock; but in this case the rock was not to be smitten.

Here Moses and Aaron sinned. "The meekness man in all the earth" forgot himself, and allowed a spirit somewhat akin to pride, self-sufficiency and anger to control him for the moment.
Smiting the rock, he cried to the people, "Ye rebels, must I bring you water out of the rock?"

The water indeed came forth, as the Lord had promised. The people indeed got the blessing needed, but one of the most precious servants of God
there fell under Divine discipline.
The Lord's decree was that neither Moses nor his brother should enter Canaan. Moses, however, was permitted to go with the people to the end of the journey, and then from Mt. Nebo to see the promised Land of Canaan.

This condemnation does not signify Divine reprobation to eternal torment or any lasting dishonor. Moses got his entire punishment then and there, before death, as do all of God's saintly ones. Whatever stripes, chastisements, punishments, of the future, shall be meted out to mankind in general because of wrongdoings in the present life, there are none reserved for the saints. The Apostle explains that they are chastened now that they may not come into condemnation with the world.

They Drank of the Rock—Christ.
St. Paul points out that the smiting of the rock was symbolical. As the manna typified Jesus, so did the smitten rock also. The refreshing water flowing from the rock symbolized the blessings flowing from Christ's sacrifice. The smiting of the rock at the beginning of Israel's experience was authorized of God. It was necessary that upon Jesus should fall the rod of affliction, even unto death—Isaiah 53:4.

Just what was symbolized by the second smiting, which did not at all authorize, is not explained by St. Paul.
The fact that it was punished indicates that it was wrong, and that it symbolizes some improper course on the part of the professed people of God. Two suggestions come to us, either or both of which may be applicable:

(1) A smiting of the Body of Christ in the end of this Age.

(2) A reprobation of Christ on the part of those who once have been enlightened.

Edomites, Moabites, Midianites.
When the time came for entering Canaan from Kadesh, the nearest route was through Edom. When Israel asked permission to cross Edom, it was refused. In ear-mony with the covenant between Esau and Jacob, Israel detoured to the south, and passed through Moab.

This detour was disheartening.
Again there were in our minds against Moses, who really represented God to them. Their murmurings were promptly punished.
They were not protected from the serpents prevailing in that vicinity. Many died from the serpents, until Moses made a brazen one and erected it upon a pole. Throughout the camp went messages, directing the people to look to the brazen serpent and be healed.

Thus a lesson was written for Spiritual Israel. The fiery serpent of sin has bitten mankind. All are dying, and only by the exercise of faith in the crucified One can they be healed.
The day is coming when Messiah's Kingdom will bring blessings to all.

PROFITABLE DAILY TITHING
"Daily Heavenly Manna."
This little book is having the largest circulation of any of its kind and is concocted by Christians everywhere to be the most helpful.

If Christians allow the rush and crash of selfish ambition to deprecate them of their daily portion of heavenly food they must not be surprised if they grow spiritually leaner day by day, and if the peace of God give place in their hearts to the discontent which is growing in the world, notwithstanding the multiplication of comforts and privileges.

"Daily Heavenly Manna" contains a collection of Scripture texts with appropriate quotations for every day in the year. Surely the little tithes of this daily spirit in partaking of its morsels of heavenly counsel cannot fail to profit all who partake. It is published to do good, not for profit.

Your Friends' Birth Dates.
An autograph and birthday recorder in this book is a great convenience. Opposite each day of the year are blank lines upon which you can secure the autographs of your friends and be reminded of their birthdays as they occur. This makes the book most valuable yearly. In ten years you would not sell it for ten dollars.

Besides it has a place for Birth Records, Marriage Records and Death Records. Also it has a table showing the day of the week of any date for a hundred and fifty years.

THINGS ALL OUGHT TO KNOW.
As Christian Bible Students—The Satisfactory Proof of "Why God Permits Evil."

One of the questions which comes to nearly every thinking mind today is "Why does God permit evil?" As we look about us in the world we observe that it is filled with sorrow and trouble, sickness and pain and every trial we could enumerate, and we cannot help wondering WHY GOD ALLOWS IT.
We realize that He is almighty and that He could prevent it if He wished.
We read in His Word that He is more willing to do for His children than we are earthly parents for theirs, and we know how much that means yet at times it seems that those who try to do and live right have the most trouble. This question is made very clear in a book entitled, "The Divine Plan of the Ages." Every student is backed by Scripture, and shows while God does not sanction evil HE HAS HAD A PURPOSE IN ALLOW-ING SIN AND DEATH TO REIGN
THESE SIX THOUSAND YEARS.
This and many other subjects of interest to all of God's people are discussed fully and in language easy comprehension.

CLEANS OUT BANK
W. C. Walsh's Bank at Boyne Falls in Serious Trouble.

Walsh's private bank at Boyne Falls is closed.

"A run on the bank cleaned us out of currency Tuesday," said W.
C. Walsh, proprietor, to The Journal.
"We owe depositors in the neighborhood of $10,000."

"Depositors will not lose their penny," Mr. Walsh continued. "We have lots of good collateral to cover all loans but we simply can not turn it into cash immediately. It will take a few days to adjust matters and they everyone will get their money. It is unfortunate for me but I will be the loser, not the depositor."

Mr. Walsh said he had paid out $20,000 to depositors in the run on his bank Friday, Saturday and Tuesday. He established his bank in Boyne Falls six years ago.—Boyne

WOULD STOP
AUTO HUNTING

Declares Sportsman in Autos Will Exterminate Partridge Soon.

Situation is One That Calls for a Drastic Remedy Applied at Once.

Entire grouse in Michigan are threatened with extermination because hunting from automobiles is permitted. Never before has such extensive slaughter of partridge in the upper peninsula been witnessed as during the present season. Automobiles are enabled to cover many miles of territory daily and with the increasing numbers of the cars, and the quietness of their approach, birds feeding in the roads fall as easy prey, as if they were domestic chickens. It is not uncommon for an automobile party to return at night with the limit of the kill allowed by law.

The certainty that extermination faces the partridge should present practices be permitted to continue is realized by State Game Warden W. R. Oates, and he has about decided to recommend in his next report to the legislature an amendment to prohibit hunting from motor-propelled cars.

"The state law now prohibits the hunting of ducks from power boats," said Mr. Oates. "For the same reason back of this legislation should be an amendment making it illegal to hunt partridges from an automobile. The hunter skilled in shooting from a car has the birds at a disadvantage. He travels swiftly and quietly, and is on the birds with little warning. Many of the grouse are picked off from the machines while they are feeding in the road. Men who have tried this form of hunting inform me that it is particularly deadly and they are today among those who advocate making it illegal.

The general use of automobiles means that the partridge are being hunted in the most remote places and that there is now little cover where they enjoy absolutely protection. The heavy bags that we hear of this fall are due not to the increased number of birds but to the deadly use that can be made of the motor car.

"I see no other way to prevent this form of hunting than to make it an offense to carry birds in an automobile and to make their presence in a car prima facie evidence that they were shot illegally. This seems pretty drastic, but there is a growing opinion that the situation is one that calls for a drastic remedy."

COUNTY SOLONS KEEPING BUSY

house—carrying $6,000 on the building and $5,000 on contents.

The widow pension law was read to the board Friday and explained.

The committee appointed to make a new contract with the house of correction in Detroit, reported that no contract could be made, as they had more prisoners now they could care for.

The contract for publishing the proceedings of the board was awarded to the Boyne City Times at $50.

The report of the committee on equalization showed that the total valuation of the county was $1,711, 917, divided as follows: Real $9, 015, personal $1,702,902.

Tuesday L. A. Butler was named county school examiner to succeed himself, as was also Henry C. Cooper as poor commissioner.

During this session the report of the committee on county road commissioners was read by Supervisor

E. C. Chew. In the report it was recommended that a two mill tax be spread for the continuation of road building. The report also contained the recommendation from the county road commissioners that the present roads under construction be completed and then the work be transferred at Charlevoix to the Petoskey road, and build two miles beyond the Pere Marquette road, which would give a stone road to the foot of Greenash hill.
Also after completing the present three miles at East Jordan to change to the west side of the arm and build two miles. The road Commissioner Larch is now working on to be completed, then shift and build two miles from Boyne City toward Deer Lake and also two miles from Boyne Falls to Thumb Lake. In each instance the roads now under construction to be completed before another section is started.

After considerable discussion the report was adopted as read by a vote of 15 to 9, one supervisor being absent. Wednesday morning the matter was again brought up, the board voting to reconsider the matter, owing to dissatisfaction of a number of supervisors from the eastern end of the county as to the location of the roads to be built.
It was reported back so the road commissioners to reconsider the location of the roads out of Boyne City, who will report later.

Thursday morning it was decided by the board to purchase the lots north of the court house, owned by Mrs. B. W. Miller, the price being $2,000. It was also decided to hold the lots on the south terrace for a better price than had been offered.
The board then adjourned to meet at 9 o'clock Thursday morning, and will probably be in session all this week.

CAULIFLOWER SALAD.

DINNER MENU.

Okra Gumbo, Steamed Rice,
Fried Silcock Fish, Stuffed Potatoes,
Cauliflower Salad,
Chocolate and Vanilla Ice Cream,
Black Coffee.

NOVEL salads may be made with cauliflower mixed with other vegetables. Recipes for salads of this sort are given here:

Mixed Vegetable Salad.—Procure a selection of cooked vegetables, such as cauliflower, peas, beans, young carrots and turnips, new potatoes, beets, etc.
Mix lightly with mayonnaise sauce, care being taken not to break the vegetables. Arrange some lettuce leaves in the form of a cup and place the mixed vegetables in the center. Garnish very lightly with a little mustard and cress.

Served With Plain Dressing.

Lettuce and Cauliflower Salad.—Separate one head cauliflower; lay in cold water ten minutes. Drain and pour over it boiling water enough to cover;
add one teaspoonful salt and boil until tender in uncovered boiler. When cold place on lettuce and serve with French dressing.

Cauliflower and Mayonnaise Salad.—
Cook cauliflower in slightly salted water, drain and chill. Break, arrange on a salad dish and cover with mayonnaise dressing. Garnish with cold boiled carrot cut in small cubes or in fancy shapes with small vegetable cutters.

Mixed With Peppers.

Tomato and Cauliflower Salad.—Boil
a cauliflower and set aside to cool.
When cool pick apart into small pieces. When sliced place in center of platter lined with lettuce leaves, sliced tomatoes and rings of green pepper. Cover all with mayonnaise dressing.

Flourant Cauliflower Salad.—Boil a fresh, firm head of cauliflower until it is tender. After removing it from the boiling water squeeze the juice of a lemon over it and set it aside to cool.
Then break the head into small pieces and place the pieces on crisp lettuce leaves, season with salt and pepper, dot with the chopped green peppers and cover with mayonnaise dressing.

HOUSE WARMING

Many friends of Mrs. Jane Hamilton Gather at Her Home.

Mrs. Jane Hamilton, who lost her home with all its contents by fire last May, is now closely settled in her new home on May street. A number of lady friends gave her a surprise pot luck party and shower.
Mrs. Hamilton received a great many pretty and useful presents.

The ladies of the R. A. of A. made her a beautiful wooden quilt. The quilt was one of the best ever seen and the little home could not hold a larger and merrier crowd.

Howe-Henry.

A quiet wedding took place at Boyne Falls, October 8, when William C. Howe, of the Overlook Fruit and Poultry Farm, located four miles south of the Trenton ferry, and Miss Marie Henry of Boyne Falls, were made man and wife. The ceremony was performed at the parsonage by Rev. Will Shepherd.
The happy young couple took a ten day trip through eastern counties and are now at home to their many friends.

W. C. Arnold Dead.

W. C. Arnold, a pioneer resident of this county died this morning (Wednesday) at 10:00 o'clock, at his home on Mason street, aged 81 years. Mr. Arnold had been sick for over a year from a complication of disease, the final cause of his death being from dropsy.

Cutting a Dido.

The story runs that Dido, a queen of Tyre about 870 B. C., fled from that ancient city on the murder of her husband and with a colony settled on the north coast of Africa, where she founded the famous old city of Carthage. Being in want of land, she bargained with the natives for as much as she could surround with a bull's hide. Having made this agreement, she cut the hide into thin strips and, tying them together, claimed as much land as she could surround with the long blue she had made. The natives allowed the clever queen to have her way, but ever after when any one played off a sharp trick they said he had "cut a Dido," and the phrase has remained.

Cats in London.

Some time ago an old man revisiting London after forty years in Australia was asked what appeared to him most strange in his walks about town. He said it was the change in the public attitude toward the cat. In his young days if a cat appeared in the street it was a signal to throw stones at it or shout at it or set a dog on it; in any case to rouse a hostile demonstration, and the cat had to gallop for its life. Now he saw cats strolling undisturbed on doorsteps and corners all over the town.

Mental Conservation.

Mr. Subly, who was rather conceited, declared that talking with an uncultivated person had a tendency to impair his peace of mind.

"Then you ought never to do it, Mr. Subly," said a young lady present. "Any one with only a piece of mind ought not to risk it!"—Youth's Companion.

THEATRICAL

"Brewster's Millions" by George Barr McCutcheon, is one of the most interesting and fascinating stories ever written. Its sales have been enormous, therefore, it has been read by countless thousands who will be glad to renew acquaintance with "Monty" Brewster, "Peggy" Gray, Trixie Clayton and other old friends when they appear before the footlights at the Charlevoix Theatre, Saturday, October 25. The stage version has been made by Winchell Smith and Byron Ongley, two men who have made their marks in dramatic literature.

The Light Eternal, a magnificent, ly staged romance of the fourth century transcribed from Cardinal Wiseman's "Fabiola," will be given at Charlevoix theatre, October 28, 1913.

Spectacular in its investiture of barbaric splendor, abounding in dramatic episode of intense suspense, and dealing with a serious theme of deep religious import, the action of this great drama moves forward briskly and with the finality and realism of life itself. Every moment is fraught with dramatic action and subtle meaning as the story is unfolded. The audience is literally transported down through the ages to the proud and wicked days when Rome flourished in all its glory.

Throughout the four acts the persecution of the Caesars is visualized to a degree unattained by any of the forerunners of The Light Eternal. There is a certain dramatic power and earnest reverence of theme that lifts the play above the commonplace and makes of it an entrancing romance and a moral lesson. Do not fail to attend.

A Correction.

Last week's Courier stated that the recently purchased farm of Albert Edwards would in the future be called "Hill Crest Farm." We were misinformed in the matter, as it will be called "Hill Crest Garden."

The Boyne City Journal says: "W. J. Pearson has purchased the electric light plant at Boyne Falls. He has organized a corporation known as the Boyne Falls Power Co. and has associated Representative D.H. Hickey of Brimley, and some other moneyed men with him. They expect in the near future to furnish power as well as light."

The body of a large buck deer floated ashore near the West Traverse town hall, about five miles up the shore from Harbor Springs Thursday evening. The animal had been dead but a few minutes when first noticed and no doubt had been chased into the water by dogs on the Beaver Islands or the mainland between Bay Shore and Charlevoix.

Hurt in Runaway.

John Runyon, who lives near Norwood was badly hurt in a runaway accident, Thursday. He was driving down Antrim street, when his horse became frightened and ran away. Mr. Runyon was thrown out of the buggy, striking on the corning, breaking his wrist and severely shaking him up.

AFTER NORMAL SCHOOL

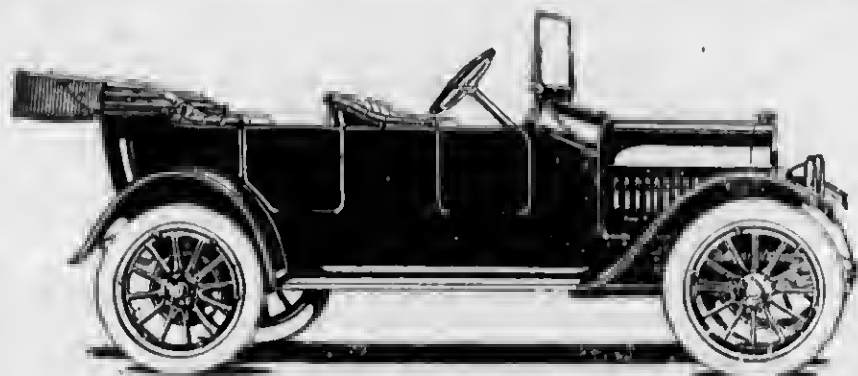

State Superintendent Favors Petoskey as to Location in Emmet County.

Will Petoskey or Pellston be the home of the new normal school about to be established in Emmet county? That is the question that is facing educational organizations, but the general belief is that Petoskey will be favored.

Two years ago the supervisors decided to give the county normal to Pellston, as Petoskey schools were not large enough to take care of it. It has since been learned that the supervisors did not have absolute power in the matter and that the state superintendent of public instruction, who has considerable say, favors Petoskey. So confident does the local school board feel that it has provided for a county normal room in the new high school now in progress of construction.

DRILLING AFTER OIL

Cedillac Organizes Company and Will Make Thorough Search.

Ten thousand dollars of a total of $20,000 worth of stock to be issued has been paid in by members of the Cedillac Gas and Oil company. This means that the land in Cedillac and vicinity is soon to be thronged with test holes for oil, which experts say is there in large quantities.

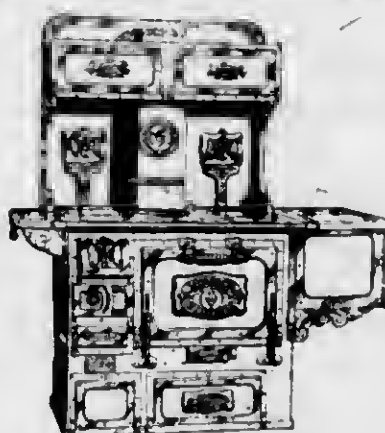

The company, which was formally organized Thursday night, has some of the Westford county's most prominent men.

It is understood that the first oil well will be dug almost in the heart of the city. Drilling machinery has been telegraphed for and is expected in a few days. Practically every acre of land in this vicinity has been looked over by oil experts and options on many farms have been obtained. On others the company has secured the release of all oils, gas and minerals.

Motion to Build New Court House a Good One if Presented at Right Time—Other Doings of Board

At the time of going to press last week we left the board of supervisors arguing the question as to the location of the county roads to be constructed next year, the matter being referred back to the county commissioners to make a further report.

At the session Thursday morning the matter was taken up and a motion made to expunge the records of the action taken the previous day, and adopt the report of the committee on road commissioners as originally read.

At this session E. J. Meech made a motion to the effect that any county officers who in the future attended any convention, such as meetings of the superintendents of the poor, probate judges, county clerks association, etc., pay his own expenses, and not call upon the county to reimburse them. This motion to cover all conventions attended unless ordered to do so by the board of supervisors. The motion carried, practically all members deeming it an unnecessary expense to the county.

A motion was also carried to the effect that the superintendents of the poor are in the future instructed to send all patients except those whom the law requires to be sent to certain hospitals to the hospital at Petoskey or some other nearby hospital, instead at Ann Arbor, to save the expenses of travel, as the same rate has been offered at the nearby hospitals as at the state hospital.

Some matters pertaining to the storage of files belonging to the probate office were discussed. More room is needed for this purpose, and the need is growing more and more each year. Sup. J. E. Chew stated that in his opinion the county should build a new court house, and then they would have ample room to take care of all the county records. He said he could see no reason why the board should spend money year after year improving the old building, when it never was nor never would be large enough to accommodate the offices and necessary rooms and vaults. His remarks began to bear fruit, as will be seen by action taken the following day.

Previous to the opening of the board on Friday, the question of submitting the "wet" and "dry" proposition had been talked over, and upon the decision rendered by the attorney general, it was found that the question could not be legally submitted to the people to vote upon at this session. The only way it could be handled by the board was at an adjourned session, thus giving the wets time to prepare new affidavits. An adjourned meeting also meant that the entire board would be called back at a great expense, the only real business being to allow the wets a chance to prepare themselves, after their failure at the previous session. After a thorough canvass of each individual member, it was found that a majority of the members were in favor of adjourning sine die, and not to an adjourned date.

Friday morning the board again resumed work. The opening gun was fired when Sup. E. C. Chew made a motion, which was seconded by Sup. John Lewis, that the chair appoint a committee to confer with the prosecuting attorney, with reference to the building of a court house, the issuing of bonds of the county therefor and submission at the spring election in 1914, said committee to make a report at an adjourned meeting of the board to be held on the first Monday in January.

Mr. W. H. Moorehouse made a motion to amend the above to the effect to send the committee report at the present session of the board. The amendment was carried by a rising vote of 15 for and 10 against.

The chair named the following men for this committee: E. C. Chew, W. H. Miller and W. C. Spring. A motion was then made by C. D. Osborn, that when the board did adjourn, that it adjourn sine die, and called for an aye and nay vote, which resulted as follows: Ayes, Sups. House, Osborn, Duricor, Rucker, MacDonald, Burnett, Ingalls, Niles, Totten, J. E. Chew, Haddock, Moorehouse, Miller, Bashaw, Smith and Spring—16.

Nays—Sups. E. C. Chew, Hutton, Green, Gallagher, Carter, Lewis, Parker, March and Zeidler.

Thus by the above the county remains in the dry column for another year.

After a recess, the committee appointed in regard to the building of a court house made a verbal report stating that the time being limited, also not being able to get estimates of the cost of building suggested that the matter be referred to the board of supervisors at the next regular meeting.

The matter of purchasing the lots of B. W. Miller was closed, and the clerk was authorized to draw an order on the treasurer for $2,000, the purchase price, in payment thereof. A vote of thanks was given Chairman Frank C. Barnett, after which the board adjourned.

We leave it to our readers to form their own opinions as to the object of the motion to build a court house, and think it would have been far better had those who were in favor of adjourning at a future date had abided by the decision of a majority of the board.

NEW LAW NOW EFFECTIVE

Automobile Owners Must Pay License According to Horsepower.

Part of the Money Received for Fees Will go to Support of Good Roads.

According to instructions sent out by the secretary of state to automobile owners, the registration fees, for securing license numbers, will this year be paid according to the horsepower of the car. The money derived from the fees will be apportioned so that part of it goes toward a good roads fund. While the new system will mean a greater expenditure for the owners on the initial and only payment it will in all probability make the yearly tax lower than it has been in the past, as the one fee pays everything, and there will be no local payment of any kind.

All owners paying their registration fees during November and December will receive license plates on or before January 1. The tax will be assessed at the rate of fifty cents per horsepower, for the season, the rate to be one-half the amount after September 1, 1914. In gas motors the horsepower will be computed by squaring the diameter of the cylinders, multiplying by the number of cylinders and dividing by two and one-half. The manufacturers' rating must also be stated in a sworn registration application. In steam and electric driven vehicles, the manufacturers' rating will be accepted. The former license fee was three dollars for all cars regardless of horsepower.

Auction Sales.

It has been demonstrated time and time again that the only method of advertising an auction sale was through a newspaper, and that the Courier was the paper that always brought the crowds and also reached the people. Advertise your sales in the Courier and you will always have a crowd.

This week on page seven will be found the adv. of Jake Bergman, who will have a sale at his farm one-half north of Atwood on Thursday, November 6, commencing at one o'clock sharp.

Page eight also contains the announcement of A. Evers, who will conduct a sale at his farm six miles north-east of Charlevoix, on the State road, on Friday, November 7, commencing at one o'clock sharp.

W. E. Byers, the popular auctioneer, will cry both sales.

B. W. Miller's meat market will be open all winter. Call in and give us a trial—Adv.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY BOYS

Are Now Organized in Y. M. C. A. Groups in County.

Main Object to Create a Desire for Clean Living and Thought.

Since the opening of school this fall those having in charge the work of the Young Men's Christian Association have been organizing Y. M. C. A. groups wherever leadership had been discovered and could be put to work. At present fifteen groups with a membership of about one hundred and fifty boys are meeting regularly each week under the direction of competent leadership. The meetings of the local groups are held in the school building on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings from seven until eight fifteen and those having the work in charge will consider it a favor if the parents will co-operate in seeing that the boys get to the meetings on time and come directly home following the meetings. At their regular meetings the members devote a portion of their time to bible study at the opening of the meeting, following this time is given for games and athletic stunts and the balance of the time is taken up with practical talks by business and professional men and short talks by the members. The object of the meetings is to develop a desire for clean living through the bible study, to create a spirit of fair play through carefully supervised play and a lingering after the best things in mental development through the practical talks by the men and by the boys themselves.

The local groups are under the direction of Emory D. Pierce, who has charge of the Eighth Grade club and Ward Gennett and Charles Mascho, who have charge of the groups for boys below the eighth grade, who are twelve years old or over. The officers of the Eighth Grade club are: Lee Young, president; Jack Supernaw, vice-president; Kenneth Widdfield, secretary and Russell Schweitzer, treasurer. The officers of the Junior Y. M. C. A. groups are: Oakley Hammond, president; Robert Kruklik, vice-president; Albert Edwards, secretary. Members of the program committee, George Becman, George Driggett and Cecil Poole.

Other groups are to be organized in the near future and some of these will be in the rural districts. At present there is one rural group in the Maple Grove school district under the leadership of Fred Kfourth. At present this group is meeting in the school house, but they are in hopes that they will be allowed the use of the garage hall, which will be so much more satisfactory for their work.

Arrangements are being made to take a large delegation of high school boys to the high school conference which will be held at Saginaw on Friday, Saturday and Sunday following Thanksgiving.

READ THE ADVERTISING

Readers of the Courier Make Money by Patronizing Advertisers.

Newspaper advertising is so generally scrutinized that some people will say this suggestion is unnecessary. Still there are some people who would not discover a notice that $10 gold pieces were being given away, even if prominently printed in every newspaper. There are some who pay needlessly high prices, because they do not pay careful attention to newspaper trade announcements.

The publisher does not consider that when his readers have seen every newspaper, they have by any means exhausted what the public has given them.

One of the greatest services the newspaper renders is providing an avenue by which merchants and tradesmen can give information about their offerings. Only by keeping track of these offerings can the public know where the best values are to be had. This newspaper hopes that none of its readers is paying needlessly high for living costs, by failure to learn about the buying opportunities which these columns report from issue to issue.

THE GOOD WORK OF THE BUREAU

Has Had a Large Number of Exhibits During Year.

Alfalfa, Missionary and Educational Campaigns Good Roads and Special Meetings.

Including the cash on hand January 1, the receipts of the Western Michigan Development Bureau for the current calendar year to October 1, are $10,551.11. The expenditures for the same period are $9,867.16. The more important items among expenditures are: Operating expenses, $5,574.61; publicity service, $668.88; exhibits, $1,901.11; illustrated lectures, $672.91.

As a record of achievement, one of which the bureau may well feel proud, the following is submitted: Exhibits—Big exhibits were put on at Pittsburg, Cleveland, Grand Rapids, Detroit, and smaller exhibits at Bay View, Boyne City, Albion, Traverse City, Honor, Frankfort, Thompsonville, Bear Lake, Munster.

Missionary campaign—A two week foreign missionary trip was made into Illinois and Iowa. Twelve meetings were held, at which 6,500 copies of the illustrated magazine, "Western Michigan," were given away.

Alfalfa campaign—Alfalfa campaigns have been conducted in eight western Michigan counties and $2 Alfalfa clubs formed.

Good meetings—The bureau helped materially in making the Western Michigan Pike association tour covering a week of success. In addition, road meetings have been held at Muskegon, Grand Rapids, Empire, Glen Arbor, Lake Ann, Traverse City, Bellare, Central Lake, Ellsworth, Petoskey, Harbor Springs, Munson, Brant, Pellston, Leaning.

Orchard demonstrations—Orchard demonstrations have been conducted by trained men, under auspices of the bureau, at Harbor Springs, Boyne City, East Jordan, Ironton, Central Lake, Old Mission.

Education campaigns—A campaign covering three days was conducted in Mecosta county in co-operation with the county school commissioner. Eight meetings were held and the illustrated lecture, "Western Michigan," given at several.

Special meetings—The officers and directors of the bureau have contributed liberally in the way of talks and addresses at development meetings held in all parts of the territory. Many of the talks have been illustrated by lantern slide views.

Publicity—Better than twenty-five thousand copies of the illustrated magazine have been distributed. Fifteen bulletins have been issued with an aggregate circulation exceeding twenty thousand. Fifty-four news letters have been sent out and fully one hundred columns of special reading matter supplied to the newspapers.

Correspondence—While no statistics have been kept regarding letters received and dispatched, it is certain that more than four thousand have been written and mailed, and almost as many received.

Photographs—Two hundred and forty-one photographs suitable for advertising western Michigan have been secured by the bureau photographers, and these views are now being used in a way to bring good returns.

TO PREVENT FIRES

Timely Suggestions Given Out by State Fire Warden.

An article now going the rounds of the state press and said to come from the state fire warden of New York is worth remembering, and may prove of great value to some of our readers when they begin starting the fires this fall. The warden says, "In case your chimney gets on fire drop a tablespoonful or two of dry sulphur into the stove and throw on the direct drafts so that the fumes will pass up the chimney or stove pipe and you may thus possibly avert a serious fire. This has been tried time and again and has never been known to fail in putting out a fire."

CASE OF PEONAGE

Has Been Brought to Light in North Part of Emmet County.

A startling case of peonage has just been reported by Sheriff Purdie of Emmet from the north end of the county. The case came to the sheriff's notice through the state department at Lansing and he has refused to make public the names of the parties implicated because of the fact that the case has not yet come under his supervision. He was requested some days ago to investigate and report to the state department, which he has done. He reports that a young boy has been sold by his father to a neighbor for a given sum and that the papers deed, contracts, etc., were secured and forwarded to the state department with other evidence. Action will no doubt be commenced at once to have the parties brought into court.—Petoskey Daily News.

New Lighthouse Keeper.

A. C. Erickson has received the appointment of Harbor Point light-house keeper, to fill the position left vacant by the resignation of Mrs. Elizabeth Williams, and will begin his duties within a few days. Mr. Erickson was formerly keeper of the Calumet pierhead light of South Chicago. Mr. Williams' resignation will take effect October 31 and with Mr. Williams she will come at once to their home in this city.

RECEIVED THEIR MANY FRIENDS

Pretty Reception Held at Home of Mr. and Mrs. George Weaver.

Mr. and Mrs. T. George Finnan at Home After November 10 at 708 S. Bridge St.

A very pretty wedding reception took place Friday afternoon and evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Weaver for Mr. and Mrs. George Finnan who returned Wednesday from a weeks trip to Detroit, Grand Rapids and Ann Arbor.

The house was prettily decorated in autumn leaves, mountain ash berries, red and white carnations and roses.

Appropriate wedding favors filled with slaty cake and candies were served with delicious punch by Misses Ruth Emery and Marjorie Weaver, sister of the bride, in the afternoon.

Misses Mary Finnan and Mildred Johnson presided at the punch bowl in the evening.

Afternoon guests were entertained with solos by Mr. A. L. Coulter and Lois Frazier, accompanied by Miss Constance Hiddings, and in the evening Mrs. A. L. Coulter and Miss Irene Finnan entertained with solos.

Miss Helen Parsons acted as usher. Many beautiful as well as useful gifts were received by the happy young couple, who will be at home in their many friends after November 10th, at 708 South Bridge street.

Withers Sells Out.

Robert Withers, who has owned and conducted a livery and feed barn on Bridge street for a number of years, sold out Thursday to James Wyers, Jr., who will in the future conduct the business at the old stand. Mr. Wyers extends an invitation to aid as well as new patrons of the barn, to continue their patronage, and will also make the barn one of the best in the city for farmers to feed their teams.

ARTS OF PACKING AND MARKETING

Some of the "Don'ts" That Should Govern the Packer.

DON'T PUT TRASH IN BARREL

Always Use the Uniform Standard Three Bushel Barrel.

Give Customers Good Quality and Attractive Fruit—Leave Your Trash for Home Consumption.

The arts of packing and marketing—for arts they are—are so different in their scope that one may be adept in either and a consummate failure in the other, and yet are in one single thing so well related that it is quite within bounds to say that to pack well is half the art of marketing, and to pack well is not so difficult if one wishes to and has fruit that answers to his hand, if only a few elementary rules be followed, and these are mostly commonplace—so in a commonplace do's and some commonplace don'ts.

High among the don'ts is, don't plate your barrel. Don't face with stuff entirely out of character with that which is to follow. Don't make the face of your barrel a lie, for you tie to the public when you put two layers of fine apples on the face of the barrel, and then in the interior of the barrel, which no man may see, hide trash. Don't do it, in the first place because you are an honest man, and don't do it, in the second place, because it doesn't pay.

As a second "don't" don't use a pony barrel. Varying standards in barrels are as foolish and as productive of confusion as varying standards in money. They serve no honest man. In the long run they serve the rogue no better. A uniform standard, and that the three bushel barrel, takes one source of dispute, of doubt and dissatisfaction of the day. The larner who thinks he makes a gain by stunting the size of his package is just as wise as the plater and no more, and just as honest and no more, and he will lay his foolish skull at the last under the same fool-scrap where all the wise fools lay theirs.

So much for the negatives. Now for the positive side. Take the barrel, one head out, nail the hoops, break off the ends of the nails on the inside. Have that end of the barrel that you desire to use as head previously nailed by the cooper who delivers. It will save you valuable time. On the inside of head place a layer of uniform apples, even in color as well as size, bright, clean and healthy, and as close together as possible, stems downward. Pack these with such another layer laid sideways or stems downward. This man likes one way, one the other. I prefer the first, and then lay in a basketful at a time, apples as alike in size, color and sightliness as mother nature permits, both to their neighbors and the top layer, which they cannot of course entirely match, but which should not look like distant relations, and then comes the great positive injunction—shake well.

Shake well after each basketful and when all basketfuls are in you should shake so well that the apples would need little pressure. The great elemental difference after all between good and bad packers is right here, the one shakes well, the other presses hard.

You cannot err in shaking too much. Shake as if you were administering deserved punishment to a very bad boy. If you do not shake, but rely on pressure at the last you will render almost every apple unsightly and will entirely destroy the value of the fruit for cold storage.

After thorough shaking, the full barrel should show apples about an inch above the rim. These apples you press, first seeing that your barrel is on the level, and then with as small use of the hammer as possible, gently press in the head.

PRESERVING HINTS.

How to Make Delicious Pickle That Can Be Recommended.

An easy way of canning cherries and a way which preserves much of the beauty of the cherries is to bottle them after they have been washed, dried and pitted and to put two ounces of sugar in each bottle. Then cork them tightly and put the bottles in cold water. Bring the water to the boiling point and boil gently until the cherries are covered with juice. They are then done. Cool them in the water, push the corks in more tightly and store them away.

Rasperry vinegar makes a refreshing and easily prepared beverage, and the vinegar is not troublesome to make. Cover four quarts of red raspberries with vinegar. Twenty-four hours later scald and strain the mixture. Measure the juice and add a pound of granulated sugar to each quart of juice. Boil twenty minutes and bottle. This concoction will keep for years. When it is to be used add a tablespoonful to a glassful of cold water.

Spiced cherries are a less usual, but no less delicious pickle. To make them boil six pounds of granulated sugar with eight pounds of stoned cherries for twenty minutes. Remove the fruit and put it in scalded jars. Add two tablespoons of ground cinnamon tied in a piece of cheesecloth, a tablespoonful of whole cloves, a tablespoonful of whole cloves, a pint of vinegar and boil the syrup down until it is thick. Then pour it over the fruit and seal the jars.

How to Get Rid of Bedbugs.
Paint the mattress over lightly with kerosene. If neither stiffs nor smells. Wipe the bedstead and springs with a cloth wet in it and drench cracks unavailably. Wipe the backs of pictures and of dressers in fact, any sheltered and static space. Wipe the floor with kerosene if bare and wax or oil afterward. Sprinkle a carpet or rug with kerosene, then sweep with a broom dipped in very hot water.
Empty closets, wipe over, examine all accumulations of paper, boxes, etc. A bug overlooked will in a month's space infest a whole house. Couches of rattan, wicker or upholstered are strongholds of the blood suckers. Set in air and drench with kerosene or gasoline, leave standing a day and drench again, shaking, brushing and beating between drenchings.

Still in the Dark.

Friends Surprised Her.

Last Saturday afternoon about twenty friends and neighbors met at the home of E. J. Hilfer, for a farewell surprise for Miss Barbara Hilfer, who has made her home here for some time. They presented her with a fine gold fumble as a token of remembrance. A pot luck supper was served, which was greatly enjoyed by all. Miss Hilfer expects to leave the first of the week for Lake Odessa.

A good house greeted the production of "Brester's Millions" at the Charlevoix theatre Saturday night. The show proved everything that was said of it, being filled with pleasing comedy and fine acting. The yacht scene in act three was especially good, the storm and cloud effect with the lightning playing on the water being the best ever witnessed in this city.

An eastern editor sarcastically remarks: "The biggest trust on earth is the country newspaper. It trusts everybody, get cussed for trusting, mistrusted for cussing, and if it busts for trusting, get cussed for busting." We can add our mite to the above, that nine-tenths of the trouble we have had in 15 years in the newspaper business has arisen from trying to collect from those we have trusted.

COOL AIR FOR MINES.

New Method of Reducing Temperature in Deep Workings.

A German engineer, M. Dietz, proposes a method for cooling the air in mines which will overcome the existing difficulties. The temperature in mines, which increases with the depth of working, makes it necessary to fix a maximum number of hours per day for the miners, and in the German mines, where the temperature often exceeds 28 degrees C., the men do not work more than six hours per turn. Such conditions cause greater expense for labor and a lessening of the yield, and the present method is intended to keep the temperature below 28 degrees at the working points so as to allow of a continuous working, as in other industries.

After showing the reasons why previous attempts in this direction were not successful he exposes his method, which is to compress air at the surface of the ground and then put it through a drying process. The compressed air then goes into an expansion apparatus or air turbine, where it expands and furnishes work to this machine. The air also becomes cold by the effect of the expansion on the well known principle, and it is then taken by means of a protected piping into the mine and delivered at the proper point so as to secure a good ventilation and a cooling of the air within the mine. In this way he claims that the mine can be cooled more effectively than heretofore.

Cement For Spark Plugs.

Four parts of iron filings, two of lime, a fifth part of common salt mixed to a paste by the addition of vinegar make an excellent cement for spark plugs and for connecting pipes, etc. When carefully compounded this cement will stand compression and heat and can be air dried.

SMITH-VAN LEUVEN

MISS J. RICHARDS

In Stanley Wildern Building

It is best motion to pour out on ground and then pour into baskets again, and besides, the extra handling does the fruit no good; and then if you have intelligent pickers have them pull somewhat at the trees, letting fall there the utterly unworthy stuff instead of carrying it unnecessarily to the barrel.

They will carry enough anyway, but they can save the barrel much important time, as well as themselves unnecessary steps. And then if they have some especially nice fruit or want to keep it a very long time or with a view to a very long voyage, wrap it. It can be done, in fact, paper and oil at an extra expense of 15 cents per barrel, and it will add a dollar to the value of a package that you intend to keep a very long time.

And now as to marketing. If you are near a field storage, and, like the frog, have nothing else to do, it will often pay you to pack your own fruit and store it. You don't have to sell when everybody is selling. You can watch your fruit and decide when it has to go. This may not seem important to you, but it is everything. Beware of long distance storage. If you have got to store where you can't see the fruit often, and cannot personally mark your buyers on the frequent occasions either when you are seeking him or he is seeking you, you had better sell to someone whose business it is to store and whose interests are so large that it pays him to give his constant attention to the markets.

As a general proposition, the business of raising fruit is one thing, and the business of selling is quite another, and in this day of specialization the man whose specialized effort and insight is along the line of selling can generally pay you a higher price than you can realize for yourself. As a general proposition you will make more money if, when you have raised a crop, you sell it and immediately give your attention to the problem of raising the next crop. It will need your best thought and all of it. Your mind should be your orchard and not on the speculative ups and downs of the markets; for, let me tell you, orcharding is not a matter of a few months or of a season; it is a matter of watchful care and attention every month and the whole year.

And now another thing; we must widen the demand for American apples, and we must widen it by temptingly the consumer with better quality. It is either that or lower prices—sometimes, perhaps, not prices. We must raise apple packing and apple growing to the standard of California orange packing and growing, and the first step is to widen the market for the apple is to entice to customers to come to

is a simple matter, but it is not. There is a difference between selling your stuff and giving it away. Drop me a card for directions how to sell your goods, and get the benefit of my experience of 20 years as an Auctioneer.

MICHIGAN TREES BEST

Nursery Stock Grown in Eastern States May be Affected by Gypsy Moth.

Beware of nursery stock grown in the eastern state or in Europe. This is the admonition of Prof. L. H. Taft, state inspector of nurseries. The warning is due to the prevalence of the gypsy and brown-tailed moth in both Europe and the New England states, where it was introduced by imported trees from the nurseries of the old countries. Massachusetts is now spending a million dollars a year trying to rid itself of the pest, but little progress has so far been made against it.

Both insects feed on any kind of foliage and do not confine their efforts to fruit trees entirely. They will even eat the leaves of the evergreen and there are hundreds of trees in the center states, denuded by these insects. Parasites have been found that will kill them but the parasites are not found in any great quantities. Prof. Taft issues the warning that all nursery stock received from the east or from Europe, be thoroughly inspected as the eggs of both pests are easily found.

SURPRISED HER

Mrs. Angie Olney of Gloucester, Massachusetts. Pleasantly Surprised by Friends.

Word comes from Gloucester, Massachusetts, that Mrs. Angie Olney, a former resident of this city, was pleasantly surprised by a number of friends, among which were many former Charlevoix residents, on Tuesday afternoon of last week at the home of her son, William Green 10 Caladonia street. The ladies presented Mrs. Olney with many kind remembrances, and at four o'clock a dainty luncheon was served. The communication was signed by a number of former Charlevoix residents who were present.

Friday morning about 8 o'clock fire was discovered in the home of W. J. Duggett on Antrim street. The blaze started around the hot air pipes on the second floor, and was caused by an overheated furnace. Little damage was done.

Now Western Michigan.

Years ago, we who lived north of Cadillac lived in Northern Michigan. In fact, this whole section of the state was always referred to as "Northern Michigan," but of late we have noticed a tendency on the part of a few of the local papers to refer to this section as "Western Michigan," and at the same ratio of progress it won't be many years before we will be right in the heart of "Southern Michigan." North of the Straits of Mackinaw the people still cling to the fact that they reside in "Upper Michigan," as for us we can't quite get over the hallucination but then we are still a remnant of good old "Northern Michigan" and we are. —Mancelona News

HOW TO AVOID ACCIDENTS WITH KEROSENE LAMPS.

The two great and very real dangers in connection with lamps are dirt and carelessness, and to these two causes are attributed most lamp accidents. Lamps with metal reservoirs are safer than those of glass or china, as the former, if upset, can be picked up and replaced before the oil can escape. Of course the oil used must be of good quality.

There is no saving, but some waste and some danger in poor oil. Bad oil clogs the wick and the burner, besides giving off an unpleasant and very dirty vapor. Never turn down a lamp. It is meant to burn with the flame at full height, and when allowed to smolder in this way it will either smoke or smell and most certainly heat rapidly and become a distinct source of danger.

An alcohol lamp should always be placed in a shallow dish, as it is liable to run out on table or dresser and ignite. Never keep the alcohol bottle near the lighted lamp. Do not pour fresh alcohol into the tank if there is burning clear on it, for the entire contents may burst into flames.

Defining the Oyster.

"Now," asked the teacher, "who can tell me what an oyster is?" Silence for a moment, while small brows were knit in strained effort at remembrance. Then little Tommy's facial muscles relaxed and eagerly he raised his hand. "I know," he triumphantly announced. "An oyster is a fish built like a cat." —Everybody's.

She Snatched of Books.

"They're the one who kissed Miss Soper, the poetess on yesterday's automobile excursion." "Yes, that is true." "Indeed? And how did you—ah—find her?" "Miss Soper has a marked literary taste." —New Orleans Times-Democrat.

MORAL TRAINING IN THE SCHOOLS

Should Instruct Young in Regard to the Origin of Life.

SUBJECT A DELICATE ONE

Some Mothers Refuse to Discuss It With Offsprings.

How is Child to Know Unless Told by Parents?
—Interesting Paper on Important Topic.

Below we publish an excellent article on "Moral Training in the Schools," which was read by Mrs. Nippres of Bellaire at the W. C. T. U. district convention held in this city last week. The subject is well handled, and brings to light in an intelligent manner, features in a child's education and bringing up that is overlooked by a majority of parents:

"Many dissertations of varying length are appearing in the public press today on the subject of instructing the young in regard to the origin of life. But it seems to me there is a general fault of circumspection that applies to nearly all of these articles. Many of them are written from the standpoint of what the adult already knows about such matters, and not from the view point of the status and needs of the juvenile consciousness.

"Some writers appear to assume that there is something to be dreadfully ashamed of which must at all hazards be concealed from the inquiring mind of the young boy or girl. Others appear to believe that the whole truth in reference to sex with all of its deep mysterious meanings, must, if possible, be explained to the child or else some very grave fault will be committed.

"Now while I do not think there is anything in connection with the question of which we need be ashamed to talk about with our children, still I fully realize it to be a very delicate matter, and one in which mothers should be intelligently educated before they undertake to educate the child.

"One great need is helpful literature along that line. Literature made by those who deal unglorified with children and with facts: My own observations and experience along these lines is that a better class of children come from homes where this subject is discussed with them, and to speak on such subjects with those we love only serves to strengthen the bond of love and respect. In Rev. Lyman P. Powell's excellent article, on an "Acute Problem for Parents," he says, 'not every parent is as yet prepared to deal intelligently with the sex problem in the training of the child.'

"This sentence alone opens a vast field of thought and argument. If intelligent, refined parents find it difficult to cope with this problem, how about the illiterate and ignorant parent. Can the present generation of illiterate and foreign mothers be taught to train their children morally? Their offspring are the ones most needing this sexual purity instruction. Our public schools have their special instructors—the singing teacher, the drawing teacher, etc.—why not an ethical teacher? A male teacher for the boys; a female teacher for the girls. The little tots in the first grade would receive training suitable to their years; and so on up through the grades, the instructing always varying according to the age of the child. By the time a girl reached high school she would have been taught to understand all the intricacies of the female body.

"Many a wayward girl has sunk to the bottom of the pit simply because she did not understand the effect of yielding to her primeval emotions. And there are today, seemingly intelligent and refined mothers who absolutely refuse to instruct their daughters in the fundamental principles of life. If the mothers will not, and the church does not, and the school can not (because no provision is yet made for ethical training) is it any wonder that boys and girls go to the bad?

"What a wonderful blessing it would be to have all our school boys instructed in morals from the first grade up. To be shown, in glaring colors, the evil effects of sin. Let the high school boy be taught to keep himself as clean and pure as he expects his future wife to be. Let him be taught there is no sex in sin.

"Teach the present generation of children sexual purity in the public schools and two decades would witness a revolution in the morals of America. Of course it has been and will continue to be argued that if these things were taught in the schools, children would discuss them, will what of that. Children always have discussed, do, and always will discuss, the mysterious things of life, and not in very fastidious language either. How much better to do away with all mystery and make everything so plain and drill them so thoroughly in a scientific and reverent way that if they discuss at all, it will be in a proper manner.

"Better build a fence on the edge of the precipice than a hospital at the bottom of the pit. And this can be accomplished if all the up-to-date women in the land will demand ethical training in the public school."

MUST LET THE PUBLIC KNOW

Advertising the Only Paved Road to Commercial Success.

Business no Longer Comes to the Man Who Waits
For It.

Modern business practice demands that the man who has something to sell must let the public know through regular advertising channels of opportunities he has to offer prospective purchasers. The successful business man does not keep goods, he sells them. In order to sell them he must inform the people what he has and the prices that he charges for them. Competition is so keen these days that it gives the business man no time for slumber during the day's activities. He has to be on the job every minute to succeed, for any continued lapse in his business duties is liable to put him in the hands of the sheriff. Business is a very exacting master and demands the man with a business on to do his best continually. Modern methods have made efficiency the watchword in every line of endeavor and the individual who expects to make a success in the world must be alert to every opportunity for making a reputation in his particular line, for if he does not his competitor will continue to make hay while the sun shines and pocket the profits. As the world grows older the pace of business increases and only the alert man has a chance to succeed. Advertising is the only paved road to commercial success, and the man who is the best advertiser is regarded the world over as the best business man. Business no longer comes to the man who waits, it goes to the fellow who goes after it through the avenue of effective advertising. People are too busy these days to go bargain hunting, so the bargains have to be hunted through the columns of the newspapers and magazines. This great lesson has been well learned by the big business houses and also by the little ones that are regarded as successful.

A PROCLAMATION By the Governor

"The Seventh International Purity Congress will convene in Minneapolis, Minnesota, November 7 to 12, 1913. Sunday, November 9th, has been designated 'Purity Sunday,' the purpose being to create and crystallize intelligent sentiment against the greatest evils of our time, and to direct this stirred conscience into safe and sane action for the annihilation of commercialized vice and the promotion of social and personal morality."

Every state in the Union is expending vast sums of money for the purpose of caring for its tubercles, epileptics, lunatics, pampers and criminals. This is a commendable characteristic of modern civilization. In recent years the pertinent question has been asked, "Why not give careful attention to the source of these unfortunate?" Every child has the divine right to be decently born. Social and individual purity together with physical and mental vigor constitute a secure means of making this divine right possible.

The people of our great state must be awakened. They must come to an appreciation of the full meaning and importance of a Single Standard of Virtue, if they are ever to banish white-slavery and kindred crimes from society.

On Purity Sunday let all of the clergyman of all of the churches appeal to all of the people in behalf of that purity which Christ taught. Emphasize the positive side of personal righteousness. Much that is printed in books and proclaimed from the platform, in relation to sex problems, is true, yet positively pernicious. Knowledge in itself does not always make for virtue—it may for vicious conduct. Therefore, awaken and arouse a love for purity. It is the sunlight of righteousness that the youth of our land must have if they are to grow into the fullness of noble manhood and womanhood.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, this twenty-fourth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-seventh.

By the Governor: Frederick C. Martindale, Secretary of State.

STORE NOW UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

L. S. See Disposes of Grocery Business to C. Danto & Son

New Proprietors Will Enlarge Building and Add Meat and Fish Market

For some weeks it has been rumored that L. S. See was about to dispose of his grocery business to Detroit parties, but up to Saturday Mr. See announced that he had disposed of his business to C. & Son, and that day would be the last the store would be open under his ownership.

Monday and Tuesday the store was closed and inventory of stock taken, and Wednesday morning, the opening under the new management took place.

L. S. See has been in the grocery business in Charlevoix for the past 18 years. At the start he was located in the Wilbur building, now occupied by Meyers' cigar store. Eleven years ago he moved to the present quarters and during this time he has conducted one of the best grocery stores in Northern Michigan. He will from now on devote his entire time with the Charlevoix Wood & Coal Company of which he is the owner.

C. Danto & Son, under whose management the business will be conducted, are both experienced men in this line, having conducted stores in Detroit for many years. Charles Danto will assume active management, and will be joined later by his son, Benjamin, whose interest in Detroit will claim his attention for several weeks.

The store will be conducted in the same up-to-date manner, in the future as in the past. It is the intention of Messrs. Danto to enlarge the store by building a forty-foot addition at the rear end. In this they will conduct a first class meat and fish market. Both fresh and salt water fish, as well as smoked fish will be carried.

Henry B. Jacobs, who has been in the employ of the store for eighteen years under its former management, will be retained by the new owners as chief clerk. The new proprietors extend a hearty welcome to regular customers, as well as new.

Shot Off Two Toes.

Harry Milton, the 16 year old son of Henry Milton of Boyne City, lost two toes in a hunting accident last Sunday. The lad was hunting with a party of boys and in some manner, the gun was discharged, the charge of shot striking him in the foot, necessitating the amputation of two toes.

AMEND BY-LAWS AND CONSTITUTION

Retail Merchants' Association Will Make Effort to Increase Membership

Discuss Plans to Hold Three Day Harvest Festival Next Year

The Retail Merchants' Association at their last meeting amended their constitution and by-laws so as to include all business houses and all business men, and made other modifications, eliminating objectionable features, so that all may become members.

A committee of three was elected to further the association interests, believing our city needs just such an organization to look after and inquire into the business interests and maintenance of city for the benefit of the people living in and about Charlevoix.

A further committee was elected for the purpose of conducting a three day fair or bargain days sometime in October, 1914, instead of two separate days. The plans are to be able to show the agricultural richness of this part of the county, and also furnish instruction and pleasure to all. During the evenings the Western Michigan Developing Bureau will be invited to give illustrated lectures and such instruction as will be possible.

This announcement is made at this time to interest all people, and your ideas are kindly solicited. The committee in charge consists of Chas. E. See, chairman; A. J. Usher and Martin Block. The committee wishes you at all times to offer suggestions, as they desire this three day fair to be a winning feature for the mutual good of the grower and consumer.

STEPHENSON-PEARSON

Prominent Boyne Falls Young People United in Wedding

A very pretty wedding took place Wednesday evening October 29 at eight o'clock at the home of Hon. and Mrs. W. J. Pearson of Boyne Falls, when their daughter, Tate, was married to Mr. Joseph H. Stephenson. Rev. H. Shepard performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and a few intimate friends.

The ceremony took place in the living room which was prettily decorated in sunflower and pink carnations. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. G. C. Conkle sang, "Beloved, it is Morn" and Mrs. Lyle Wakeman played the wedding march.

The bride was gowned in white, brocade satin trimmed with embroidered chiffon, and wore a long tulle veil. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses. Miss Nina Pearson, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. She wore a gown of blue chiffon over blue crepe de chine and carried a formal bouquet of pink roses. Mr. Del Hill of South Boardman acted as best man.

The ring service was read, little Achash Meyers being the ring bearer. She was dressed in pink satin and carried the ring in the small basket of pink roses.

The bridal table was set in the dining room which was decorated in green and white. Assisting in the dining room were the Misses Orthella Porter, Mary Doyle, Belva Stewart and Eva Conklin. Marvel Pearson, Bessie Jaffe, Edith Union and Helen Pearson acted as ushers.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson will be at home in Boyne Falls after November first.

The Episcopal ladies will give a rummage sale November 8th, at the Robert A. Johnson building near the bridge. Besides that there will be aprons, home made rashes and baked goods on sale. Every one is invited. —Adv.

PARCEL POST HELPS TRADE

Patrons Like System and Steadily Increase Shown in Business.

Careless Packing Only Drawback to Plan—Shipping Printers.

From the inauguration of the parcel post service, business transacted through the local postoffice has shown a steady increase, both in number and bulk of incoming and outgoing packages. Merchants are taking advantage of the efficient and prompt service rendered them to deliver goods to out-of-town customers. Rural patrons are transacting all manner of business between themselves and customers in town. Landries and floral houses are using the mails more than ever before.

One of the worst things the postal authorities have to deal with is the laxity in packing shoddy patrons. Many merchants who should by this time have become acquainted with the requirements, insist on sending goods for parcel post delivery in improperly wrapped or packed garments often come wrapped only in the poorest quality of paper when they should be packed in boxes. Butter packed in crocks should never be sent farther than points in the first zone, as the crocks are liable to break. Medicine in glass bottles should be packed with corrugated paper. In fact any material which is liable to damage or breakage should be packed to guard against rough handling.

Some patrons seal their packages, evidently unaware that by so doing they make them first-class mail matter and will be charged accordingly, rather than regular parcel post rates. Stickers, sealing wax or other material which prevents postal employees from examining the contents of the package, if they so desire, should not be used unless the sender expects to pay first-class postage. It would do no good for the local office to send such matter parcel post, as the office at the other end of the route would in such a case hold up the package until the first-class postage was forthcoming.

ONE OF THE BEST EVER HELD

Such is the Verdict of the W. C. T. U.
Convention

OLD OFFICERS RE-ELECTED

With Exception of that of the Corresponding Secretary.

Mrs. Fink of Bellaire, Won Silver Medal—Many Pleading Features of the Convention.

The twenty-ninth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the eleventh district of Michigan was held at the Congregational church in Charlevoix October 28-29.

This convention was pronounced by those who ought to know, as one of the best if not the best ever held in the district as a district. It was full of good things from start to finish.

Tuesday evening was taken up with a banquet, toasts and music interspersed as follows: "Our Guests," Mrs. H. P. Parmelee; "Our County," Mrs. Gertrude Burdick; vocal duet, Mrs. A. M. Wilkinson, Mrs. Homer, "Success," Mrs. L. L. Mann, Petoskey; "The Fight, the Fighters and the Goal," Emma Lamb Barnes, Petoskey; Music by Male Quartette; "Our Public Schools," Mrs. Condon, Bellaire; "The Frank and the Home," E. S. Stacks; solo, Mrs. A. L. Coulter; "Get Down to Earth," Judge Correll; words of cheer by the city ministers; Music, Male Quartette; Benediction. Wednesday morning, the unions in the district were heard from. Many cheering things were reported. Reports from superintendents and general officers. The address by District President Mrs. P. L. Howard was especially interesting.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of last year's officers, with this exception, Mrs. May of Bellaire was elected corresponding secretary in place of Mrs. Jennie Alcox of Charlevoix, who is and has been seriously ill for some time.

Dinner and supper was served at the church. Arrangements had been made to give the visiting delegates an auto ride after dinner, but the wet weather prevented. The "Do's and Don'ts" of local unions, Mrs. Burdick and Mrs. Lockhoff, was discussed. The present status of the temperance reform, Mrs. Leont of Gaylord. What laws do I want passed? What new ones have we had this year in the interests of moral reform? Answer from the floor. These topics were discussed and made interesting. The paper by Mrs. Nippres of Bellaire, was a most excellent one. This paper is printed in this issue of the Courier, and we hope all will read and profit thereby.

A pleasing feature of the afternoon, was the song, "My Temperance Dolly," by eight or more little girls, who marched to the platform, Miss Eckinger accompanying on piano, while they sang. This was received with applause.

After the devotional exercises in the evening, conducted by Rev. Mr. Walker, ten boys from the school representing noted men, gave their opinions of the use of liquor.

Members of the normal class had a debate; Resolved: "That Charlevoix county should remain dry." The judges awarded the verdict to the affirmative side.

CHARLEVOIX IS NO EXCEPTION

Charlevoix People Come Out as Frankly Here as Elsewhere.

Charlevoix people publicly re commend Doan's Kidney Pills. This paper is publishing Charlevoix news from week to week. It is the same everywhere. Home testimony in home papers. Doan's are praised in thirty thousand signed statements, published in 3000 communities. Charlevoix people are no exception. Here's a Charlevoix statement.

J. B. Lancaster, 203 May street, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I suffered for seven years from weak kidneys. My back ached at night and when I got up in the morning, I was stiff and lame. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and my rest was broken. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got them from the Ivy Drug Store. They have done a world of good. I can rest better at night, my back is stronger and the aches and pains are gone."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Lancaster had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Preparing for the Stock Show.

Preliminaries of the International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago, November 29 to December 6, have been completed. Entries are being tabulated and the groundwork laid for the best display of food animals and draft horses ever congregated in America or elsewhere. Entries largely outnumber those of previous years, and the galaxy of pure bred and fat live stock to be assembled may never meet in the competition arena again.

Construction gangs are busy increasing show facilities, buildings are being enlarged or altered to accommodate the expansion of the exposition and unsurpassed accommodation will be furnished both exhibitors and spectators.

In consequence of impending shortage of beef, pork and mutton, producers of all over the United States and Canada are devising ways and means to expand production and on this account unusual interest is being taken in the 1913 exposition. The imperative lesson of economy in production will be taught forcibly and effectively, by the men who are now engaged in adapting their methods to changing conditions. New feeding and breeding problems will be presented in the stage of at least partial solution at this gathering.

The 1913 International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago will be so dissimilar from previous events of the same nature that both those seeking instruction and diversion will be well rewarded by attending.

Common Council

Council Chambers, Nov. 3, 1913. The Common Council for the City of Charlevoix met on the above date. Mayor Nicholls presiding. Aldermen present: Priest, Barney, Cartier and Shapton. Absent, See and Powers.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as corrected.

Moved by Ald. Shapton that the sidewalk contractor's bond of Bert Sharrow with John Zenler and William Benway as sureties be approved and license granted.

Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Priest, Barney, Cartier and Shapton. Nays, none.

The finance committee submitted the following report. Having examined the following bills report the same correct and recommend that they be all paid out of the several funds as herein stated.

THE FERNCLIFFE PITCHER

Story of a Baseball Championship

By DAVID R. BRADY

The baseball fever for the coming season was on, and the teams were being made up with unusual care, for half a dozen towns within a dozen miles of one another had formed a league with a view to disputing a championship before the diamond should be deserted in favor of the grid iron. No professional players were allowed to take part, and every provision was taken to insure an amateur series of games.

As the season advanced the different teams were found to be so evenly matched that it was impossible to predict which two would play the final for the championship prize but finally, with silver and beautiful to hold

At first the Forest Hills led, with the Sparksville team. Then the Hammond Centers and Cuthberts, except upon these teams and passed them. And so the record kept changing till midsummer, when it became evident that two teams, both of which had been at the foot of the list at the start, the Hiltons and the Ferncliffes, stood at the head of the list, and one or the other was bound to win the bat.

The reason of this was that both these teams, after the first few games had been played, got in new capitals, who took them in hand in earnest and coached them splendidly. Warfield of the Hammond Centers was particularly spoken of as having been born with a baseball in his mouth, and Kinsey of the Ferncliffes was represented when a lady as having thrown away his bottle and called for a bat. Each man weeded out the poor material he found in his team and replaced it with the best. It was said that Warfield could tell a good catcher by his walk and that Kinsey could make a twirl in three lessons of any man.

The excitement had been increasing during the playing of the games up to the point of deciding which teams should make the final struggle for the bat, and when this was determined it reached fever heat.

While there was ill feeling between the partisans, there was none whatever between the two teams. The captains were the best of friends and remained so notwithstanding the rivalry. Each told the other that he expected to be beaten, but would die games, though no such admission was allowed to get out.

instruction. Kinsey went to his pupil. For this reason it was difficult to find out who was the man being taught to twirl.

This matter seriously disturbed the betting on the championship game. Kinsey was importuned with questions about his new pitcher and how the matter would affect the game. He replied that in his own opinion his team had as good a chance for winning with the new pitcher as with the original, but he declined to give an opinion as to the result. A man named Kyle, who was betting on the game, so persisted in his questions as to who the new pitcher was, where he came from and what was his record that Kinsey, finally losing his patience, said:

"I don't know that I'll have a pitcher. I may have to take one from the team."

"That will make you a man shoot," said Kyle.

"Suppose it should?"

"In that case I'll bet you $50 you lose the game."

"I'm not betting on the game, but if you'll make the stake a present for the pitcher to cost not more than $15 against a box of cigars to cost the same amount I'll take you."

"All right," said Kyle. "It's a go." Several persons who were standing near were puzzled at this strange contract, but, interpreting it favorably for the Ferncliffes team, went away to get bets against it. The incident was spread abroad and tended to stimulate the backing of Kinsey's team, though odds were obtained, it being reported that the pitcher would come from the team as already constituted and that the game was liable to be played with a man short.

Up to the day the game was played no one had seen the new pitcher, and some contended that there would be no new pitcher; that Kinsey had a man on his team—a dark horse—who would do the twirling. Ferncliffes folks, taking their cue from the captain, made what bets they could get (at considerable odds in their favor) that the Ferncliffes would win the game with a man short.

When the teams walked out on the diamond, true enough, there were but eight men in the Ferncliffes. However, when the game was called a man emerged from the Ferncliffes quarters and advanced toward the diamond. He went straight to the pitcher's box and stood there with every spectator's eye fixed upon him. He was of medium height and appeared to be well built, though his loose uniform was not calculated to show the lines of his figure. He did not look over eighteen years old, but that was about the average age of other team. Kinsey tossed him the ball, which seemed to go to him as if he held a magnet in his palm, and the game began.

It does not come within the scope of this story to give a detailed account of the struggle for the championship between the Hiltons and Ferncliffes teams. It was closely contested from the start.

At first the Ferncliffes pitcher seemed to be very nervous and made some bad breaks. Kinsey was watching him closely and now and again spoke to him encouragingly. Reassured, he went on with his work and before the third inning began to show himself a first class twirl.

Indeed, before the game was finished it was evident that if the game was won at all it would be won through the advantage he gave his team. In the eighth inning it was a tie, and only by the brilliant pitching in the ninth did the Ferncliffes win the game.

The teams had left the grounds when Kyle stepped up to Kinsey and said:

"How about that bet between us? I suppose since you had a full team it's off."

"I've won that bet," replied Kinsey, and, twisting his hand under his jacket, he brought out a bill and handed it to Kyle.

"To lady's hat and triumphant," read Kyle. "What does it mean?"

"It means that I bought the stake for the pitcher, since I intended she should have it if I must pay for it myself. Since we won with a man short you may settle the bill."

"A man short?"

"Yes, our pitcher is not a man, but a girl, a cousin of mine, a student in the State Normal school. She's strong and athletic, and I've played ball with her often and while doing so saw in her the making of a good twirl.

She'll be at our house this evening and happy to receive callers in appropriate costume."

It is needless to say that the young lady pitcher's reception in the evening was largely attended. She was very modest and found it difficult to stand against the battery of eyes brought to bear on her. The story that the Ferncliffes pitcher was a girl had within the few hours since the finishing of the game spread so far that every one could see her in baseball costume wish to see her dressed as a woman.

The consequence was that the house was too small to receive the crowd at one time, so they kept going as well as coming.

BROOKLYN LABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON
CONSIDER ONE ANOTHER.

Romans 14:7-21—Nov. 9.
"It is good not to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth." Romans 14:21—Diaglott.

THIS lesson makes, perhaps, the strongest appeal of anything in the Bible in favor of total abstinence from intoxicating liquors. True, it is addressed only to Christians, as is the entire New Testament. No orthodox, many can appreciate the argument, and to such it will appeal along the lines of the Golden Rule.

The rule for Christian living, as taught and exemplified by the Master, is far more exacting than the Golden Rule, which is applicable to all men. Christ's followers are, of course, subject to the Golden Rule, but they voluntarily place themselves under a far more stringent rule. Their Covenant with the Lord is that in doing His will in doing righteousness, they will ever stand ready to sacrifice even life itself. This is what the Apostle means when he declared that Christ pleased not himself, but pleased the Father.

"None of Us Liveth to Himself." As for the world, they love life and die to themselves. Their own personal interests stand first with them. Only to Christ and the Church could these words apply, for none others have entered into such a Covenant of self-sacrifice, giving up present pleasures in exchange for a promise of a spiritual life hereafter, in the resurrection.

These are to live to the Lord—to His will and not their own, to serve Him and not self, to lay down their lives in fighting against sin. When these die, they die into the Lord in the sense that every member of the Body of Christ must die to the flesh before the entire body can be glorified. The Apostle proceeds to show that all judgment is vested in the hereafter. Each member of the Church must ultimately stand the inspection of the Head of the Church. Loyalty to the Head of the Church will eventually bring membership in the glorious Church beyond the veil.

Let Us, Then, Judge Ourselves. The Apostle's argument is, that in stead of judging fellow-members of the conventional body of Christ, we should be full of sympathy for them. We do not know thoroughly their trials and difficulties. Our keen sense of justice should find its principal exercise in self-criticism and in watchfulness not to do anything that would stumble a brother or discourage him, or cause him to fall away from the faith.

How many find it easy to excuse self, while they are very critical in respecting others' shortcomings? Our Lord warned His people against such an attitude, saying, "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged. If you are hypocritical and wish to measure others up to the full standard of perfection, the Lord will properly measure you by that high standard."

The Lord does not wish His people to think lightly of weaknesses and failures. He is, on the contrary, setting a high standard of love, sympathy and kindness. Love is the principal thing in God's sight.

"Nothing Unclean of Itself." While the Jew was forbidden the use of swine, rabbits, oysters, etc., these restrictions were tests of his obedience to God; just as the forbidden fruit was thereafter made to Adam and Eve. The Apostle's argument is that to the Jew who died to all hope of attaining eternal life through the Law Covenant and who became united to Christ, the restrictions of the Law Covenant would no longer be binding? And, of course, to the Gentile, who never was under the Law Covenant, its restrictions would have no application what so ever.

But if any man's reasoning faculties were so twisted that he thought himself under obligations, he would responsibly, according to his judgment. To rebel against his conscience would mean that he had willingly committed sin for he would be wrong in doing what he thought to be wrong, in over harmless matter might in itself.

The brother who is strong mentally, morally and physically should guard against from whatever would stand another. Should we not be glad to lay down our lives for the brethren? We should do so not so ready to abstain from using trifling liberties for a weaker brother's sake, for whom Christ died? This is a strong argument.

Better preserve others from temptation too strong for them by faithfully abstaining from everything that might appear evil in others' sight, how right it might be in your own sight and how correct your own judgment of the Divine Law on the subject.

The advantages connected with abstinence, God's Kingdom consist of righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit which is by prohibiting members of the Kingdom class.

Auction Sale.

M. T. Hayes, of Chicago, Ill., who has for a number of years bought stock throughout Charlevoix county and northern Michigan, and who is well known as a dealer in live stock, announces through the columns of this issue that he will offer for sale on Saturday, Nov. 8, 1913. One car load (30 head) of young heifer cattle. These are mostly two year olds and many of them will be fresh in two to three months time. They are well bred and marked and of the Guernsey and Holstein variety and 3/4 blood or better.

This is an excellent opportunity for the farmers and dairymen of this section of the country to secure young cattle for breeding purposes and the betterment of their stock. Everyone interested in good cattle should attend this sale. See the advertisement on another page of this issue.

At Annual State Conference to Be Held in Saginaw

Every Year Has Shown a Marked Increase in Attendance

What promises to be a most inspiring sight and noteworthy gathering will be the one thousand or more, older boys of Michigan in annual conference November 28-30, in Saginaw. This conference is conducted under the auspices of the state committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Every year there has been an increasing number of boys at these gatherings from all parts of Michigan. Last year seven hundred and fifty were present from one hundred and twenty towns and it is impossible to estimate the influence and power these gatherings have had on the manhood of the state.

The key word of the coming conference is co-operation and only through the co-operation of the state committee, the city and county secretaries and other interested parties has it been possible to bring together many of these older boys. This conference should result in a closer co-operation of all agencies touching the life of the boyhood of Michigan, in the extending of His Kingdom among the boys by boys.

The program this year is an exceptionally strong one. Several speakers of national reputation such as Mr. A. E. Roberts of New York who spoke at the organization banquet of the Charlevoix County association just about a year ago; Mr. C. C. Robinson, international secretary for employed boys, also of New York; Mr. J. M. Artman of Chicago, dean of boys' work, Y. M. C. A. Institute and Training school; Captain Ketchum, the all-American foot ball star of Yale, and other leaders have been invited.

Free entertainment from Friday night until Monday morning will be provided for all older boys from fifteen to twenty years of age. Every boys' club, church club, Sunday school class, Y. M. C. A. group, high school class or young people's society is allowed to send two boys who are fifteen to twenty years old. At least twenty older boys and some adults will make the trip from Charlevoix county going Friday noon following Thanksgiving and returning Monday.

Four counties, Charlevoix, Ionia, St. Joe and Gratiot, are to have a place on the conference program. Wilson Zimmerman of Boyne City has been chosen as the representative from this county and he will speak on "Co-operation Between the High School and Grammar School Boys."

Further information may be had from the secretary of the County Y. M. C. A.

DOGS BARRED IN WOODS

State Game Warden Oates Orders Deputies to Shoot loose Canines on Sight.

William R. Oates, state game warden, has issued to his deputies orders to enforce strictly the law making it a misdemeanor to have dogs in the woods during the season for hunting deer. Last year when the open season for deer and partridge were identical, dogs were permitted in the woods when they were in personal charge of hunters. This year it will not be legal to hunt partridges with dogs during the deer season, November 10-30. Dogs running at large in the woods during the prohibited season will be shot on sight.

I have now the best assortment of Ladies Fur sets and prices far below what they sell for. 45th Benj. Brown.

SCOTIA GOES DOWN

White Brothers Lumber Boat Sinks After Striking Rock Sunday Night.

Sunday evening the steamer Scotia belonging to the W. H. White Lumber Co., of Boyne City, struck a rock in the Detroit river just opposite Amherstburg, Canada, 16 miles below Detroit, and sank with a full cargo of lumber.

She was being towed by the steamer Arizona, also of the same company, who took on board all of the crew of the sinking boat with the exception of Captain Peterson, who returned to Detroit.

The Scotia has just received several thousand dollars in repairs on her preparatory to putting in dry dock. The boat was a total loss but her cargo was well insured.

DEATH OF MRS. McDERMOTT

Pioneer Resident Called Away After a Lingering Illness.

Mrs. C. A. McDermott age 71, a pioneer of this county passed away Monday afternoon at 3:15 after a lingering illness at the home of her daughter Mrs. Delia Martin on Petoskey avenue.

Mrs. McDermott was born in England in 1842 and came to this country when a child. She is survived by a son Arthur of Ottawa, Ohio, and four daughters, Mrs. Delia Martin of this city, Mrs. Josephine Twissman, Mrs. Sadie Mesler and Clara McDermott of Angels Camp, California.

Funeral services were held at the Catholic church Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock and interment in the Catholic cemetery. Mrs. McDermott was a true Christian and will be missed by a host of sorrowing friends.

HIS 61ST BIRTHDAY

Dr. L. B. Bartlett Pleasantly Surprised by a Host of Friends.

Thursday evening about fifty friends and neighbors met at the home of Dr. L. B. Bartlett to remind him of his 61st birthday. Progressive 50 was played until 11 o'clock after which a dainty lunch was served. Prizes were awarded to W. E. Parmelee and Mrs. W. R. Barney, Mrs. Elston and A. J. Usher receiving the consolations, which were a fine sample of ordinary garden herbs, tied nicely with a bow of blue baby ribbon.

After the excellent lunch Dr. Bartlett was present with a fine rocking chair as a reminder of the esteem in which he is held. The surprise was a complete one, and the evening greatly enjoyed by all present.

D. B. U.

(Detroit Business University)

The oldest and most influential business training school in Michigan is giving today the most modern and thorough courses which fully qualify its graduates for high grade positions.

Tuition costs more in this school than in many others, but the results prove it to be the cheapest in the end. Low grade work and cheap instruction are found in cheap schools. The D. B. U. is not in that class.

We invite you to write for our curriculum and to spend six months with us during the present school season.

In Memoriam

At a meeting of Lombard Post No. 170 G. A. R. of Petoskey, Mich., October 14, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: Death, the grim Victor and final conqueror has again invaded our ranks and removed life's activities of our most respected and worthy comrade, Henry C. Plinn, who died, following a surgical operation at his home at Charlevoix, Michigan, October 12, 1913.

Comrade Plinn served two enlistments in the army beginning October 12, 1891 and terminating February 29th, 1894. He was a member of Baxter post of Charlevoix, Mich., until its dissolution and joined Lombard Post January 14, 1912. He was vice-president of the Old Soldiers and Sailors Association of Charlevoix county, for many years a captain of steamers on the lakes and a highly respected citizen of the community in which he lived.

Resolved that in our weak way we tender our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved family.

To his widow may the knowledge that is hers, of a life well spent, replete with memories of deeds well done, become as a solace and benediction.

W. F. Lawton, Adjutant, Lombard Post No. 170, G. A. R. Petoskey, Michigan.

40th Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. James O'Brien entertained a few of their friends Monday evening, the event being their 40th wedding anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien received many handsome presents, tokens of remembrance of the occasion.

Care of the Auto Clutch.

In order to keep a multiple disk clutch in the best condition the oil should be periodically drained from the case, for it is evident that the infinite particles of metal which are worn from the disks are bound to accumulate and prove harmful to the whole mechanism unless precautions are taken, says the Automobile Dealer and Repairer. The case should then be thoroughly washed with kerosene or gasoline, after which a new supply of oil may be poured into it. It is well also to inspect all nuts and joints occasionally. For the leather faced cone nuts, if it be "grabbly" or "fierce," or enstar oil, if it slips, is an old and valuable prescription. In time it may need a new facing, new springs under the facing or a new underspring or adjustment of the original one as remedies for the faults mentioned above, which are practically the only ones a clutch will develop.

Married at Kalamazoo.

Miss Mand Black, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Black was married to John E. Wilson of Kalamazoo at that place, Saturday, October 25th, where they will make their future home.

The young couple have a host of friends who join in hearty congratulations.

Social a Success.

The pumpkin social held at the Nowland school house Friday night was a success. Over $21.55 was taken in and with what the teacher has on hand will enable the school to purchase a new organ. The teacher and children are very grateful to those who so liberally assisted in the event.

HOUSEKEEPERS Must be Watchful

For great efforts are being made in this vicinity to sell baking powders of inferior class, made from alum acids and lime phosphates, both undesirable to those who require high-grade cream of tartar baking powder to make clean and healthful food.

The official Government tests have shown Royal Baking Powder to be a pure, healthful, grape cream of tartar baking powder, of highest strength, and care should be taken to prevent the substitution of any other brand in its place.

Royal Baking Powder costs only a fair price per pound, and is cheaper and better at its price than any other baking powder in the world.

TO HAVE SEVERAL LARGE ORCHARDS

Plans Now Under Way For Several in Emmet County.

Stark Brothers, One of the Oldest Nursery Firms to Locate There.

Stark Brothers, one of the oldest nursery firms in the United States, who have been identified with the commercial development of the apple industry in the northwest, have decided to open an office in Pellston in order to interest the farmers and new settlers in high-grade commercial orchards. H. W. Underwood, of Antrim, Ill., an experienced orchardist, will be the company's representative in Pellston and for Emmet county. A number of Illinois people have recently purchased several hundred acres in this vicinity and Mr. Underwood will have charge of their operations as they expect to set out a considerable portion of their land to fruit the coming season.

Stark Brothers are the originators of many famous brands, including Stark's Delicious, which brings the highest market prices. They make a specialty of assisting farmers to develop commercial orchards producing the very finest quality of fruit. It is only a question of time when the apple and cherry industry in Emmet county will become as important as it now has in the northwest. The growers here can produce apples of finer quality and flavor and they have a tremendous advantage in the matter of freight rates.

Mr. Underwood will locate permanently in Pellston and will have the necessary equipment for clearing land, planting groves and caring for same for non-residents. This feature of the apple industry has been developed to a great extent in the northwest and has been largely responsible for the rapid development of the industry there.—Pellston Journal.

PEACH DAINTIES.

LUNCHEON MENU.

Egg Sandwiches.
String Bean Salad.
Peach Meringue.
Sugar Cakes.
Buttermilk.

DESSERTS light and dainty are appropriate for the summer luncheon. Many such may be made with fresh peaches, as suggested here.

Useful as Cake Filling.
Peach Cream.—Pare and cut into small pieces four ripe peaches. Put them into a bowl with a cupful of powdered sugar and the white of one egg. Beat well until this becomes a thick, smooth cream. Serve in sherbet cups with a dash of whipped cream. This makes a delicious cake filling.

A Rich Pastry.
Peach Meringue.—Take a dozen peaches, pare, stew and press them through a colander. Line two deep pie dishes with puff paste, sweeten the peaches to taste, fill the paste even with the fruit and bake in a quick oven. While the whites of six eggs and six tablespoonsful of sugar to a stiff froth, add a teaspoonful of vanilla, heap on the pies and brown in the oven.

With Gelatin and Nuts.
Peach Fruit.—A delicious way to serve peaches is to crush them and place in cocktail glasses with peach gelatin. Top with generous quantity of whipped cream and maraschino cherries, walnut meats or crushed macaroons.

Peaches and Cake.

Peach Custard.—Beat half a cupful of milk in a double boiler, dissolve a tablespoonful of cornstarch in a little water and stir into milk. Beat an egg yolk and a tablespoonful of sugar until creamy, then add a little of the hot milk, stir smooth, then pour back into the milk and stir until smooth. Add a pinch of salt to white of an egg and beat until stiff. Stir into hot custard; beat until smooth. Remove from fire and beat from time to time until cooled, then prepare dessert as follows: Take sherbet cups and place upright in them three halves of lady fingers; pour in one rounded tablespoonful of sliced peaches, then enough custard to fill cup two-thirds full, then top off with some whipped cream and place a candied cherry on top.

RURAL SCHOOLS IN BAD SHAPE

Pupils in Many Sections Are Under Sanitary Conditions.

AUDITOR LASHER EXPLAINS

Michigan Educational Institutions Occupy Fourteenth Place.

Boys and Girls Spending from Four to Six Hours in Buildings Which Are a Menace to Their Health.

A surprising revelation of improper conditions under which the education of children in rural communities in Michigan is conducted was made last week in a statement issued by G. S. Lasher, auditor in the department of public instruction of Michigan. Lasher pointed out that, although Michigan is one of the richest states in the nation, with superb natural resources and a population ranking high in intelligence and culture, its schools rank fourteenth among those of the country. A survey of the conditions in Michigan, Lasher said, revealed the fact that a vast majority of the boys and girls are spending from four to six hours every school day in buildings which are a menace to their health.

"In 82 of the 83 counties of Michigan there are 7,334 rural one and two-room schools," Lasher declared. "Of this number, 2,975 possess heating and ventilating systems, 419 basement furnaces and 888 jacketed stoves. The children in 3,772 schools, or more than 50 per cent suffer from stove heated rooms which are inadequately ventilated. Only 1,290, or approximately 18 per cent have drinking fountains, while only 3,006, or less than one-half, even boast of cups. Only 151 safeguard the children from the dangers of the common roller towel by the use of paper towels, and 140 by the use of individual towels.

"Comparatively little attention is paid to the correct seating of children. In only 435 schools, or less than 6 per cent are found adjustable seats and desks. Only 1,709 schools, or about 23 per cent have their seats and desks properly arranged—the same sized seats and desks in the same rows from front to back. In 3,959 schools there are not sufficient numbers of small-sized seats and desks to supply the demand, and thousands of youngsters have to sit all day with their feet swinging in the air, and they must distort their backs in order to write or figure because the desks are too high. Small chairs and tables are provided for the little ones in only 752 schools.

"The lighting of the school houses in causing hundreds of teachers and scholars to become spectacle wearers. In 837 rooms children are forced to face windows, while a similar fate falls to teachers in 2,575 schools. The eyesight of a vast majority of children is impaired by cross lights because there are windows on both sides of the room. Schools which have lighting entirely from the left side are limited to 242, while 360 are lighted from the left and rear. These injurious lighting conditions are modified in only 933 schools by the hanging of shades at the bottom, so that they can be pulled up, rather than down. Correct decoration of the walls is found in 2,072 schools."

In regard to improving conditions, Lasher stated there is not a one-room building in the state but that can be remodeled and improved to meet the health and comfort requirements at a cost of less than $500.

"State officials should have authority," he declared, "to condemn buildings that are unsanitary or unsafe, and to require certain improvements and equipment that would tend to improve health conditions.

If this country is to possess the quality of citizenship which will guarantee its supremacy intellectually, commercially, artistically, physically and morally, it must require not only compulsory education, but compulsory conditions under which to gain such education."

Bay Shore Men Have a Deer Out of Season—Caught as It Swam to Shore

The Men Have Refused to Divulge the Name of the Party Responsible for Its Death

Seven of the eight men alleged to have captured a deer at Bay Shore as it swam to shore in the bay on the evening of October 14, appeared before Justice Kreiger in Petoskey Monday evening and reduced their bank-roll of $12.50 each as a result of their fun.

The deer, it seems, was captured on the water about dark and placed in a nearby baro by the men and later one of the party killed it. The meat was supposed to have been divided among the party and each enjoyed the exceptional treat of the delicious for a few meals.

Deputy Game and Fish Warden C. N. Smith of Petoskey, who has charge of the patrol boat in the upper lake waters was in Boyne City and received a quiet tip which resulted in his securing the names of the men and their immediate prosecution. Each one refuses to state who killed the deer and there are likely to be further developments.

Seven of the eight men who paid are, John Deschmier, Wolf Glaeser, Zina F. Matthews, Oscar Ford, John Lett, Will Grand and Moses James. Frank Newman alleged to be a member of the party has not made a settlement but is expected to do so any time. The men were given the minimum fine of $10.00 and $2.50 costs.

CITY STRUCK BY SEVERE STORM

Heavy Gale Off Lake Lasts Three Days—Lots of Damage Reported.

Miss M. Bennett's Cottage on Michigan Avenue Most Seriously Damaged by Wind.

Last Saturday the community in and around Charlevoix were made the victims of an unusual storm. The storm blew off the lake and steadily gained in velocity until Sunday night when it reached its height. Monday morning it was no uncommon thing to hear people tell of the quantities of snow that had forced its way through under doors and windows.

Sunday night Miss M. Bennett's cottage on Michigan avenue was badly damaged, the 50 foot porch was torn off and blown upon the roof and a chimney knocked down while the corners of the building were badly twisted. Monday the porch was blown off the roof again.

Hooker's new garage suffered the throes of the storm, the front part of the roof being completely torn off the building. Several of the cement blocks were torn out on the east side of the building.

James Wyers, Sr., reports that his barn was completely blown down. Frank N. Metcalf's home on Park avenue had a small porch torn off the house. A window in Walter Taylor's grocery store was blown out also the skylights in the building occupied by Fred Meyers and the building occupied by Minnie Baldwin.

A wind storm insurance covers all this damage. See Myrtle Young & Son.—Adv. 161

The Episcopal ladies will give a rummage sale November 15th, in the Robert A. Johnston building near the bridge. Besides that there will be aprons, home made candies and baked goods on sale. Every one is invited.—Adv. 461

THE STATE TAX RATE THIS YEAR

Will Be $3.75 as Compared to $2.38 in 1912.

Meaning a Total of $8,589,520.78 on an Assessed Valuation of $2,288,000,000.

The state tax rate per $1,000 assessed valuation this year, will be $3.75, as compared to $2.38 in 1912. In other words, the state tax this year will be $8,589,520.78 on an assessed valuation of $2,288,000,000. Last year the state tax was $5,452,308.15, or $3,137,212.63 less than it will be this year. Auditor General Feltner is authority for these figures.

It will cost the taxpayers of Michigan 30 cents on every $1,000 assessed valuation for the maintenance of the penal institutions for the year, or $816,146.80. The charitable institutions will cost $680,980, or 31 cents on every $1,000 valuation; educational institutions $118, amounting to $2,975,363.33; hospitals for insane, 75 cents, amounting to $1,904,605.18; military department, armories, etc., 11 cents, amounting to $211,712.11; highway department, 30, amounting to $680,000; legislature, 5, amounting to 104,000; state boards, such as labor and food department, dairy department, etc., 17, amounting to $377,318.36; general state purposes not covered by appropriations of the legislature, 46, amounting to $1,039,785.

The increase in the rate this year is largely because state institutions were deprived of the entire amounts appropriated by the legislature of 1911, through Gov. Osborn's plan to cut down state expenses. As a result the legislature of 1913 had to take care of the deficiencies.

Died Early Monday.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dan McSamba died early Monday morning of malnutrition, age about seven weeks. Funeral services were held at 10:00 a. m., Tuesday, with interment in the Catholic cemetery.

GOING OUT OF BUSINESS

M. A. Levinson & Co. Will Close Out Stock—Offer Many Bargains.

Store Closed Friday to Mark Down Goods—Sale Starts Saturday at 9:00 a. m.

After being in business in this city for the past 15 years and having enjoyed the patronage and good will of all in this community, The M. A. Levinson & Co. dry goods and clothing store will go out of business. On another page of this issue will be found an announcement giving particulars.

During the business career of this firm they have always tried to carry the best of goods, and no doubt the public will be able to secure some of the biggest bargains ever offered in this city. The closing of this store means that Charlevoix loses one of its best business houses.

Friday of this week the store will be closed to mark down the goods and the sale will open at 9:00 a. m. Saturday morning and continue until practically all the stock is sold. No special plans have been made as to what the firm will do in the future.

Mr. and Mrs. Levinson announce their home at 114 E. Hurbit avenue for sale.

HINKLEY AND SCOTT IN RACE

For Congress in the Eleventh Congressional District.

Rep. Hinkley Tells of Political Situation Existing in Northern Michigan.

"Because of the complex situation in regard to candidates the coming year will bring forth many new aspirants for political honors in Michigan," said Representative D. H. Hinkley, in a recent interview with a representative of this paper. "For governor in the republican primaries sentiment in the northern end of the state has not crystallized as yet, and with two candidates from Wayne county waging contest, thus splitting the heavy vote in that county, it is very possible that an upstate man may break in with a chance to win out."

"Owing to the redistricting of the congressional districts, made necessary by the provisions of the constitution, we find ourselves in the new Eleventh district, with the Bay City end of the old Tenth district dropped, and in its place seven counties in the upper peninsula added. So far the contest in the lower peninsula for the republican nomination seems to be a merry race between Representative D. H. Hinkley, of Emmet county, and Senator Frank D. Scott, of Alpena county. It is interesting to note that both aspirants were elected to the legislature for the first time in 1911, are of about the same age, and have held equally important positions at Lansing, Senator Scott having been president pro tem of the senate and Representative Hinkley, having been chairman of the ways and means committee of the house of representatives. At this time it appears that Scott will in all probability run well on the east side of the district, and Hinkley will run equally well on the west side of the district, with Cheboygan county holding a vote which may be the balance of power."

"For state senator from the twenty-ninth district, former Representative W. J. Pearson, of Boyne Falls, is being urged to enter the primaries by his friends. So far no other names have been mentioned for this important position in the republican primaries, and it is very likely that the excellent reputation made by Pearson while at the capitol will aid his candidacy."—Petoskey Evening News.

MORNING TRAIN

On the Pere Marquette to Be Resumed November 17.

After a long, hard and continuous fight by the citizens of this community and those adjoining us the Pere Marquette Railroad Company has at last decided to resume the morning train service from Traverse City to Petoskey, thus giving Charlevoix a train from the south due here about 10:30 a. m.

Since the discontinuation of the morning train by the Pere Marquette it has been impossible for a person to go from Charlevoix to Petoskey in one day, making it very disagreeable for people making train connections or transacting business in our sister city.

Last Friday afternoon Agent Martin of the Pere Marquette at Petoskey announced that the service would be resumed on Monday, November 17.

Wed in December

Word was received here Tuesday that Lowell J. Smith and Miss Ruth Caldwell Van Winkle, both of Grand Rapids are to be married December 1, 1913. Miss Van Winkle is a 1911 graduate of the Grand Rapids Central high school while Mr. Smith who is well known in Charlevoix, was a graduate of the 1906 class in this city. Mr. Smith is a salesman for the J. & E. Tisch Automobile Accessories Firm and is well known in Grand Rapids Automobile circles. Miss Van Winkle is one of the younger vocalists of Grand Rapids.

Auction Sale.

On page 6 of this issue will be the announcement of Mrs. Roy M. Kane's Auction Sale, on Thursday, Nov. 20, at her farm six miles east of Charlevoix, or two miles south of Burgess. E. B. Ward, Auctioneer, W. J. Rachow, Clerk.

On page eight will be found the announcement of the sale of Frank and Lillian Brown at their farm 4 miles southwest of Charlevoix on the Norwood road on Friday November 21. W. E. Byers, Auctioneer, E. A. Butler, Clerk.

LOCAL HUNTERS GO UP NORTH

Large Number of Charlevoix Citizens go to the Upper Peninsula.

Each One Hopes to Fill His License—Several Groups Left This Week.

When the deer hunting season opened November 10, Charlevoix had sent a large number of her citizens to the north woods to help swell the estimated army of 200,000.

Last Friday night Bert Olney, A. J. Hamilton, George Stafford, Hubert Ackert, Charles See, J. H. Mifflord, Tom Shepard and Jop Worden were taken to Hessel's in the Booth Fisheries boat by A. Hanshaw. On Monday O. D. Hammond and Richard Lewis left to join the other parties at Hessel's.

Monday afternoon A. J. Usher and Dr. J. A. Auld left for Korklock, on Lake Gogebic, Ontonagon county. Tuesday the rest of the party, Steward Stevenson, Will Stevenson and Charles Pratt, left to join them at Korklock.

A. L. Fitch and L. E. Benton left for Roscommon and will endeavor to supply themselves with the delicious meat. With a large number of Charlevoix citizens who went into the woods earlier to trap until the deer season opened, and the large number who have just left for the woods Charlevoix has sent the largest delegation of hunters in her history.

Fire at Norwood.

Last Sunday morning at 2:30 the store occupied by Allen Campbell, at Norwood was totally destroyed by fire. The origin of the fire is unknown and the property was partially covered by insurance.

CO-OPERATION MOST ESSENTIAL

Town and Country Working in Harmony For Better Things.

THINKING MEN ARE ACTIVE

Selfishness May for a Time Earn Dividends, But Not For Long.

Great Development in Past Decade—Greater Things in Store for the Future—Wonderous Farm Development.

The spirit that makes towns is not alone in its work. It must have another spirit working alongside in complete harmony and that is the spirit that makes country life better.

A great responsibility rests upon the residents of towns but fully as great importance should be placed with the occupants of the farms.

The men in the country, and there are legions of them, who are most earnest in their efforts to better conditions, to improve upon the present plan of distribution, to market their produce in a more profitable way, the men who are reading most and studying hardest and spending a part of their time in the granges and farmers' club—these are not habitual patrons of houses hundred of miles away from the scenes of their activities. The thinking men of the farms realize that if they build up permanently they must begin at the bottom, they must turn their money over faster at home, and they realize to gain co-operation.

Rural development has achieved wonderful things during the past decade. Even greater accomplishments are just ahead, and while local tradesmen must meet changing conditions and must keep fully abreast with the time to meet modern requirements, the producers, if the country district are to march ahead, must get over to provincial idea that every man who is a middleman is in the business for unjust exploitation. If the producers do business on a business basis, they will often-times find that their cash will buy for them fully as much in their own home trading center as it will when sent to the far away metropolis. The home dealers help pay the taxes here in the regions where the money is produced. They are first to lend their aid to worthy public movements. They are ever ready to spend their money on the things in which their neighbors are interested and without them the producers will soon be called upon to meet ever growing public means away beyond what they can afford.

It is good business to be broad. Selfishness may for a time earn dividends, but not for long.

If we are to prosper we must be glad to see the other fellow prosper and the whole trend of the times is meant to be toward bringing into every day play the principles that stand for brotherhood.

The spirit that makes the country means more to rural development than anyone can see in the present day. The men and women of tomorrow must be educated toward the farm instead of away from it and so long as the profits are sent away that should stay at home, home people will have trouble in interesting young people to become producers.

The spirit that makes the country is one that must be cultivated, it must be nurtured. More thought must be given to this subject in the coming years if we are to have the close communion that spells prosperity and better living for all. The spirit that makes towns is needed, the spirit that makes the country is even more necessary.

THIS is the tale of a Kamuk whaler, a whiz-cash and a missionary, having to do with a bloodthirsty away out on the edge of things, involving white men's passions and the smoldering hate of the Eskimo, as it was told to me by a revenue man while we were steeped in laughter, music, clinking glasses and the muffled clang of Broadway trolleys.

I had lamented the urbanity of life, the paucity of the pastoral. What though the duck had been delicious and the salad perfect? The glorious breath of the city was in my nostrils, and I railed at its refinement. So, led by my mood, my friend's discountenance, out into the distant reaches till I felt the heave of shunting decks, smelt the sea spume and heard the sail air whirling through the rigging.
North and west we drifted through the smoky seas where the sea parrots serenade, up toward the Diomedes, where the roar of the hull walrus draws the heat of the surf, and there, out of the tropic blue of his bay,
he wove this story of the arctic:

At the tip of that point of land which leans farthest out and whispers across to the moss garbed hills of Siberia nestles a native village. Since the earliest days no whaling ship has passed it without pause to trade, for it is the most prosperous of all the towns from Dutch Harbor to Point Barrow.

The strait teams with walrus, deer range the ridges behind, salmon clothe the rivers, and the cry of geese in the slow summer air is like a noisy harsh.

The June midday, as the yellow sun slipped shallowly below the horizon, a Hawaiian schooner anchored aboard the sand spit and was soon surrounded by the curious populace.
They came off in flocks and flocks bearing gifts, things to barter furs, and pointed to their little fronthead.

They had not troubled him, and the captain, under it up a cask of whisky and launched it. So it was but a short time until the sailors were in possession of the Eskimo spade and they in turn roared the drunken hurrahs. The schooner's master was a half breed, smart, thick and dominating. As time drew along for some reason he grew enraged at a native and struck him. That one, big and manly and aroused from his customary good nature, drew a knife and made at the master. Doubtless white blood would have run had not a whale snatched a bludgeon and beaten down the Eskimo, at which his fellow-men drew together threateningly. The crew, who had likewise become imbued, charged them with every weapon handy and swept them overboard, all but a dozen, who fought back doggedly. These, forced down the deck inch by inch, sought refuge beneath the forward deck, where they crouched, thoroughly terrified.

The sailors, drunk with victory and the blood lust, seized blunderbuss and teaching tin, dragged them out one by one. As each was brought forth they knocked in his head and threw him overboard—eleven in all.
Then, gilded with the kill, their decks awash with blood they weighed anchor and sailed away like pirates or the Spanish main. In this fashion his trek was south at Prince of Wales.

came finally, and a queer lot I never saw—big, clean limbed and clothed in royal furs, but sullen—yes, very sullen—and when they saw the two white men and the woman they murmured among themselves.

"The captain knew their story—he knew everything that had to do with Alaska—and he called them together below the bridge.

"These people have come to live with you," he said. "Be good to them."

"There was considerable talk. Then one spoke up in his native tongue:

"We don't want the white men and their squaw."

"They're good men," said Healy.
"They'll teach you many things and cure your children when they're sick."

"We don't want the white men," said the spokesman again. "Take them away. If they stay they will be sorry.
Maybe they will die. Who knows?"

"The old man's eyes gloomed and his voice raised a tone as he spoke.

"If anything happens to them I'll blow up your village. I'll shoot your houses to pieces."

"They had never seen a cannon before and began to laugh at this.

"No," said they: "we are not children to be frightened with fools' talk.
The village is too far away, and the ship can't come close to land. No, you must keep the white folks yourself."

"At that the captain made them climb the rigging, every one of them, and had no hand the bow gun.

"Shoot low, lieutenant," he said.
So I did. The shot struck halfway to the shore. A laugh came from aloft.

"What did we say?" they cried. "The big white gun is no good. You can't scare us we are men."

"Load her again," said Healy. I did, and this time the laughter was not so loud, for the ball struck close to the beach. They were unconvinced, however, and jeered us mightily till the commander said:

"Lieutenant, that big cache to the east of the village."

"Aye, aye, sir," I sighed.

"They had caught the old man's tone this time and ceased to chatter.
The deck was very still as I fired again.

"The cache was a rule log shelter, perched high on posts and standing well out from the village. It was a good shot. The target smashed like a clay pigeon. We saw women and children scurrying out of the huts back toward the hills.

"The men came down on the deck quietly, and they were not laughing now, but more sullen faces I never saw.

"Don't shoot again," they said. "Let the white men and the squaw come ashore." And that's how we landed our missionaries.

During the next few years the missionary came to the village frequently, teaching, mending, etc., and it seemed that the white man was getting more and more popular.

But, behind the scenes, a much less pleasant picture was being painted.

Particularly and therefore the boy, who with them, a half-breed, earnestly and treated he charges with a fact that understood, of which the other, Mathison, seemed totally devoid. However, he was eventually sent down the coast to Fort Clarence in charge of a government reducer herd, leaving the Koutchikan and his wife at Prince of Wales.

Now, the spirit of his chief dwells as strongly in a native child's life as in one of our own, but no matter what faults are committed, the Indian never forgets his offspring. This, then, the spirit of reverence is one of the most touching traits of the aborigine, and not only does he never lift a hand against his little ones, but violence from another is a deadly affront.

The children of this village did not like Mathison, and he began to feel an unrest in his school which he could not fathom. One morning he found a rude caricature of himself on the blackboard. It was most dispiriting to his dignity and led to severe rebuke. A few nights later some one threw pebbles at his house door.
Again, the schoolhouse was broken open and chalk taken out. The specialists of dire punishments, and with the thing prevailed until he grew maddened out of all proportion to the gravity of the offenses.

And he treated them with a patient good humor the little ones would have exhausted their resources of annoyance, but they irritated him eventually till one day in an outburst he threatened death to any one who approached his house at night. His residence sat well up on the mountain above the village, and for some time thereafter he slept in peace. But the ill-will with the schoolhouse continued, and one day, becoming frenzied, he made public announcement that should he catch any one forcing it upon he would shoot him.

Some time after three little boys, sneaked with stealth, spring the door to the place, parading some chalk. Later as they thought of the master's threat the gravity of it smote them, and they became frightened.

"Al, we have done a very bad thing," said the eldest one, who was but eleven and time of the left leg.

"So, but won't the master be angry?"
said the second, blushing. "How he will shout in the morning!"

"What will he do?" the third one questioned.

"He will kill us," answered the eldest, speaking from the wisdom of his thirteen years. "He said so."

Whereat the other two went a tremble and a panic seized them.

"Yes, he will kill us," they said, and waited to run home to their mothers, but were checked by the eldest.

Now, it is not good to threaten a Indian with death. Complaint he will stand, those he will suffer and veneration even, but beware of the threat, for he is serious in his mood and has no conception of a bluff. So the preservation of his life within him, like the wolf, he is quick to snap.

The oldest boy, in whom lay deepest rooted the story of the eleven white boys, spoke to the other.

"There is but one thing to do. We must kill him first. Come, let us do it." So they went back to the village.

It was the middle of August, and the nights were growing dark. Thus they were unaided, particularly as most of the men were gone hunting.

The leader stole a whale gun from his father's cache, a great weapon, throwing an explosive bomb; the second sneaked from his home an old musket, relic of Russian days, with a ball half the size of his little fist, while the third could find only a sledgehammer.

Surely there has never been a more curious spectacle than that of the three brown children on their mission of death, winding up the hill, hushed with the tragedy of the soft, sweet summer night, the mind of each glamored with the hatred of the other race, the grim tale of their slaughtered fathers and the fear of the misad-venture's threat urging them. First crept the young leader in the tremendous dignity of his bravado, the second hardly large enough to lug the long barreled musket, and then the pitiful, halting boy with the withered thigh, clasp the hammer to his ankle, his limbs leaving a trail in the dust like the track of an accusing finger.

They headed their weapons, for this knack they had learned with their first speech, and as they were about to aim with certainty, they approached the door and placed the muzzles on either side of the knob.
Bracing themselves, they cocked their guns. At a sign the little one raised the sledge and beat a tattoo. It awoke the two within, and the man arose. He spoke:

"Who is there?"

"Now," whispered the boy with the whale gun, and the two reports bounced out into the night, rolling down to the village, and the record dunk them into the sand. They arose, but heard nothing within save the frightened cries of the woman, and then the horror of their deed stole coldly into their veins, and they went shaking down the mountain and into their mothers' huts.

They awaited the sure alarm, but it did not come, for the white woman huddled fear-stricken at the house.
Across the door lay her husband's body, shot through and through with a white bomb and a Russian sling.

As the settlement stirred in the first dawn the lame boy could stand it no longer and spoke to his mother:

"What a bad dream I had last night mother!"

She smiled broadly that he was frightened, and that tales showed around his tired eyes other than the mark of pain that a nightmare bears.

"What was it little one?"

"I dreamed that the missionary man was dead." He trembled, but she dismissed him.

"What! Went a dream?" and she with a look of alarm.

Later he spoke again, for the scene grew with its possession till it weighed down his soul, and now the old woman, her quick suspicions aroused, drew from him most of the story, all but the names of the other boys. This he refused, saying he did not know that it was all a dream.

Within five minutes the village was roused, and they found the shattered door, the stark body behind and the shoulder man where she had reposed all night in the fear that the terror would search her out. Then the wrath of the men rose, while the squaws wailed and rocked and threw sands in their hair.

"Who did this?"

Back to the village they were led by the old squaw, till they found the two elder boys, but the lame one had fled.
When questioned they denied their part, although the men saw signs which caused them to doubt.

"Come with us to the dead man and swear that you are innocent," said one, and the boys agreed. They under the beach together, but the certainty grew in the minds of the men that these children were the ones.

The Christian, or medicine man, began to chant and cry out as they went, working himself up to a frenzy. He told them that they must come with him to the naked body and kneel before it, where they must take off their shirts and repeat their oaths with hands upon the stones. At this the little squaws grew pale, and the smit-ter one began to cry.

THE DEMIDORF CASE

It Was Complicated From Beginning to End

By LUCY PETERSON

The Demidorf case in Russia many years ago excited a great deal of attention there, though interest in it was confined to the aristocracy. The Demidorf estate had been in litigation for years, and Count Alexis Demidorf, who was in possession, had been beaten in the court of last appeal. Peter Ivanovvich, the representative of another branch of the family, had won the property and was waiting for Demidorf to move out of the paternal mansion in order to move in his own effects.

Count Demidorf had packed his personal belongings, and discharged all his servants and had brought what money he had to his library to take with him in his exile from the home of his forefathers. The new incumbent drove up in his carriage and went into the house in a few minutes Demidorf, looking angry and excited, muttering to himself, came out, passed the coachman, evidently too absorbed in his wrongs to notice him, and passed out of sight.
 The coachman waited an hour for his master, then, leaving his horses, went in to ask if he might not put them in the stable.

He found Peter Ivanovich lying on the floor dead.

Notwithstanding that if Alexis Demidorf had not murdered the man who had supplanted him he must have known that he would be accused, but he made no attempt to escape. When he was arrested he showed great surprise that Ivanovich should have died so soon after he had left him. He told his story apparently with candor.
 Ivanovich, he said, had found him in his library putting in his pocket some gold pieces which he was intending to take away with him. Ivanovich had asked him if the money he was taking was not included in the amounts that the court had decided went with the estate. Stung at this meanness on the part of the man who had taken a fortune from him, he had thrown the money on the table, telling his sup-planter to take it, since he had taken the rest, and go to the devil with it.

The money had disappeared, all except one piece of gold that was found on the floor under a lounge. Demidorf said that he had thrown the coins down on the table, judgment, and remembered hearing one piece fall on the floor and roll away.

Were it not that the motive for the murder was so strong against Demiddorf this explanation might have had weight. But, in the first place, if Ivan-ovich were dead the estate would go back to Demidorf. In the second, it was considered quite likely that Demidorf had killed Ivanovich in a fit of passion.

There was another matter that some considered an incentive for Demidorf to commit the murder. He loved Olga Massellevna, a girl who had by inheritance an interest in the estate which could best be served by her marrying the owner. A love match had been arranged between Count Alexis and Olga, which must be broken with the loss of the estate. Indeed, the girl's parents had withdrawn their consent to her marrying Demidorf and had accepted a proposal for her hand from Ivanovich.

The power of parents in Russia over their children is now considerable, but it was then even greater. Olga was forced to assent to the breaking off with one lover and a new engagement with the man who had supplanted him.
 Her parents believed in Demidorf's guilt. She had implicit faith in his innocence.

The prisoner's lawyer while hunting for some person other than his client who had a motive for committing the murder learned that the count while trying to raise money with which to carry on his lawsuit had become largely in debt. One of his creditors had pressed him sorely, showing great eagerness to secure payment of his claim before his debtor should lose the property. The defendant's counsel framed a theory that this man Petroff had gone to see Count Demidorf to endeavor to collect his debt on the very day the latter was to turn over his estate; that he was in the house when Ivanovich entered and, after Demidorf's departure, going into the room where the two had met, had found Ivanovich with the money Petroff had claimed it and in the altercation that followed had killed Ivanovich though probably unintentionally.

This theory was considered impossible, but improbable. It was simply a theory and counted for very little against the great inducements that had impelled Demidorf to get rid of the victim. Vrotsky, the lawyer who had conceived the hypothesis, made every effort to secure evidence that Petroff had been seen at or near the Demidorf estate about the time of the murder, but failed. The last person to leave the premises was a servant maid who departed half an hour before her master.

All Vrotsky could do for his client was to prove his excellent standing his general disposition and his generosity. He brought forward his theory saying that some one had gone into the room where Demidorf and Ivanovich met soon after the latter had left it and, finding gold there, had killed Ivanovich in order to possess himself of the money. He proved that Demidorf had the amount he claim-

The Demidoff Case

and a meeting between them would doubtless have a bad effect upon her.

One morning Demidoff was sitting in a room in his home into which he had removed his books and papers, trying to divert his mind from his woes by reading, when he saw a carriage stop at his gateway and a girl spring out and run up to the house.

Great heavens! She was Olga.

Demidoff ran to the door to meet her and clasped her in his arms.

"Why, except for a little paleness," he exclaimed, holding her off for a better look, "you appear to be perfectly well. You are restored to health and to me." And he embraced her again.

When they were inside and the first transports were over she said to him: "We have all deceived you ever since you were released. To save you from going to Siberia I, through your counsel, opened communication with the prison authorities with a view to making a confession of having committed a murder of which both you and I were innocent. Vronsky succeeded in securing a sentence of ten years' imprisonment for me on condition that I would confess I did so, and you were released."

"And you imprisoned?"

"Yes, but not for long. Petroff was the real murderer, after all. His conscience smote him, and his burden was too heavy for him to bear. Only yesterday he gave himself up, telling the story much as Vronsky had told it hypothetically in court. I was released early this morning and came at once to you to give you the good news."

It was some time before Demidoff could find words to express his reverence and gratitude for the girl who had sacrificed herself for him. In the meantime he held her in his arms, passed his hand over her hair and with such caresses expressed what he felt much better than he afterward did in words.

Then, saying that she must visit her parents, she took him into the carriage with her, and they were driven to her home. They were received by the older persons with fervent expressions of thankfulness to heaven and with joy.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

PEACH PASTRIES.

PEACHES are nice cooked and therefore may be made into puddings, pies, tarts or such pastries with success.

Peach Puff.—Roll a sheet of puff paste until ten or twelve inches square cover with sliced peaches, sprinkle well with sugar, roll like a jelly roll pinching down the edges to retain the fruit, bake in a fat buttered pan until nicely browned. Heat the juice and sweeten to taste.

Fruit Griddlecakes.

Peach Pancakes.—Take a half dozen peaches and peel and halve them. Then slice in slices. Sprinkle with sugar. Beat two eggs into a foam and add a pint of milk. Add one-quarter cup of sugar, a sprinkle of salt and enough flour into which a teaspoonful of baking powder has been stirred to make the mixture into a pancake batter. Stir the peaches into the batter. Put the griddle on the fire and put into it butter as for pancakes. Pour enough batter on the griddle for a cake and fry brown. Serve with butter and sugar.

With Biscuit Dough.

Peach Cuddler.—Line the sides of a baking pan with a biscuit dough. Fill the pan to the top with fresh pared and sliced peaches. Cover the pan with a top crust and prick with a fork to let steam escape. Bake until crust and peaches are done. The oven should not be too hot. When the crust is a light brown remove it to a large plate, top crust down. Take out the peaches, wash and sweeten them; add a little rich cream if liked. Flatten the side crust while warm, cover with peaches, put the other on top and cover with the peaches.

Serve with whipped cream or cold.

Tempting Desserts.

Peach Dumplings.—Stir one pint of flour with one teaspoonful of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-half teaspoonful of sugar. Work into this two tablespoonfuls of lard. Mix with three-fourths of a cup of very cold water. Have the ingredients very cold, mix quickly and handle little. Roll thin. Take half of a peach for the core of the dumpling. Cut the dough into pieces in which to wrap the halves of peaches. Roll and bake in a quick oven. Serve with a hard sauce.

Peach Fluff.—Take some sliced peaches, six stale macaroons and five tablespoonfuls of sugar. Drain the peaches; run them through fruit press; crush the macaroons; beat these and the sugar into the peaches with a perforated spoon. Pile on small plates or in sherbet cups and put a spoonful of unsweetened cream on top.

WHITE TUB FROCKS.

How to Add Daintiness and Charm to the Summer Wardrobe.

The white tub frock, if it is really a tub frock, comes out from the laundry-tag each time it is washed looking fresh and cool. Even if it is not immaculately modish those qualities continue to give it charm so long as it holds together.

The woman who yields to the lure of the delicate pinks and blues and lilacs and greens or of the delightful flowered cottons, which are so tempting in the first spring showing after a winter of dark skies and dark frocks, may have an attractive summer wardrobe, but it will be neither practical nor so economical as that of the woman who turns her back upon the flowery spring lines and buys the white that is not so bewitching in the hand, but is so eminently satisfactory on the back.

This season the wise-buyer of desirable will find an unusual number of attractive white materials from which to make her choice. Whether she wishes to spend much money or little the white goods counters will offer a satisfactory solution of her problem, and among ready made frocks there are more pretty white models than in the ordinary season.

The simple type of lingerie frock, for example, has improved amazingly. Not so very long ago it was almost impossible to buy for a moderate sum a sheer white tub frock that was of good material and neatly and attractively made. The manufacturers tried to give too much for the money, piled cheap laces, cheap embroidery, cheap machine work upon coarse white lawn and achieved shoddy copies of lingerie models, copies that a woman of taste could not be persuaded to wear. If such a woman wanted a simple and inexpensive white lingerie frock she had to make it home.

How to Make Versailles Cream.

This dessert is molded so that it can stand alone when turned out on a platter. Have ready a quart of milk, three-quarters of a cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of vanilla extract, a scant half teaspoonful of salt, six eggs and two tablespoonfuls of water. Put the water and about half the sugar into a frying pan. Stir them together until a rich red brown syrup forms, taking care that it does not burn. Have the milk boiling slowly and stir this caramel into it.

Beat together the eggs, the salt and the rest of the sugar. Add the vanilla and stir the mixture into the milk. Butter or two quart mold—very lightly and pour the cream into it. Put the mixture into a bath of warm (not hot) water and bake it in a slow oven until it is firm in the center. When done set it in the ice-box to become very cold before serving. Turn it out on a platter when serving time arrives and decorate it with whipped cream.

D. B. U.

[Detroit Business University]

The oldest and most influential business training school in Michigan is giving today the most modern and thorough courses which fully qualify its graduates for high grade positions.

Tuition costs more in this school than in many others, but the results prove it to be the cheapest in the end. Low grade work and cheap instruction are found in cheap schools. The D. B. U. is not in that class.

We invite you to write for our curriculum and to spend six months with us during the present school season.

Athena Knit Underwear

disposes of the life-long complaint that knit underwear relies entirely for its fit upon the elasticity of the fabric.

ATHENA UNDERWEAR

For Women, Misses, Children

Is Tailored to Fit Without Stretching

HOW many women would accept a tailored suit which depends for its fit, over the bust and the hips, upon the elasticity of its materials? Yet there are scores of brands of knit underwear which depend almost entirely upon the elasticity of the fabric for a semblance of shapeliness.

Athena Underwear on the contrary is cut to fit, tailored to fit, and actually and truthfully does fit without stretching.

The features combined for the first time in Athena Underwear all contribute to its tailored perfection

THE PATENT-FITTED SEAT—The most notable improvement ever made in underwear designing, being so shaped that it clings snugly to the figure in any posture.

THE THREE-CORNERED GUSSET—Relieves the strain at the thigh, giving greater comfort and longer wear.

THE PERFECTED SHOULDER STAY—Keeps the garment from stretching down over the shoulder and holds the sleeve in place.

THE FITTED SHOULDER AND SLEEVE—Give the natural form to the bust and the proper tapering to the back.

THE EXTRA ELASTIC CUFF—Holds the sleeve in place and keeps it from slipping up on the arm.

SHAPING AND SIZING—Giving Athena garments the actual body lines and proportions, and affording sizes that will fit with tailored precision.

You can buy Athena at the price you have been paying for ordinary underwear. Made in thirty-eight fabrics—comprising sheer light-weight hile and cotton, light-weight wool, heavy-weight cotton (fleece and unfleece), heavy-weight wool, silk and wool. Twenty-eight distinctive shapes.

Grange Column

Marion Center Grange No. 956.
Marion Center Grange met in regular session on Friday evening, with an attendance of 33 members and one visitor from Ironton grange. After the regular order of business the degree team conferred the 1st and 2nd degree on one candidate. One application was received. Grange closed in the fourth degree to meet again in two weeks when there will be work in the 3rd and 4th degree.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange No. 707 met in regular session November 4 with all members present except Gate Keeper. One application for membership was received. The subject of whether or not the State Grange should own the Michigan Patron was discussed. Lecture hour consisted of songs and readings. For good of the order it was suggested that we have a grange hunt and supper, but no action was taken. Grange closed in form with 26 members and one visitor present. Next meeting in two weeks.

How, Indeed?
A little Brooklyn boy had been admonished by his mother not to waste in mud puddles. To offset the result of the natural boyish tendency in that direction, however, he was provided with rubbers. One day he appeared at the house with his rubbers in a sadly dirtied condition. His mother said, "Weren't you told not to walk in the mud?" He admitted such instruction had been given, but added, "How can rubbers keep the mud off your shoes if you don't go in the mud?"—New York Tribune.

BIBLE STUDY ON
GOD BURIED MOSES, HIS SERVANT.

Deuteronomy 34:1-12—Nov. 16.
"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."—Psalm 116:15.

Moses is one of the great characters of history. His nobility looms up as a great patriot, general, judge and ruler of his people; and still greater does he appear in his relationship to ward God. He was the personification of obedience and loyalty as a servant of Jehovah. In this he typifies Messiah. As we read, "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up out of you from amongst your brethren like unto me." I am a dimly outlined picture of that great Teacher, Leader and King whom Jehovah has anointed to be the real Deliverer of Israel and the world from the bondage of Satan, sin and death.

Any one can see that great faith in God was necessary for the position occupied by Moses. But comparatively few can see the depths of Moses' character, for only a few realize the Divine call to Israel and Moses' work as their mediator.

Moses, the Servant of God.

We cannot help feeling sympathy toward this great servant of God. "The meekest man in all the earth." After so many years of patience, long suffering and loyalty to God, in a moment of anger, Israel's great mediator failed in meekness and loyalty. Directed by the Lord to speak to the rock, which on a previous occasion he had smitten, Moses petulantly smote it the second time.

The rock whence came the life-giving stream represented the Rock of Ages, Messiah, who was to be smitten piece more. Compare Hebrews 6:4-6.

The fact that Moses was used as a type of the Second Birth class in a sense implies that he experienced the Second Death or cut himself off from Divine favor. The punishment he received merely helped to complete the typical picture. He might not enjoy the same.

Canaan Viewed From Mt. Pisgah.

Pisgah is one of the "peaks of Mo." From it Moses got a view of the Promised Land, toward which the eye of faith had looked for eight years and toward which he had laboriously guided Israel for forty years. This grand old servant of God, full resigned to the Divine arrangement was put to sleep by the Lord whom he served.

Moses' sepulchre was hidden—hidden to prevent anything of the spirit of idolatry. St. Paul declares that St. Paul strove for possession of Moses' body, doubtless with a view to using it in some idolatrous way.

Moses Died and Was Buried.

We are not to overlook the fact that Moses died, and will not live again until the Dichely appointed time when, under Messiah's Kingdom, he will be resurrected. Meantime he has slept with his fathers, as the Bible generally records of all who died.

The account of the transfiguration of our Lord and the appearance of Moses and Elias with Him in that vision must not be made to contradict the statement that Moses died and that the only hope for any one is by a resurrection from the dead. 1 Cor. 15:13, 14.

We have Jesus' own word for it that neither Moses nor Elijah went to Heaven. He declared, "No man hath ascended up to Heaven."—John 3:13.

Jesus explained that what the disciples saw was a vision. "Tell the vision to no man." (Matthew 17:9) Just so the trumpets, thunders, etc., of Revelation are not realities, but visions. St. Peter, who witnessed the vision, declares that it was a representation of Messiah's Kingdom. 2 Peter 1:16-18. Moses represented one class and Elijah another, as participants with Jesus in His Messianic glory.

God's Promise to Abraham.

At the foundation of all God's dealings with both Natural and Spiritual Israel is His great, oath-bound Promise to Abraham. "In the Sea shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This was the first step toward the purpose to remove the curse of death from the very beginning. He had premeditated sending the Lamb of God to redeem the world and to bring in a blessing in the world of the curse. Yet the first clear statement of this Divine purpose was made to Abraham, that himself and his posterity should be associated with God in the work of human uplift.

In due time the Logos became Jesus, and sacrificially laid down His life. To Him were gathered the "Israelites indeed," to share in His sufferings and death and to be made partakers of His glory. These with Jesus are to constitute the multiplicity of Moses, raised up from amongst their brethren. No enough of such "Israelites indeed" being found, Divine Wisdom has been seeking others from amongst the Gentiles. Thus gradually God has been preparing the great Prophet, Priest and King, to be the great Deliverer.

Omnibuses Tested For Stability.
Before a motor omnibus is put into commission in London it is tested for stability. It is mounted on a platform, that is then tilted sideways, and the point at which it will tip over is registered. Then it is loaded with the weight of a full complement of passengers, inside and out, tilted again and the capsizing point taken.

A properly built omnibus falls over when empty when the axle are tilted to an angle of forty-one degrees. When the top is loaded and the bus is empty inside the angle of capsizing is twenty-eight degrees. When it is loaded inside and out it is stable until tilted to an angle of thirty-five degrees.

Kindles Fire With Gasoline—Can Explodes Covering Girl With Liquid.

EXPLOSION SETS HOUSE AFIRE

Tries to Put Out the Fire Herself—Rushes Down Stairs For Help.

Miss Winifred Vought is Victim of Accident Which Arouses Whole City—Ambitious Girl With Bright Prospects.

Saturday afternoon about 4:00 o'clock, Miss Winifred Vought, age 16 years, of Black Lake, niece of Mr. A. J. Vought of this city, met with a most painful accident which resulted in her death at 1:00 a. m. Sunday at the Petoskey hospital where she was taken that night.

Miss Vought who was keeping house for Mr. Vought over the garage, and going to school here, took a gallon of gasoline and poured some into an air-tight heating stove to start a fire, which was not burning as rapidly as she desired to have it. The third time the gasoline was poured on the live coals an explosion resulted, which blew up the stove tearing off the lower front part and also tearing out the bottom of the gasoline can. When the can exploded the liquid saturated the girl's clothing and she at once became a mass of flames.

The girl grabbed her coat and wrapped it about herself and rolled on the floor in an attempt to extinguish the flames. Finding in this she ran down the stairs through the office of the garage and into the blacksmith shop, with her hands above her head, crying, "Mr. Morse, I'm burning up" at every step she took. In coming down the stairs she fell half way to the bottom. On entering the blacksmith shop, Claude Morse, who is employed by Mr. Vought, jerked off his leather apron and wrapped it about the girl's face and head extinguishing the fire about her face and hair. He states that the flames were shooting up over her head to the ceiling of the shop. He got her out to the walk where she fell down. Others came to their assistance and the flames were soon extinguished.

Clyde, Mr. Vought's son, who was in the room with the girl at the time of the accident ran down stairs while the girl was trying to put out the flames, and turned in the fire alarm. He was so excited that he forgot to tell Mr. Morse when he ran past the blacksmith shop. Had he notified Mr. Morse of the accident Mr. Morse asserts that he could have undoubtedly helped her out and saved her life.

Every stitch of the young lady's clothing was burned off of her. One small spot on her hip and both feet were the only parts of the body that was not burned. Physicians who attended the girl state the burns were second degree burns, meaning that the flesh is burned through the second layer of skin. She was removed to the Hotel Elston where she received all the care medical science could administer and later in the evening was taken to the Petoskey by Messrs. Will Provost and Claude Morse. She died at the hospital at 1:00 a. m. and was rational most of the time after the accident and up to the time of death. She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Hattie Vought and two brothers and one sister.

Mr. Vought was on his way to Boyne City at the time of the fire. The damage to his home was about $100. Two carpets, draperies and a library table were destroyed and damage to the archway was incurred. Mr. Vought returned to this city as soon as he was notified, by launch. His wife accompanied him from Boyne City.

Harry Vought, a brother of the deceased girl arrived in the city Monday to take the body back to Black Lake where the funeral will be held. Interment will undoubtedly be at Onaway, where the girl's father is buried.

Lost.

An auto chain—Tuesday night, will finder please return to A. L. Hart on Clinton street.—Adv. 4711

MASONS TO BE INSTRUCTED

R. & S. M. Masons to be Instituted in Charlevoix Order Thursday.

Petoskey Degree Teams to Confer the Work on the Local Order.

The local Masons are making extensive arrangements for an event of unusual importance to take place in this city on the afternoon of Thursday, November 20, when a Council of Royal and Select Masters is to be instituted.

The Charlevoix contingent issued a most cordial invitation to the members of the Petoskey Council No. 52, Royal and Select Masters to institute the new council and confer the degrees. The invitation was readily accepted by the Petoskeyites.

Grand Master Architect of the State M. I. G. M. Lon B. Winsor of Reed City will be present and will be accompanied by Grand Lecturer Arthur M. McCloud and Grand Recorder Charles A. Conover of Coldwater, and possibly others of the Grand Council.

At four o'clock the degree of Royal Master will be conferred upon the class and immediately following the degree of select master will be given. At six o'clock companions W. R. Barney and Mason H. Rose assisted by members of the Eastern Star of Charlevoix, will serve suitable refreshments for the inner man. At 7:30 o'clock sharp a council of super-excellent masters will be opened according to the laws thereof and the work exemplified for the benefit of the uninstructed.

At nine o'clock M. I. G. M. Winsor will grant dispensation to those members to aid in establishing a new council. At 9:30 o'clock business will leave the hall for the train which leaves at 9:50 o'clock.

It is anticipated that over 100 R. & S. M. Masons from all over this section of the country, including East Jordan, Boyne City, Boyne Falls, Manacelona, Harbor Springs, Alanson, Benita, Pellston, Mackinaw City and St. Ignace will be present, and the occasion, no doubt, will be a red letter one in the history of Masons in Northern Michigan.

Stricken With Paralysis.

Last Thursday Postmaster W. J. Lewis of Boyne City was stricken with a stroke of paralysis. The stroke was slight and he will probably fully recover. He is one of Charlevoix county's early pioneers and claims the honor of being the original Democrat of the county.

Thanksgiving Proclamation By The Governor.

Just a "thank you" thrills the heart of the receiver and reveals the kindness of the giver. Gratitude is contagious, gratitude enriches the home and the state, gratitude makes life worth living. During the past year Michigan has shared with the Nation in peace and prosperity, in civic and religious progress, in an appreciation of health and sanity. The firesides of Michigan have had the courage and faith that conquers. To God, the source of all power, it is fitting that we devote one day to praise and thanksgiving in the spirit that shall brighten and beautify all the days of all the years to come.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby join the President of the United States in designating Thursday, the 27th of November, as a day for all of the people of this Commonwealth to celebrate in thanksgiving and prayer.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State this tenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-seventh.

Woodbridge N. Ferris,

By the Governor: Frederick C. Martindale, Secretary of State.

CHARLEVOIX UNDISPUTED CHAMPIONS OF NORTHERN MICHIGAN

Defeated Petoskey on Local Gridiron Saturday by a Score of 23 to 15--Have Not Lost Game This Season--Boys Tied Charlevoix 0 to 0 Saturday November 8.

With one of the largest crowds ever gathered on the local football gridiron, driving them on to victory, Charlevoix defeated Petoskey high last Saturday 23-15 in one of the most beautiful twelfth hour rallies in the history of the oldest football enthusiasts. From the opening peal of the referee's horn until the shades of darkness were spreading over the field the game was in doubt. It was only through Charlevoix's ability to come back strong in the last half that chalked the game up on the ledger for the locals. This was the second defeat of the season administered to Petoskey by the local team.

It was an all together different aggregation that met the Charlevoix on the south side gridiron to defend the blue and white than that which suffered a 27-7 whipping a month ago on Petoskey soil. The team was fast and had variety of plays that completely baffled the Charlevoix contingent until the second half was fairly under way. From then on it was clearly Charlevoix's game. There was no doubt after the boys settled down and opened with the open style of game after this the visitors were completely lost. Forward passes whirled through the air and the backs circled the ends for gains ranging from twenty to thirty yards. In less than three minutes after the second half was off the ball was between the goal-posts and Poole was hanging on it like a first salary. Another touchdown was made in quick order and the game was safe. During the remainder of the game Petoskey shoved over her second touchdown and drove the oval over the cross bar for a field goal.

It will probably be several seasons before a Charlevoix crowd will see a team hold as the locals did last Saturday when Petoskey was fighting hard for her first touchdown. Petoskey in the second quarter carried the ball directly to the shadow of the goal posts before the locals realized the situation they had put themselves in, through lack of head work and a foolish display of confidence. Petoskey had the ball on the one yard line and first down. For three plays the ball remained in the same place Charlevoix was expecting a center smash and was settled to attack the pivot man. Petoskey using fine head work shot a quarter back run around the end and the men fell over the last chalk line just as the tackler reached him. It was simply a case of being dragged into a situation that any football player knows is a risk.

There was sufficient evidence during the game and many demonstrations, that went to show that Petoskey has a man that would do justice to many of the southern Michigan teams. That man is Wright, right half and captain. No player on either side was as consistent a ground gainer. He carried the ball on an average of two out of three plays and was never thrown for a loss. He is a great high school player and is acknowledged so by the Charlevoix men. If it hadn't been for Wright it is safe to say that there would have been a far different result.

For Charlevoix, Capt. Durance was the star of the game, after the team had settled down to regular football. His head-work during the second half was nothing short of phenomenal. He ran the team and played a great defensive game. Nowland and Scroggie, the former at the right extremity and the latter at half were big features for the local defense and offense. Every man played a hard and consistent game and the lack of space alone forbids mentioning all the others.

The result of the game Saturday and the defeat of Manistee by Traverse City occurring on the same day brings the title flag to Charlevoix. It would be out of the question to play either one of these teams now as they have both suffered the pangs of defeat. On the other hand, the local lads have gone through a season of eight games without meeting a single defeat. The one game that was a stumbling block to Charlevoix was with Boyne City when the result was a scoreless tie. Nine "rahs" for Charlevoix, the champions of Northern Michigan.

Now that the football season is about to close and especially since the results of the schedule have spoken so generously as to the ability of the men composing the team, and has forced every opponent to acknowledge Charlevoix's superiority, it is high time that some one should the key note and some plans be made to show the boys the city's appreciation. This can be done in several ways. A banquet is always appropriate, but the men get three good meals a day at home. Some one mentioned the other day that sweaters would be in line and that is exactly the right idea. Something that the fellows can keep and which will bring up memories of the nights of hard practice and the hard fought games when they have laid aside the pleasures of high school days.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Will Meet With Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Nettleton Friday, November 21.

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Nettleton Friday evening, November 21.

The following is the program: Music. Sailor Song—A group of boys. Paper. "Mediterranean Empire, Its Learning."—Rev. C. E. Taggart. Intermission. Music. Vocal Solo—Miss Constance Idol. Selections from "The Literature," Mrs. James Wilkinson.

Pleasantly Surprised.

Twenty-five friends surprised Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Crandell at their home Wednesday evening, of last week. The evening was spent playing progressive pedro, after which lunch was served and all departed for home after spending a very enjoyable evening.

Auction Sale.

Frank Brown will sell at auction on his farm four miles southwest of Charlevoix on the Norwood road, his stock, farm tools, implements, etc., on Friday, November 21. Free lunch at noon. W. E. Byers, auctioneer and E. A. Butler, clerk.

SECOND NUMBER LECTURE COURSE

Wednesday Evening November 26--Begins at 8:00 O'Clock Sharp.

The Orphean Musical Club Entertain in Repertoire of Vocal Music.

This splendid musical organization has had phenomenal success for seven seasons, with very few changes in the personnel of the organization. Never before has this personnel been so strong as for this season. They are versatile, artistic and capable of giving a widely diversified program. Some of the features of their program are vocal quartets, horn quartets, and solos on their various instruments, as well as vocal solos, songs illustrated with cartoon pictures, and impersonations.

Since this organization has been in the lyceum for nearly seven seasons, they have an extensive repertoire of vocal music, and are equally at home in the classic, humorous and comic selections. Their ensemble singing is almost perfect, their voices blending in perfect harmony.

The brass quartet is an instrumental feature of great merit and gives to their program a variety of music that is offered by very few musical attractions.

The cartoon work is another special feature of their program. There is unity to their entertainment, all parts being carefully woven together in an artistic manner.

The Orphean Musical club give the second number of the Citizens Lecture and Entertainment Course next Wednesday evening, November 26, beginning promptly at 8:00 p. m. at the Charlevoix theatre.

The Palladium of Richmond, Indiana, says:

"Many have pronounced the Orphean Musical club the best that they have ever heard in the city. The harmony is perfect, and their manner pleasing. Aside from vocal numbers they have quite a variety of entertaining features. Their reader and their cartoonist offer a pleasing change of program. As a brass quartet they are very fine."

Single admission 75c. Season tickets for balance of season $1.25. Tickets on sale at Central Drug Store. Reserved seat sale Monday November 25. Numbers given out during day and seats drawn at 7:30 p. m.

For Sale.

Seven year old driving mare, new buggy and harness, $190. Also, 40 acres of land near Undine school house $125.00.

ORCHARD PEST HAS ARRIVED

The San Jose Scale Now Working in This Region.

IMMEDIATE ACTION IS NEEDED

To Curb Further Advance of Dangerous Parasite.

Whole Orchards in Southern Counties Have Been Overlaid in Few Years—Spraying is Only Effective Remedy.

The enemy has been discovered in our midst. When he came or how he got here, nobody knows; but that he is here is a certainty and the entire resources of the region must be drawn upon to annihilate the invader before he conquers the people.

This enemy is no other than the San Jose scale. He has been found on our apples and without question has established himself upon some of our trees. He multiplies very rapidly and will ruin the orchards of an entire section in a few years, if not quickly disposed of. The traveler through southern Michigan today often sees the skeletons of what were once valuable orchards. Now, they are only dead trunks and limbs, because of the work of this parasite. The scale has been working northward in Michigan for a great many years and it was supposed that he had not yet got north of the southern boundary of Benzie county, but he has, and is already in the Grand Traverse region and furthermore hard at work.

Leon B. Gardner, teacher of agriculture in the Traverse City High school, found what appeared to be scale upon two apples brought to him a few days since for identification and he mounted the suspicious looking speck upon a slide and examined it through the microscope and found that it was the genuine article. The fact that a single scale has been found is sufficient to call to arms all fruit growers of the region. The thing to be done now, is to fight and fight hard. The only successful way of getting rid of this pest is by spraying and spraying with a vengeance. As a result of the recent discovery, no less than 100 of the most approved sprayers should be added to the Grand Traverse region equipment for the coming season, and every apple tree and every other tree where the scale is likely to find refuge, should be thoroughly and frequently sprayed.

It is really fortunate that the enemy has been discovered while his numbers are still few, because now it will be possible to save many of the orchards, which otherwise he would destroy. If he has a chance to become firmly established it will be next to impossible to root him out. Some of the largest and what promise to be the most successful orchards in the state are located in the territory between Manistee and Charlevoix and it is the duty of all fruit growers to do their best to save these orchards for the coming generations.

IN PETOSKEY

Statements of Petoskey Citizens Are Always of Interest to Our Readers.

To many of our readers the streets of Petoskey are almost as familiar as those of our own town, and we are naturally interested to read of happenings there. The following report from a well known and respected resident will be helpful to numbers of men and women here in Charlevoix.

L. A. Labadie, 303 Petoskey St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills for kidney complaint and lame and acting back and have found them to be a splendid remedy. I first used Doan's Kidney Pills about a year ago, when I was suffering from a weak and lame back. My kidneys were giving me considerable annoyance, too, by acting too freely. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they acted promptly in bringing me relief. I have taken them since then, when in need of a kidney medicine and they have always acted just as represented."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Labadie had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

W. G. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. G. T. U.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union met with Mrs. W. J. Stevenson, State street, Friday afternoon, November 14th. A goodly number were present, twenty-one members and three visitors. The meeting was called to order and in the absence of the president, Mrs. Jennie Alex, who is seriously ill, Mrs. Birdick was called to preside. Mrs. Alex was specially remembered in the devotional service at the beginning of the meeting.

After the business topic for the day was taken up, the topic being: "The Responsibility of Motherhood," leaders, Mrs. Cowan and Mrs. Shockley. An excellent program was given. Several interesting readings as follows, "Parent-Child," "Some Plain Facts for Mothers," "The Prospective Mother," and "The Price She Paid." These readings were followed by a fine paper by Mrs. Shockley, on "The Responsibility of Motherhood." It was suggested that this paper be published in local paper for the benefit of many who were not present.

At the close of the program a short memorial service was held for Mrs. Ann Ackert, an honorable member of the union, who passed to her reward some weeks ago. This service was conducted by Mrs. John Burns, who read several verses of scripture appropriate to the occasion. Mrs. Birdick and Mrs. Shockley sang a duet, "Some Day the Silver Chord Will Break." Miss Agnes Rodger paid a fine tribute to the memory of the departed one.

Others added a few words. At the close a delicious pol lock supper was served to those present and much enjoyed.

GOVERNMENT REPORT

Showing of Potatoes, Buckwheat and Corn For November by Agricultural Department.

More definite information as to the size of the country's corn crop, which throughout the growing season suffered from severe drought, was given yesterday when the crop reporting board of the United States department of agriculture issued its preliminary estimate of the nation's total production in the November crop report. Heretofore the estimates of the corn crop have been based upon condition reports. The November report is made up from reports of agents and correspondents of the department's bureau of statistics. Details of the report follow:

Corn—Total production, preliminary estimated, 2,463,017,010 compared with 3,124,710,000 bushels last year. Yield per acre, 23.0 bushels, compared with 29.2 bushels last year and 27.0 bushels, the ten-year average. Average farm price, 70.7 cents per bushel, compared with 58.1 cents last year. Quality, 93.8 per cent, compared with the ten-year average. Corn of 1912 crop remaining on farms, compared with 61,704,000 bushels of the 1911 crop remaining on farms November 1 last year.

Buckwheat—Total production, preliminary estimated, 14,455,000 bushels, compared with 19,249,000 bushels last year. Yield per acre, 17.2 bushels, compared with 22.9 bushels last year and 19.8 bushels, the ten-year average yield. Average farm price, 73.5 cents per bushel, compared with 65.5 cents last year. Quality 95.5 per cent of the ten-year average.

Potatoes—Total production preliminary estimated, 328,555,000 compared with 420,647,000 bushels last year. Yield per acre, 892 bushels, compared with 1134 bushels last year and 96 bushels, the ten-year average yield. Average farm price, 66.6 cents per bushel, compared with 45.5 cents last year. Quality, 90.3 per cent.

How to Prepare a Cheap Roast.

Put the top from a loaf of stale bread and scoop out the inside. Mix the crumbs with a little water, thyme, chopped onion, salt and pepper to taste, add a pound of rare meat (underdone beef is best) and work with a fork into a crumbly forcemeat. Put this into the loaf, reft the top, cover top and sides with a thin layer of suet and put into the toaster. Bake from one-half hour to forty minutes, according to size of loaf. If you have a little gravy (thin with hot water and taste the loaf frequently with it. If not, use a little water and butter. The crust will be crisp, yet tender. Transfer to a heated platter and serve. Curve with a sharp knife into slices three-quarters of an inch thick. One can also use leftover sausage in place of beef.

How to Wash China Silk.

When washing china silk never hang it up to dry, but instead wring it dry and wrap it in a piece of white material, leaving it this way for about one hour, then ironing it. By doing this one gets much better results and the silk does not turn yellow.

PROLOGUE.

This is a story of a brave girl who suffered a great wrong. She went to prison for three years for a crime that she did not commit and when she left prison her record stood between her and a living earned honestly. She gained more than a living, and she got it legally. She met bad men and good men, and she pitted her wit against those of men trained in the intricacies of the law and in the plans of criminals.

Mary Turner is good or bad according to the way you look at her. The police and the representatives of law and order that had condemned her to a felon's cell called her bad. One young man believed her to be good, and he stood by her through storm and stress, through circumstances that tried his soul.

This story gives an accurate if fleeting view of the methods of work of the police and the criminals, and it shows the finish of a brave crook who followed undeviatingly the course he had mapped out.

CHAPTER I.

The Panel of Light.

THE lids of the girl's eyes lifted slowly, and she stared at the panel of light in the wall above her. She had not the faintest idea of where she was, and she made not the least impression on her muddled brain. For a long time she continued to regard the dim illumination in the wall with the same passivity of gaze. Apathy still lay upon her crushed spirit. In a vague way she realized her own helplessness and rested in it gratefully, subtly fearful lest she again arouse to the full horror of her plight. In a curious subconscious fashion she was striving to hold on to this deadness of sensation, thus to win a little respite from the torture that had exhausted her soul.

Of a sudden her eyes noted the black lines that lay across the panel of light, and in that instant her spirit was quickened once again. The clouds lifted from her brain. Vision was clear now. Understanding seized the full import of this hideous thing on which she looked. For the panel of light was a window set high within a wall of stone. The right lines of black that crossed it were bars—prison bars. It was still there, then. She was in a cell of the Tombs.

Crouching miserably on the narrow bed, she maintained her fixed watching of the window—that window which was a symbol of her utter despair. Again agony wrunged within her.

The girl was appalled by the mercilessness of a destiny that had so outraged right. She was wholly innocent of having done any wrong. She had struggled through years of privation to keep herself clean and wholesome, worthy of those gentlemen from whom she drew her blood. And earnest effort had ended at last under an overwhelming accusation, false, yet none the less fatal to her. This accusation after a wearying delay had culminated today in conviction. The sentence of the court had been imposed upon her—that for three years she should be imprisoned.

There had been nothing in the life of Mary Turner before the catastrophe came to distinguish it from many another. Its most significant details were of a sordid kind, familiar to poverty. Her father had been an unsuccessful man as success is esteemed by this generation of Mammon worshippers. He was a gentleman, but the trivial facts of small avail today. He was of good birth, and he was the possessor of an inherited competence. He had as well intelligence, but it was not of a human kind.

So, little by little, his fortune became shrunken toward nothingness by reason of heedless investments. He married a charming woman, who after a brief period of wedded happiness gave her life to the birth of the single child of the union, Mary. A year passed the daughter grew toward maturity in an experience of ever increasing penury. The girl was in the 16th school when her father finally gave over his rather feeble effort of living. At his death the father left her a character well instructed in the excellent principles that had been his own. Of worldly goods, not the value of a pin.

Yet, measured according to the standards of adversity, Mary was fortunate. Almost at once she procured a humble employment in the Emporium, the great department store owned by Edward Gilder. To be sure, the wage was infinitesimal, while the toil was body breaking, soul breaking.

Mary nevertheless avoided the worst perils of her lot. She did not flounder under privation, but went her way through it, if not serenely, at least without even a thought of yielding to those temptations that beset a girl who is at once poor and charming.

Among her fellows were some like herself, others unlike. Of her own sort in this single particular were the two girls with whom she shared a cheap room. Their common decency in attitude toward the other sex was the unique bond of union. In their association she found no real companionship. Nevertheless they were whole some enough. Otherwise they were illiterate, altogether incongenial.

In such wise, through five dreary years, Mary Turner lived. Nine hours daily she stood behind a counter. She spent her other waking hours in obligatory mental labors, cooking her own scant meals over the gas, washing and ironing for the sake of that next appearance which was required of her by those in authority at the Emporium yet more especially necessary for her own self respect.

With a mind keen and earnest, she contrived some solace from reading and struggling since the free library gave her this opportunity. By careful comparison of herself with others about her she realized the fact that she possessed an intelligence beyond the average. The training by her father, too, had been of a superior kind. There was as well, at the back vaguely, the feeling of particular self respect that belongs inevitably to the possessor of good blood. Finally she demurely enjoyed a modest appreciation of her own physical advantages. In short, she had beauty, brains and breeding, three things of chief importance to any woman.

There had been thefts in the store. They had been traced eventually to a certain department, that in which Mary worked. The detective was alert. Some valuable silks were missed. Search followed immediately. The goods were found in Mary's locker. That was enough. She was charged with the theft. She protested her innocence, only to be laughed at in derision by her messengers. Every thief declares his innocence. Mr. Gilder himself was emphatic against her. The thing had been long continued. An example must be made. The girl was arrested.

The crowded condition of the court calendar kept her for three months in the Tombs awaiting trial. She was quite friendless. To the world she was only a thief-in-lure. At the last the trial was very short. Her lawyer was merely an Antiochian practitioner assigned to her defense as a formality of the court. At the end twelve good men and true rendered a verdict of guilty against the shuddering girl at the prisoner's dock.

That which was the supreme tragedy to the broken girl in the cell merely afforded rather agreeable entertainment to her former fellows of the department stage. Mary Turner through out her term of service there had been without real intimates, so that now none was ready to mourn over her fate. Even the two roommates who felt some slight offense, since they sensed the superiority of her, though vaguely. Now, they found a strange satisfaction in the fact of her disaster as emphasizing very pleasantly their own continuance in respectability.

On the day of Mary Turner's trial there was a subtle geyser of gossiping to and fro through the store. The girl's plight was like a shuttlecock driven hither and yon by the hot dories of many tongues. It was the first time in many years that one of the employees had been thus accused of theft. Shoplifters were so common as to be a stale topic. There was a refreshing novelty in this case. When one of the employees was plucked out by fellow workers, charged suddenly of having stolen, and then, and only then, was given a chance to defend herself, it was a novel thing. They were not as she, with reason.

Smithson, a member of the executive staff, did not hesitate to speak his mind, though none too forcibly. As his comment, however, as it was, stood wholly in Mary's favor. And he spoke with a certain authority, since he had given official attention to the girl.

Smithson stopped Sarah Edwards, Mr. Gilder's private secretary, as she was passing through one of the departments that morning to ask her if the owner had yet reached his office.

"Born and gone," was the secretary's answer. "He went down town to the court of general sessions. The judge sent for him about the Mary Turner case."

"Oh, yes, I remember now," Smithson exclaimed. "I hope the poor girl gets off. She was a nice girl—quite the lady, you know, Miss Edwards. Will you please let me know when Mr.

Gilder arrives? There are one or two little matters I wish to discuss with him."

"All right," Sarah agreed briskly and she turned on toward the private office.

The secretary was barely seated at her desk when the violent opening of the door startled her, and as she looked up a cheery voice cried out:

"Hello, dad!"

At the same moment a young man entered with an air of care free assurance, his face radiant. But as his glance went to the empty armchair at the desk he halted abruptly, and his expression changed to one of disappointment.

"Not here," he grumbled. Then once again the call was on his lips as his eyes fell on the secretary, who had now risen to her feet in a flutter of excitement.

"Why, Mr. Dick?" Sarah gasped.

"Hello, Sophie!" came the genial salutation. The young man advanced and

DEATH CLAIMS P. B. WACHTEL

Petoskey's Popular Citizen and Leading Democrat

Had Been Ill For Two Years, Only in Bed
But Few Weeks

After a lingering illness of two years, Philip B. Wachtel, the leading democrat of Northern Michigan, and a resident of Petoskey, for years, died at his home Friday afternoon at 5:00 o'clock being confined to his bed only a few weeks, at his home corner of Wachtel Avenue and West Lake street.
Mr. Wachtel was a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Wachtel and was born in Elk county, Pennsylvania October 27, 1831. He received his education in Clearfield and took a commercial course at the Iron City Commercial college in Pittsburgh. In 1877 he came to Petoskey and started a private bank under the name of P. B.

Wachtel & Co. In 1883 Mr. Wachtel sold out his interest in the bank to Messrs. Curtis & Wylie who were in the company with him. Mr. Wachtel went into the real estate business with E. C. Bierman, who after ward sold out his interest to John J. A. Glazier. Mr. Wachtel continued in this business until a few weeks ago when he became too weak to walk to his office.

Mr. Wachtel held many township, village and city offices. He was a member of the Elks, Maccahees, Masons, Knights of Pythias, Woodman, Royal Arcanum and National Union and was active to each order.

He is survived by a widow and five children, Mrs. Emma Rupe, Mrs. E. C. Hartwell, both of Petoskey Winfield Wachtel of Grand Rapids, Willis Wachtel of Detroit, and Bruce Wachtel of Chicago.
He leaves one sister, Mrs. Thomas Quintan of Petoskey, and one brother, John Wachtel of Williamsport, Pennsylvania. Funeral services were held Monday afternoon from the home with Rev. William E. Graham of the First Presbyterian church in charge. Interment was made in Greenwood.

STATE COMMITTEE'S REPORT

County Y. M. C. A. Work in State Has Made Remarkable Progress.

In the state committee's report for 1913, the following recommendation on future work appeared: "The inauguration of county work in one or two selected counties." In October of the same year a county committee was elected in Lenawee county, and $1,000.00 raised for the work. January 1st, 1914, C. L. Rowe began work as the first county secretary.

The result of two years work in Lenawee county demonstrated the practicability of county work for Michigan; and in March, 1916, the state committee added Mr. Rowe to the state force to supervise and extend the work to other counties.

In the next five years, five more counties were organized. From the intensive development of these counties, a policy was evolved, which experience had demonstrated should be applicable to the rest of the county fields in the state.

The fundamentals of this policy are as follows:

- 1—A strong county committee.
- 2—A county budget of from $2,000
to $3,000 annually.
- 3—A trained secretary as the executive of the county committee.
- 4—The work of the county secretary is the discovery, enlistment, training and directing of leadership.

5—The local organizations be supplementary and co-operative with the fundamental institutions in community life, the home, church and school.

6—That local activities be of a character to develop responsibility, initiative and the co-operative spirit in the individual.

The large returns from this policy in the organized counties commended itself so well to the business men of the state that in respond to insistent calls, eight additional counties were organized in 1912-13 and we now have fourteen county organizations.

A summary of nine years growth in county work field gives the following results:

	1901	1913
1—Counties organized.....	1	14
2—Organized commu- nities.....	5	102
3—Secretaries employed.....	1	15
4—Money expended an- nually.....	$1,500	$30,000
5—Men serving on coun- ty committees.....	20	280
6—Local committeemen.....	30	827
7—Members.....	150	2,774
8—Bible Class enroll- ment.....	150	2,673
9—Physical activities participants.....	50	2,623
10—Educational activi- ties.....		2,053
11—Agricultural con- tests participants.....		150
12—Summer camps, at- tendance.....	20	384
13—Professed conver- sions.....		199
14—Known to have uni- ted with the church.....		77

Through all this work the constant supervision of the state committee has been essential. The remaining counties of Michigan could be organized in the next ten years if the state committee could be assured increased resources.

MAGAZINE BEING PRINTED

News Cuts Illustrating Western Michigan Are Being Used—Handsome Cover Design.

The pictures for the forthcoming issue of the illustrated magazine,
"Western Michigan" have been gathered. They number seventy odd and tell the story of the natural resources and promised prosperity of the Western Michigan region as it has never been told before. There are views from every one of the twenty counties within the jurisdiction of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. There are general farming scenes, views of fine landscapes, fruit laden orchards, pictures that tell the story of Western Michigan as a summer land; there are views of dairy herds, of alfalfa meetings, school houses, public markets, improved highways and farm homes. Every picture is a pressing invitation to the people of the over-crowded sections of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to come to Western Michigan and share the advantages that have been abundantly provided by an all-wise Creator.

The cover design of the magazine will be in three colors and gold.
This design alone tells a pleasing story. It shows the commercial orchard, with the product therefrom going by auto truck upon an improved highway to the nearby market town where the fast express train and lake steamers are waiting to take the fruit on to the big consuming markets, with their thousands who are in need of that which Western Michigan can profitably produce.

Fifty thousand copies of the magazine are being printed and these the Development Bureau will distribute so as to attract new settlers.
Many copies will be sent by Western Michigan people to their friends in other parts of the world.

PRIEST HAS MODEL BUILDING

One of the Finest Studios in Northern Michigan if Not in State.

Built With Every Consideration Made for the Convenience of Studio Work.

The two-story brick building on the corner of Bridge and Mason streets, owned and occupied by George W. Priest, is one of the finest buildings in the city and is a remarkable addition to this popular summer resort. No studio in northern Michigan is so finely equipped and constructed for convenience as this building. To look in the big display window into the back of the studio brings forth a vision of remarkable beauty and neatness.

The first room is a reception and business room. The second room equipped with a high fireplace and mantle is used as a waiting room for those desiring work done in photography. Off this room is a neat little dressing room, in which is a hot and cold water lavatory. The next room is a working room, used for the purpose of taking pictures. Mr. Priest has this room equipped with cameras and instruments which enable him to take pictures both night and day. He can also make pictures from 1 x 6 size to any size you want.

New furniture and rugs are expected this week to be added to the rooms. The lower rooms are lighted with ceiling and side lights which are very effective. The building is heated with steam, and has plenty of good ventilation.

Living quarters are neatly arranged in the rear of the operating room with a fine sleeping porch, in addition to, thus, which faces the lake.

In the basement, which is reached by a stairway from the operating room is the furnace department with its separate coal room. Off this room will be found one when Mr. Priest will utilize as a negative room. Here all the negatives of pictures will be placed in alphabetical form thus enabling anyone of the attaches to locate the plate of any picture desired readily.

A bath room and toilet are also installed in separate rooms near the stairway. Passing into the next room you are in the part where the actual work is done in the finishing of portraits, etc. In this compartment the pictures are trimmed mounted and framed as the case may be. At the west side are found two smaller rooms, one used as the developing room and the other where all the printing is done. These rooms have hot and cold water running in them for the convenience of the operators. You can go from one room to the other and out, without disturbing the work in either of these dark rooms. Mr. Priest does all of his picture printing by electricity controlled by a machine especially built for this work. An elevator is constructed to go from the lower work room to the operating room, thus saving lots of steps to the workmen and Mr. Priest.

Back of this work room is the kitchen where Mrs. Priest can be found busily at work. Everything in the building is built for absolute convenience and is pretty laid

WITHIN THE LAW

FROM THE PLAY OF

spoke, I shall with her warranty. "I am home again," he said.

Even as he asked the question the quick soldier's face lit up with a smile. He was not in the office. And in the present case under which the son now labored was to be found a certain fullness of character and to be disappointed. To do more a child to really loved his father. The death of the mother, years before had left him without other opportunity for affection. In the home, since he had neither brother nor sister.

In that simple and sincere mental which he bore for his father, the boy revealed a heart ready for love, willing to give of itself for the one he loved. Beyond that as yet there was little to be said of him with exactness. He was a spoiled child of fortune, if you wish to have it so. Certainly, he was only a drone in the world's hive. Thus far he had enjoyed the good things of life without ever doing anything to deserve them by contributing in return, save by his smiles and his genial air of happiness.

In the twenty-three years of his life every gift that money could lavish had been his. If the sum total of benefit was small, at least there remained the comforting fact that the baron was even less. Luxury had not sapped the strength of him. He had not grown vicious, as have so many of his fellows among the sons of the rich.

Sarah explained that Mr. Gilder had been called to the court of general sessions by the judge.

"But what is he doing in court?"

Sarah explained the matter with her usual comeliness.

"One of the girls was arrested for stealing."

"And did want to court to get her out of the scrape. That's just like the old man."

"She was tried today and convicted."

The judge sent for Mr. Gilder to come down this morning and have a talk with him about the sentence."

There was no lessening of the expression of certainty on the young man's face. He loved his father, and he trusted where he loved.

"It will be all right," he declared in a tone of entire conviction. "Dad's heart is as big as a barrel. He'll get her off."

Then of a sudden Dick gave a violent start. He leaned toward the secretary's desk and spoke with a new seriousness of manner.

"Sally, have you any money? I've broke. My taxi has been waiting outside all this time."

"Why, yes," the secretary said cheerfully.

Dick eagerly seized the banknote offered him.

"Maybe much obliged, Sally," he said enthusiastically. "But I must run. Otherwise this accident will be enough to fire me." And he darted out of the room.

CHAPTER II. Only Three Years.

W HEN at last the owner of the store entered the office his face showed extreme irritation.

"What did they do with the Turner girl?" his secretary inquired in an elaborately casual manner.

Gilder did not look up from the face of papers, but answered rather harshly.

"I don't know—I couldn't wait," he said. He made a petulant gesture as he went on. "I don't see why Judge Lawlor bothered me about the matter. He is the one to impose sentence, not I. I am home behind with my work now."

Edward Gilder was a big man physically, plainly the possessor of that abundant vital energy which is a prerequisite for achievement in the ordering of modern business concerns. Force was indeed the dominant quality of the man. His tall figure was proportionately broad, and he was heavily muscled. In fact the body was too ponderous. Perhaps, in that characteristic might be found a clue to the chief fault in his nature. For it was ponderous, spiritually and mentally, as well as materially. The force was displayed vigorously in the face, which was too heavy with its prominent brows and aggressive chin and rather bulbous nose. But there was nothing false anywhere.

It was with his unquestioned plainness of manner that he presently acknowledged the greeting of George Demarest, the chief of the legal staff that looked after the firm's affairs.

"Well, Demarest?" he inquired.

"Judge Lawlor gave her three years," Demarest replied gravely. "It was plain from his manner that he did not altogether approve."

"Good!" Gilder exclaimed. "Take this, Sarah." And he continued, as the girl opened her notebook and poised the pencil. "Be sure to have Smithson post a copy of this conspicuously in all the girls' dressing rooms and in the reading room and in the lunchrooms."

"Why, as to that," the lawyer replied, with a hint of hesitation. "I am not so sure. You see, the fact of the matter is that, though I helped to prosecute the case, I am not a little bit proud of the verdict. I am not sure that Mary Turner is guilty—far from it, in fact. Anyhow, the girl wants to see you, and I wish to urge you to grant her an interview."

"What's the use?" Gilder stormed. "I can't have her crying all over the office and begging for mercy," he protested indignantly. But a note of feigning under the petulance.

Demarest's answer was given with assurance.

"You are mistaken about that. The girl doesn't beg for mercy. In fact that's the whole point of the matter. She demands justice, strange as that may seem in a court of law—and in a law office. The truth is, she's a very unusual girl, a long way beyond the ordinary schoolgirl, both in brain and in education."

"The less reason, then, for her being a thief?" Gilder growled in his low, hoarse voice.

"And perhaps the best reason for her being a thief is that she is a thief," the lawyer replied slowly. "The point for a moment, then, was that there was some of shadowy determination in her voice. 'Just not in the judge's hand, someone has used her if she had anything to say. You know, it's a hard thing to say. But this case is different, let me tell you. She is a thief, but she is a thief in a way that you don't see. It's really a pity, Gilder, that you all but wear. Why, that poor girl, made a lawbreaker."

"Technically," came the opening of the lawyer's mouth. "She seems to have hypnotized you." Then, as a new thought came to the lawyer, he spoke with a tone of anxiety. "There were always the reporters looking for space to fill with foolish vapors."

"Did she say anything against me or the state?"

"Not a word," the lawyer replied gravely. "She merely told us how her father died when she was sixteen years old. She was compelled after that to earn her own living. Then she told how she had worked for you for five years steadily without there ever being a single thing against her."

Said, too, that she had never seen the things found in her locker. And she said more than that. She asked the judge if he himself understood what it means for a girl to be sentenced to prison for something she hadn't done. Somehow, Gilder, the way she talked had its effect on everybody in the courtroom. I know. It's my business to understand things like that. And what she said rang true. What she said and the way she said it take brains and courage. The ordinary crook has not that. So I had a suspicion that she might be speaking the truth. There was a little pause, while the lawyer moved back and forth nervously; then he added, "I believe, Lawlor would have suspended sentence if it hadn't been for your talk with him."

"What she said rang true,"

"I simply did my duty," Gilder said. "You are aware that I did not seek any consultation with Judge Lawlor. He sent for me and asked me what I thought about the case—whether I thought it would be right to let the girl go on a suspended sentence. I told him frankly that I believed that an example should be made of her for the sake of others who might be tempted to steal. Property has some rights, Demarest, although it seems to be getting nowadays so that anybody is likely to deny it."

"Then the fearful, half-stunned note sounded in his voice again as he continued, 'I can't understand why the girl wants to see me.'"

"Why, she just said that if you would see her for ten minutes she would tell you how to stop the thefts in this store."

"There," Gilder cried, "I knew it! The girl wants to confess. Well, it's the first sign of decent feeling she's shown. I suppose it ought to be encouraged. Probably there have been others mixed up in this."

"Perhaps," Demarest admitted. "At least it can do no harm if you see her. I thought you would be willing, so I spoke to the district attorney, and he has given orders to bring her here for a few minutes on the way to the Grand Central station. They're taking her up to Burnside, you know. I wish Gilder—you would have a little talk with her."

The lawyer abruptly went out of the office, leaving the owner of the store fuming.

You Have Neighbors Who Use Home-made Acetylene For Lighting and Cooking

For the asking you can have the name and the address of the nearest one. Then you can, if you wish, make an evening call and get the facts first hand.

All told we have sold no less than six thousand Pilot Acetylene Plants to the people in your state.

These people are our friends. Anyone of them will be proud to show you just how these Pilot plants work—how they automatically mix the gas producing stone, Union Carbide, with plain water. How they make just enough Acetylene to keep the lights and the range going—no more, no less.

They will show you also how the Pilot starts making this gas when the lights are turned on—and stops when the lights are turned off. How this gas is piped to handsome light fixtures in every room in the house—as well as to big, round safety lights in all barns and out-buildings.

The women folks in these homes will be glad to show you just what a boon the Acetylene ranges—how it furnishes heat on top that can be regulated with a little valve—how it does away with handling wood, coal and ashes and makes the kitchen work easy.

You are invited to the Pilot Acetylene Light Plant by what you can see and hear of other Acetylene plants.

You must see a Pilot plant and talk to the people it works for. Then you will have a clearer understanding as to why over two hundred thousand country families now find home-made Acetylene indispensable.

The Pilot makes Acetylene the right way—makes it so well that it provides country homes with even a better light and fuel than the gas which twenty million city people are enjoying.

After you have inspected a Pilot plant we will leave it to you to say whether it doesn't make the whitest, the most brilliant, and most beautiful light you have ever seen.

We will leave it to you also to say whether or not stationary Acetylene fixtures are not much safer than oil lamps, which can be tipped over.

As a matter of fact—only two accidents have been charged to the mis-use and abuse of Pilot Acetylene, while ten thousand accidents have been charged to oil illuminants in a single year.

That is why the Oxweld Company, makers of Pilot Light machines, has grown to be the largest concern of its kind in the world.

Complete Pilot Light Plants may be purchased from dealers in Oxweld Acetylene Company products. These dealers are permanently located in some three thousand different towns.

In this district the undersigned distributors of Pilot Plants will be glad to mail you the Oxweld Company's free advertising books, telling the whole Acetylene story—with full details about the installation of the Pilot, its cost, economy, etc. Just address a postal to—

Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson grange called to order Saturday evening by the worthy overseer with 21 members present and several visitors.

The secretary reported that those who were on the side with Luther Brinnall as captain were victorious and the losing side are expected to be on hand next meeting with a treat.

After a short program all passed to the dining room to do justice to supper of chickens, partridges and rabbits. Grange closed in form.

There will be a sack social and entertainment at the Baptist church Friday evening, November 28, at 7:30 o'clock, under the auspices of the Baptist Young People. Admission is, please multiply your size by two, your size of sock and not of shoe, in nickels or in cents, just twice the number that you wear. We hope it is immense. Everyone come out and have a good time. Adv. 471

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange held a very enjoyable meeting Saturday evening November 15. There was a large number present and all had a good time. Several features were not only enjoyable but valuable. Three candidates were given the third and fourth degrees, after which the lecturer took charge of the following program:

Song—"The Farmer Feeds Them All," by the Grange.

Roll Call—Each member responded, naming his favorite apple.

Instrumental solo—Miss Mildred Lifer, assisted by Mrs. O. D. Wilson. Reading—J. A. Newville.

Discussion, "The Public Question I am Most Interested in," H. L. Wilson, S. C. Smith and Henry Wheeler. Reading—Leon Frost.

Discussion, "The Importance of a Cover Crop," by Henry Wheeler.

Reading—Mrs. Harry Wilson.

Song—H. L. and O. D. Wilson.

Discussion, "Labor-saving Devices in the Farm Home," Mrs. O. D. Wilson.

Program announced for next meeting was short to allow time for election of officers for ensuing year.

The last was a chicken pie supper served on the new dishes presented to the Grange by the Women's Work committee and was greatly enjoyed by all.

Additional Local

Mrs. Lyle Sinnahan returned Saturday from the Petoskey hospital much improved, and is at her home on Michigan avenue.

Ben Yottaw left last Wednesday for Detroit where he will spend the winter. Ted Pearl is in charge of the shop during his absence.

Miss Alice Zimmerman who has been in the employ of Mrs. B. W. Miller will return to her home at Mackinaw, Monday for the winter.

More than 50 people were present at the tea given by the ladies of R. N. of A., at the home of Mrs. Louis Ulrich Friday afternoon.

Friday night of last week Hugo Hampton joined the Phi Delta Phi Fraternity at Ann Arbor. This feat is one of the oldest and best in that city.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Berdan who have been in Detroit the past few weeks, left Saturday for New York where they expect to spend the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gilbert and children of Northport, who have been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Gilbert for the past week, returned to their home Friday.

A ton of Atlantic water yields 8 pounds of salt; Pacific water 79 pounds; Arctic and Antarctic water, 85 pounds; Dead Sea water, 187 pounds and Great Salt Lake, in Utah, 207 pounds.

The B. W. Miller residence previously located on the corner of State and Mason streets is being moved to property owned by Mrs. B. W. Miller on Park avenue where it will be rebuilt.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong returned Saturday night from Chicago where he attended the meeting of Clinics the past week and visited his daughter, Helen, who is attending school in that city.

Mrs. Oluf Nordrum and little son Iuseu, returned, Wednesday from Ludington where they have been visiting relatives the past month. Mrs. Nordrum's mother returned with them and will remain for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Blanchard of the Michigan Hotel, 401 S. Halstead street, Chicago, are entertaining their eldest daughter and grand daughter Mrs. Olston VanDusen and Miss Hazel VanDusen of this city for two weeks.

Did you ever stop to consider that the local business houses are using the Courier to advertise the many special offers for different days of the week? Read the advertisements in this issue and you will find bargains that will equal the mail order house prices and the goods are before you when you purchase them. Courteous treatment is another good essential that goes with trading in the home business houses.

The Traverse City team of the Michigan State Baseball league drew a $100 fine the other day from the national board of arbitration of minor baseball leagues, for having violated the salary limit during the playing season of 1913. Facts relative to this violation were brought out during an investigation of the case of Outfielder Hines, of the Traverse City club, who had refused to play until his back salary had been paid. The board of arbitration awarded Hines his entire salary.

The Fanny M. Rose, while coming from the Fishermens Islands, with the Minnie S. in tow, met with an accident when the tow line broke and the Minnie S. was left to the mercy of the seas. The Fannie M. Rose steamed into port and the life-savers went out to get the Minnie S. and when they got out to where the Minnie S. was supposed to have laid, no boat could be found. The life-savers searched for several hours in an attempt to locate her. The Minnie S. was a gasoline boat ferry boat formerly owned by George Smith of this city and now the property of Frankfort parties. The Minnie S. was later found on 7 mile point.

Ladies of the Baptist church will hold their annual rummage sale in the Johnson building, Friday and Saturday, November 21-22. Home made baked goods and candies will also be on sale. Remember the time and place. Adv. 471

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT

City Council Passed Final Resolution on South Side Sewer Assessments.

The council met at its meeting Monday night passed the final resolutions confirming the assessment of the south side sewers in the second and third wards. This involves the expenditures of about $27,000 and will provide all the sewers the south side will need in the immediate future.

The sewer plants are comprehensive and provide an adequate sewer system for the future demands of these wards. While some objection was raised by property owners there was none so serious that couldn't be adjusted by the council. It is public improvements such as these that has made Charlevoix, not only a beautiful place in which to reside, but has also made our city the most desirable health resort in northern Michigan.

The city administration is to be congratulated upon its foresight and courage to do the best it can to keep Charlevoix at its present high standard.

Coming December 1st.

Monday December 1, is the date when J. Leady the Optometrist will be at the Baker's Inn. He will remain one day. Headache and dozens of cures, crossed eyes, straightened without an operation. Fitting children's eyes a specialty. 472

D. B. U.

[Detroit Business University]

The oldest and most influential business training school in Michigan is giving today the most modern and thorough courses which fully qualify its graduates for high grade positions.

Tuition costs more in this school than in many others, but the results prove it to be the cheapest in the end. Low grade work and cheap instruction are found in cheap schools. The D. B. U. is out in that class.

We invite you to write for our curriculum and to spend six months with us during the present school season.

Receiver Asked For.

The White Lumber company of Boyne City have filed petitions in the United States courts for appointment of the Michigan Trust company as receivers for the firm. The liabilities are estimated at about $200,000. The assets are said to be largely in excess of the liabilities, but business conditions are such that the assets can not be readily realized upon. Consequently the receivership is asked for, for the better security of the creditors.
The company will still continue to run their mills in Boyne, where the company's headquarters are located.

LOOGEED IN JAIL

Boyce Falls Farmer Who Shot Brother Captured in Mecosta County.

John Arnold, who shot and critically wounded his brother, Jesse, at Boyce Falls Wednesday evening, September 10, has been returned to the county and was placed in jail in this city Tuesday.

The shooting, which was a shock to the community where it happened was the result of a quarrel between the two brothers over the alleged attentions John was bestowing on a widow, that were of no avail.

John made his escape when he shot Jesse and when located later he was sick and was confined to his bed at the county farm. He made his escape from there and until the other day he was not located. He was arrested in Mecosta county Monday and immediately brought to this city and placed in jail. He will remain there until further action is taken toward prosecution.

NEW R. S. & M. COUNCIL

New Council Was Organized in Masonic Order Last Thursday.

Petoskey Degree Team Confirmed Work—Grand Officers Installed Council.

The Charlevoix Masons celebrated the greatest day in their history last Thursday afternoon when the Petoskey Council came over here and confirmed the degree work on 20 candidates, eleven of whom were from Charlevoix and nine from Petoskey.

Lou B. Winsor, E. E. M. of Red
City, Charles C. Mover, Grand Secretary of Coldwater and Arthur Mc-Cloud, Grand Lecturer of Petoskey City were the grand officers of the state of Michigan present, and who instilled the council.

About 70 visitors from Petoskey,
Boyne City, Pellston and Bellaire were present. There were 32 charter members from Charlevoix present. The Ladies of the O. E. S. served one of the most elaborate suppers in the history of any fraternal meeting.

The following officers were elected and installed:
Mason Rose—E. E. M.
Eversz Nordrum—D. M.
Kollie Lewis—P. C. W.
Dr. W. R. Barney—Secretary.
Frank Hines—Treasurer.
Otto Hines—C. G.

Frank Glassford—C. C.
John Acker—G. S.
Frank Wilkinson—S.
Reports from members state that the Petoskey degree team are very capable and that the meeting on the whole was one that will long be remembered by everyone present.

DEATH CLAIMS INFANT

Son of Dr. and Mrs. D. F. Newman Died Saturday Morning.

Robert DeLyne Newman, the infant son of Dr. and Mrs. D. F. Newman died Saturday morning at 11:30 o'clock of pneumonia poisoning, aged about six months. The child was born May 30, 1913, and was sick only one day.

A short prayer was held at the house Monday morning with Rev.
Quinton Walker in charge, and the body was then taken to Cedar Run where the funeral was held Tuesday at 1:00 o'clock with Rev. Joseph Zimmerman officiating.

The parents and one brother, Harold K. Newman survive and have the sympathy of the entire community.

Grading Tubers.

The idea of sorting and grading potatoes, is taking hold of the people of the Grand Traverse section of western Michigan. Last week, a Traverse City man disposed of 25 bushels of potatoes to a Chicago customer at 90 cents the bushel, although the going price in Traverse City for potatoes is only about 30 cents. These potatoes were sorted as to size and quality, but were not wrapped in tissue paper, as are applied. There is some talk of establishing a Grand Traverse brand for tubers that are in the same class as those sold this week.

A PROCLAMATION

By The Governor.

Good health is an asset. The laws of health are as much God's laws as are the ten commandments.
The ravages of the White Plague surpass the ravages of war. Intelligent concerted effort on the part of the American people would in a few generations exterminate this plague. It is humane to use all possible means to relieve the afflicted and protect those who are constitutionally weak.

If, however, it is imperative, that tuberculosis patients have an abundance of pure air and sunshine, systematic "out door" exercise, nourishing food and pleasant surroundings, how immensely important is it that all who are not afflicted have the benefit of these agencies in order that we may eventually have a people who are immune.

The truth of the matter is, there exists a superstitious fear in relation to pure air, especially in living and sleeping rooms, a fear of disastrous consequences from "out door" living. Let the evangelists of rational living not relax their efforts in teaching the people how to avoid the contagion of tuberculosis but at the same time let them teach "well people" how to acquire the physical vigor that resists tuberculosis and at the same time resists all other diseases.

Therefore, I Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, urge the observance of Sunday, December 7th, as Tuberculosis Day.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State of Michigan, this nineteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-seventh.

By the Governor: Woodbridge N. Ferris, Frederick C. Martindale, Secretary of State.

SEND DELEGATES TO SAGINAW

To Attend Boys' Conference, November
28 to 30 Inclusive.

Charlevoix Represented by Usher, Burns, Scroggie, Driggett and Maschow.

Following closely upon the annual state convention of the Michigan Young Men's Christian association and the dinner for business men at Detroit, November 24, comes the Boys' conference at Saginaw.
The dates for this event are November 28 to 30 and at least 1,000 boys from all sections of the state will be present. As many as 500 boys' organizations are expected to send two delegates each. Two hundred cities and towns will be registered.

Coach J. A. Macklin of the Michigan Agricultural College has consented to address the conference, November 29. The famous athletic director whose team has upset every calculation in football this year will be the big attraction at the Saturday night meeting and will talk on the subject of "Clean Athletics." Motion pictures of the Michigan Cornell foot ball game are to be shown at the same time and J. A. VanDis, secretary of boys' work for the state association, reports an unusual interest in this year's meeting. Advices from various sections show that large delegations will be the rule rather than the exception.

Kalamazoo will send 50 boys and Ann Arbor will send at least 35.
Both of these cities are prepared to make a strong pull for the boys' conference in 1914. A special car will take the 50 delegates from Flint to Saginaw. At Grand Rapid the group of 40 to 50 boys will be increased by delegations from Holland, Muskegon and other western Michigan cities. Jackson is preparing to send 30 delegates, Ypsilanti 25, Lansing 30 and Bay City from 30 to 40. Gratiot and Sanilac counties will each be represented by 100 boys, according to the reports received by Mr. Van Dis.
Special cars will probably be provided for these delegates.

Donald Wells of Grand Rapids, presiding officer of the 1912 conference and now a freshman at the University of Michigan, will open the first business session, after which the meeting will be in charge of the 1913 officers.

Boy Scouts to the number of 100 from all over the state are preparing to attend the conference.

Among the speakers on the program are Albert E. Roberts of New York, international rural work secretary; A. C. Robinson, international secretary for employed boys, and J. M. Armitage, dean of boys' work in the Y. M. C. A. College, Chicago.

The first business session for the election of officers will be followed by a conference banquet, at which both Mr. Roberts and Mr. Robinson will speak. The music for this occasion will be furnished by the Alpena boys' uniformed band, consisting of 21 pieces.

Following the Saturday morning breakfast for leaders in the city and county fields, the conference will divide into two sections—city and county. These will be in charge of the principal speakers at the banquet. One of the interesting features of these section conferences will be the papers read by the boys themselves on their experiences, their opinions of the work and their solution of the problems that have confronted them. Papers are to be read by 20 boys, and the points outlined by them will afterward be discussed under expert leadership.

The main purpose of the annual conference is to bring together the representative older boys in Michigan to discuss their moral problems particularly and also to inspire them with new and larger ideals of Christian service. Only boys over 15 years of age are allowed to attend the conference as delegates.

Special efforts are being made this year, it is announced, to attract employed boys. For this reason Mr. Robinson, an expert on employed boys' work, was engaged.

After a general meeting of a delegates and a session of Hayo Wentila campers Saturday, there will be a recreation period of several hours and then a parade of all delegates, led by the Alpena boys' band.
Local committees of the gymnasium work and swimming exhibitions.

The big meeting of the conference is scheduled for Saturday night, November 29. There will be a musical program, followed by moving pictures, reports of boys on discussions and an address.
Sunday afternoon will be devoted to a meeting for delegates and all older boys over 16 years of age.
A. E. Roberts, rural work secretary for the international committee, will address this meeting. A second meeting will be held for young er boys of Saginaw, which Mr.
Robinson, secretary for employed boys, will address. The conference will close Sunday evening, November 30.

Harold Usher and Cecil Burns are delegates from the Congregational church, and Dean Scroggie and William Driggett represent the Methodists while Charles Maschow was chosen for the high school representative. The boys will leave here Friday morning, arriving in Saginaw in time to attend the big banquet that night. They will return home on Monday. Practically every community will be represented by boys, the number governed by the groups of the organizations.

NEW TRAIN SCHEDULE

Went Into Effect Sunday, November 23—Train to Petoskey in the Morning.

The following train schedule went into effect Sunday, November 23, on the Pere Marquette railroad, and will give a train to Petoskey in the morning, leaving here at 10:40 a. m.

A schedule was reported in this paper to start on November 17, but we were misinformed. The correct schedule which is now in effect is as follows:

Trains north, leave Charlevoix at 10:40 a. m. and 9:50 p. m. Trains south, leave Charlevoix at 8:20 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. This gives two trains each way daily except Sunday.

TWO BOATS GO ON ROCKS IN FOG

Members of Crews Taken Off Boats by Local Life Savers.

Heavy Seas Rolling Made Work of Tugs Releasing Boats Impossible.

Saturday night the Life Savers were called to the rescue of the Saginaw, in command of Captain Alford, which went on the rocks about three and one-half miles north of Charlevoix, at 7:30 o'clock.
The crew of four was rescued and returned to the local station.

The Schooner was on her way from Cross Village with a 20-ton cargo of grain for the Argo Milling company, of this city when she became lost in the fog. Tuesday the Life Savers went out with the tug Paradee at 7:30 in the morning, returning at 1:30 p. m. The seas were so high that the tug could not reach her to do anything.

At 11:30 o'clock Saturday night the life saving crew to the rescue of the Arbutus, the Booth Fisheries Boat and took Amos Webster off, where she went aground in the fog on Big Rock Point. The Arbutus was returning from Northport. The life savers boat was taken up to Big Rock Point with a team of horses and the crew did not return home until 3:00 a. m. Sunday morning. At 9:30 a. m. the tug Gerken and the life saving crew went out to pull the Arbutus off but were unsuccessful owing to the heavy seas and they returned at 4:30 p. m.
Sunday.

Captain Partridge of the local station informs us that no more attempts will be made to release the boats until the lake is calm as the tugs can not get to either boat when the sea is rolling. He also informs us that no particular damage has been done to either vessel so far as can be seen. Weather indications are pointing to northwesterly gales which will make the release of the stranded boats indefinite.

"Within the Law."

Last week the Courier began printing the serial story "Within the Law" in its columns and will print the same complete. This is one of the greatest plays now playing on the American stage. Manager, Loskot informed us that he has booked "Within the Law" for February 3, 1914. This play is staged by the Shuberts, a millionaire theatrical corporation of New York and is a bonded attraction. It is very seldom that a bonded attraction ever plays in this community and you are afforded an excellent opportunity by this booking. Don't fail to read the story in the Courier, and you will want to see the play.

Coming Monday, December 1st.

Monday December 1, is the date

THE LONGEST WAY AROUND

Is Sometimes the Most Economical Way Home in Road Building.

BENEFITS BY GOOD ROADS

Average Life of Horses and Automobiles Increased—Cost of Hauling Reduced.

Department of Agriculture Advises Cutting Out of Grades on Highways at Expense of Tillable Land.

The average life of horses and automobiles may be increased, and the cost of hauling reduced, according to the Office of Roads, of the Department of Agriculture, by relocating many old roads and the more scientific laying out of new ones. The natural tendency in road building is to build a straight road, whether it goes over steep grades or hills, or not, and pulling over these grades naturally adds to the wear and tear on horses and vehicles.

The doctrine of the Office of Roads is that the longest way around may often be the shortest and most economical way home, and that frequently by building a highway around a hill or grade, but little appreciable distance is added and this is more than offset by the reduced strain of hauling.

The chief drawback from the farm owner's point of view is that the laying out of roads on this principle of avoiding grades necessitates, in some cases, running the road through good farm land or orchards or pasture, instead of going around the farm line and building the road through old worn-out fields and rocky knolls. This, of course, must raise a question in the mind of the individual land owner as to what the cutting up of his property by a road yields him individual advantages and so benefits his community as to offset the use of such land for a road, or to overcome the inconvenience of having his land divided. In this connection the Office of Roads points out that the running of a road and the resulting traffic through a good farm, where there are good sheep, cattle, horses, grain, fruit or vegetables, has a certain advertising value and in many instances makes the land more valuable. In other cases, the importance of such level road to the community is so great that thought will repay those using the road to give the farmer the equivalent in land equally good in place of what he has sacrificed to the commonwealth.

At any rate, the Office of Roads is now taking special pains to make clear the economic advantage of avoiding steep grades in their roads, even at some sacrifice of better land.
Investigation shows that the laying of such roads over hills has resulted more from attention to the preservation of farm lines than from scientific attention to the problem road building.

According to the testimony of farmers consulted, where a horse is able to pull 4,000 pounds on a level road, it would have difficulty in pulling 3,000 pounds up a steep hill. The size of the load, therefore, tends to be measured by the grade of the largest hill on the road to market. In a number of cases actual experiment shows that the relocating of roads around hills has been accomplished, either with no addition in road length in some instances, and with the adding of only a few feet to the highway in others. The Office knows of no case where a properly relocated road which has cut out grades has led to any question as to its material reducing of hauling costs.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA
FROM THE PLAY OF
BAYARD VEILLER

Copyright, 1913, by L. H. R. The Company

"Hello, dad!"
Gilder sprang to his feet, his face suddenly grown young and radiant.
"Hi!" The old man was softened to exquisite tenderness.
As the eyes of the two met the boy rushed forward, and in the next moment the hands of father and son clasped firmly. Presently Gilder spoke, with an effort toward hardness in his voice to mask how much he was shaken. But the tones rang more kindly than any he had used for many a day, tremulous with affection.
"What brought you back?" he demanded.
"Why, I just wanted to come back home," he said lightly. "And, for the love of heaven, give Sarah $5. I borrowed it from her to pay the taxi. You see, dad, I'm broke."
"Of course!" With the saying Ed ward Gilder roared gargantuan laughter. In the burst of merriment his pent feelings found their vent. He was still chuckling when he spoke, sure from much experience of ocean travel. "Poker on the ship, I suppose."
"No, not that, though I did have a little run in at Monte Carlo. But it was the ship that I should mention at that. You see, dad, they hired Captain Kild and a bunch of pirates as stewards, and what they did to little Ed here was something else. And yet, that wasn't the real trouble either. The fact is, I just naturally went broke. Not a hard thing to do on the other side."

"I am glad to be home, dad."

"Nor on this," the father interjected dryly.
"Anyhow, it doesn't matter much," Dick replied, quite unabashed. "Tell me, dad, how goes it?"
"Pretty well, pretty well, son. I'm glad to see you home again, my boy. There was a great tenderness in the usually rather cold gray eyes.
"And I'm glad to be home, dad, to be—there was again that clearing of the throat, but he finished bravely—"with you."
The father avoided a threatening display of emotion by an abrupt change of subject to the wife.
"Have a good time?" he inquired casually.
"The time of my young life," I tell you, dad. It's a fact that I did almost break the bank at Monte Carlo. I'd have done it sure if only my money had held out."
"It seems to me that I've heard something of the sort before," was Gilder's caustic comment. But his smile was still wholly sympathetic. He took a curious vicarious delight in the escapades of his son, probably because he himself had committed no follies in his callow days. "Why didn't you curb me?" he asked, puzzled at such restraint on the part of his son.
"Because it gave me a capital excuse for coming home."
"You clear out of here, boy!" Gilder commanded brusquely. "I'm a working man. But here, wait a minute," he added. He brought forth from a pocket a neat sheaf of banknotes, which he held out. "There's the carfare for you," he said, with a chuckle. "And now clear out. I'll see you at dinner."
"You can always get rid of me on the same terms," Dick remarked shyly.

in the next day he turned with a happy speech, which was uttered in splendid disregard for the pocket of money he had just received. "Oh, dad, please don't forget to give Sarah that $5 I borrowed from her for the taxi!"
The owner of the store returned to his labors with a new zest, for the meeting with his son had put him in high spirits. Perhaps it might have been better for Mary Turner had she come to him just then, while he was yet in this softened mood. But fate had ordained that other events should restore him to his usual harder self before their interview. Smithson entered with an expression of discontent flared on his rather vicious countenance. He walked almost timidly to the desk and spoke with evident distress as his employer looked up interrogatively.
"McCracken has detained—er—a lady, sir," he said feebly. "She has been searched and we have found about $100 worth of lace on her."
"Well?" Gilder demanded impatiently. "Such affairs were too common in the store to make necessary this intrusion of the matter on him. Why did you come to me about it?"
"I'm very sorry, sir, but I thought it wise, sir, to bring the matter to your personal attention. The lace happens to be the wife of J. W. Gaskell, the banker, you know."

CHAPTER III
The Victim of the Law.

YES, Gilder did know. The mention of the name was like a spell in the air, it was upon the attitude of the banker, the owner of the store. Instantly his expression changed.
"How extremely awkward!" he cried, and there was a very real concern in his voice. He regarded Smithson kindly, when that rather pudgy gentleman once again assumed his mannerly bearing. "You were quite right in coming to me." For a moment he was silent, plunged in thought. Finally he spoke with the decisiveness characteristic of him. "Of course there's nothing we can do. Just put the stuff back on the counter and let her go."
But Smithson had not yet wholly unburdened himself. He again cleared his throat nervously.
"She's very angry, Mr. Gilder," he announced humbly. "She—er—she demands an—er—an apology!"
The owner of the store half rose from his chair, then threw himself back with an exclamation of disgust.
"And loses my soul!" he cried. Again he fell silent, considering the situation which Smithson had presented. At last, however, he mastered his irritation to some degree and spoke his command briefly. "Well, Smithson, apologize to her. It can't be helped."
When Smithson had left the office Gilder turned to his secretary.
"Take this," he directed, and he forth with dictated the following letter:
J. W. Gaskell, Esq., Central National Bank, New York.
My Dear Mr. Gaskell—I feel that I should be doing less than my duty as a man if I did not let you know at once that Mrs. Gaskell is in urgent need of medical attention. She came into our store today, and—
He paused for a moment. "No, put it this way," he said finally.
We found her wandering about our store today in a very nervous condition. In her excitement she carried away about $100 worth of rare lace. Not recognizing her, our store detective detained her for a short time. Fortunately for us all, Mrs. Gaskell was able to explain who she was, and she has just come to her home. Hoping for Mrs. Gaskell's speedy recovery, and with all good wishes, I am yours very truly, Smithson again entered the office, even more perturbed than before.
"What on earth is the matter now?" Gilder spluttered suspiciously.
"It's Mrs. Gaskell still," Smithson replied in great trepidation. "She wants you personally, Mr. Gilder, to apologize to her. She says that the action taken against her is an outrage, and she is not satisfied with the apologies of all the rest of us. She says you must make one, too, and that the store detective must be discharged for intolerable insolence."
Gilder bounced up from his chair angrily.
"I'll not discharge McCracken," he vowed, glaring on Smithson, who shrank visibly.
"But about the apology, Mr. Gilder," he reminded, speaking very deferentially, yet with insistence.
"Oh, I'll apologize," he said, with very little of dissent. "I'll make things even up a bit when I get a reply from Gaskell. I shrewdly suspect that that estimable gentleman is going to cut him a piece of my baking, from his wife's recipe. And his will be an honest apology, which mine won't." And he left the room.

It was on this same day that Sarah, on one of her numerous trips through the store in behalf of Gilder, was met by a salesgirl, whose name, Helen Morris, she chanced to know.
"What on earth do you want?" Sarah inquired suspiciously.
"What did they do to Mary Turner?"
"They sent her to prison for three years!"
"Three years?" The salesgirl had repeated the words in a tone that was definitely, yet a tone vehement in its incredulous questioning. "Three years?" she said again, as one refusing to be deceived.
"Yes, three years!"
"Good God!" There was no trace of merriment in the exclamation that broke from the girl's lips. Instead only a tense horror that reached to the roots of her emotion.
"Sarah?" Sarah demanded, with a directness habitual to her. "Why are you so queer about it? This is the third time, or have asked me about Mary Turner. What's it to you, I'd like to know?"
The salesgirl started violently, and a deep flush drove the accustomed pallor from her cheeks. She was momentarily much disturbed by the question. "What is it to me?" she repeated in an effort to gain time. "Why, nothing—nothing at all, only—she's a friend of mine, a great friend of mine. Oh, yes!"
There was a note of desolation as she went on speaking in a whisper meant for the ears of no other. "I've known her for years. Oh, I didn't understand. It's awful awful!" With the final word she hurried off, her mind one of wondering grief.
Sarah was thinking intently of Mary Turner after her return to the office. As she glanced up at the opening of the door she did not at first recognize the figure outlined there. She remembered Mary Turner as a tall, slender girl who showed an underlying vitality in every movement, a girl with a face of regular features, in which was a complexion of blended milk and roses, with a radiant joy of life shining through all her arduous and vulgar conditions. Instead of this, now she saw a frail form that stood swaying in the doorway, that bent in a sinister fashion, which told of feeble impotence, with the face was quite bloodless.

A man stood beside her, one of his hands clasped around the girl's wrist. It was Gaskell, from headquarters, who spoke in a rough, indifferent voice.
"The district attorney told me to bring this girl here on my way to the Grand Central station with her."
"Mr. Gilder will be right back. Come in and wait!"
The two went forward very slowly, the officer, carelessly conscious of his duty, walking with awkward steps to suit the feeble movements of the girl. Sarah at last found her voice for an expression of sympathy.
"I'm sorry, Mary," she said hesitatingly. "I'm terribly sorry, terribly sorry."
The girl did not look up. She stood still, swaying a little, as if from weakness.
"Are you?" she said. "I did not know. Nobody has been near me the whole time I have been in the Tombs."
"Why?" Sarah exclaimed, "there was Helen Morris today! She has been asking about you again and again. She's all broken up over your trouble."
"Who is Helen Morris?" the lifeless voice demanded. There was no interest in the question.
Gilder entered the office with the quick, bustling activity that was ordinarily expressed in his every movement. He paused as he beheld the two visitors, then he spoke curtly to the secretary.
"You may go, Sarah. I will ring when I wish you again."
There followed an interval of silence while the secretary was leaving the office and the girl with her wanderer stood waiting in his pleasure. Gilder cleared his throat twice in an embarrassed fashion to him before finally he spoke to the girl.
"My girl," Gilder said gently, in hard voice was softened by an unregret—"my girl, I am sorry about this."

"You should be!" came the instant answer.
"Come, come!" Gilder exclaimed testily. "That's on you to take with me!"
"Why? What sort of tone do you expect me to take?" was the retort in the lifeless voice.
"I expected a decent amount of humility from one in your position."
Life quickened swiftly in the drooping form of the girl. She stood suddenly erect, and her face lost its bleakness of pallor. The eyes opened wide and linked straight into those of the man who had employed her.
"Would you be humble," she demanded, and now her voice was become softly husky, yet forbidding, too, with a note of passion. "Would you be humble if you were going to prison for three years for something you didn't do?"
"I don't mind here, sir," Gaskell said. He meant to make his manner very reassuring. "They all say that. They are innocent of course! Yes, they all say it. If I don't do any good, but just the same they all swear they're innocent. They keep it up to the very last, no matter how right they've been got."
The voice of the girl rang clear. There was a note of insistence that carried a curious dignity of its own. The very simplicity of her statement

RURAL CARRIERS KEEP RECORD

Of Deliveries During Months of October and November.

Report of Parcels Post Deliveries Carried up to Saturday, November 1.

During October and November the rural carriers at the Charlevoix postoffice were instructed to count every piece of mail they delivered and took up and also to keep an accurate account of the weight of all mail handled, both delivered and taken up. Their work for the month of October showed that they do a vast amount of business for Uncle Sam, and their patrons also, there having for that period been 410 pieces of mail delivered, weighing 1299 pounds 10 ounces. By routes
the figures are as follows:

Number 1, 190 pieces delivered,
weighing 318 pounds, 6 ounces.
Number 2, 57 pieces delivered
weighing 207 pounds, 6 ounces.
Number 3, 10 pieces delivered
weighing 41 pounds, 11 ounces.
Number 4, 204 pieces delivered weighing 689 pounds.

The parcel post has hit the rural carriers pretty hard, the system being taken advantage of by our merchants generally, and the force does everything in its power to give the patrons satisfaction and good service.

MUST AFFIX STAMPS

Patrons May Request Postal Employees to Place
Stickers on Certain Classes of Mail

Christmas gift givers this year will not be forced to tick their own stamps, when they affix the proper postage to their parcels for mailing, unless they wish to, for the postoffice department announced today that its postmasters and their assistants would attend to that duty if requested. The innovation is put in force in the interest of better mail service during the holiday rush and is expected to facilitate the movement of the vast amount of matter that will tax the resources of the department's many employees.

Orders were issued to postmasters to affix postage, when requested, on mail matter of the second, third and fourth class, the latter being parcel post matter. The stamps will be pre-cancelled, and the plan is expected to prevent the great waste of time experienced by postoffice patrons, while waiting in line to buy postage and mail their packages.

"Under such authorization," declared Postmaster General Burton, when a parcel is presented for mailing, the clerk receiving it, after collecting the required postage, may endorse on the parcel the amount of the postage, which later will be affixed by an employee of the postoffice. His plan will result in a great saving in time to the department, as well as the people.

Von.

To Germany "von" implies nobility, and all persons who belong to the nobility prefix "von" to their names without any exception. Persons who do not belong to the nobility cannot have the right to put "von" before their names. A man who is knighted for some reason, however, has the same right to put "von" before his family name as a person of ancient nobility.
For instance, when Alexander Humboldt was knighted he became Alexander von Humboldt. All his descendants, male and female, take the prefix.

Wednesday evening of last week, Harriet Gunstons of East Jordan, and Webb Holt of Albion, were united in marriage in this city by the pastor of the Congregational church, Rev. C. E. Daggar. They returned to East Jordan, where a reception was held for them, leaving Thursday morning for Albion, where they will make their future home.

Last Saturday the local high school football team went to the Soo and met the only defeat they have encountered this season. We are informed that the Soo team was extremely heavy and that by the score we are inclined to believe Charlevoix hit a tough argument in gridiron athletics. The score of 72 to 0 was a hard blow to the local team and leaves a black mark in the hearts of the team. Cheer up—there is another year coming to regain the lost honors.

Marriage licenses issued this week were to Wesley J. Sudman, age 24, of Boyne Valley township, and E. Mildred Hutton, age 19, of South Arm township. Harold E. Jacobs, age 21, and Gertrude M. ENGAGEMENTS ANNOUNCED

Tuesday Evening at the Home of R. A. Emrey 209 Clinton Street.

Thirty Guests Royally Entertained by the Future Brides, Misses Ruth and Marion Emrey.

Last Tuesday at the home of R. A. Emrey, 209 Clinton street the Misses Ruth and Marion Emrey entertained thirty guests at a four course luncheon. The event was the double announcement of the engagements of Miss Ruth Emrey to William Donahue of Hancock, Michigan and Miss Marion Emrey to Leo Carey of this city.

The young ladies are the daughters of R. A. Emrey, Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county and are very popular among a large circle of Charlevoix's young people, who join in hearty congratulations.

The dining room was prettily and uniquely decorated with chrysanthemums and smilax, with appropriate favors, Cupids predominating. Mrs. B. W. Miller, Mrs. E. G. Hines and Mrs. Jones McCrory, aunts of the young ladies served the luncheon. The out of town guests present were Mrs. John Plank of Fox Islands and Mrs. Glenn Warren of Petoskey.

The Fact Remains

No amount of misrepresentation by the peddlers of alum baking powders, no juggling with chemicals, or pretended analysis, or cooked-up certificates, or falsehoods of any kind, can change the fact that

Royal Baking Powder
has been found by the official examinations to be of the highest leavening efficiency, free from alum, and of absolute purity and wholesomeness.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for making finest and most economical food.

Grange Column

Charlevoix Pomona Grange No. 40.

Charlevoix Pomona Grange met with Peninsula grange Thursday, November 13, with the following officers present: Master, Overseer, Lecturer, Steward, Chaplain, Secretary, Gate Keeper and Lady Assistant Steward. It was voted to send resolutions of sympathy to Brother Henry Black, who has been ill for some time. The committee on the Good of the Order recommended that the Fair association be asked to change the rules so that all grange exhibits must be in place the day of the fair and also that more than one plate of any variety of fruit may be shown in grange exhibits. That hereafter all members who are one year or more in arrears with their dues be notified and if dues are not paid within six months that they be suspended. That the secretary be allowed $10.00 per year for his services.

All these recommendations were, on motion, adopted. It was suggested by Worthy Master Means that the Pomona grange publish a year book and he was appointed to investigate the feasibility of the plan.

Harmony grange was declared the banner grange for the second quarter and Pomona for the third. The financial committee reported receipts of $8.08 and disbursements of $7.77 with a balance of $12.21.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing two years and were installed by Brother E. H. Ward of Charlevoix:

Master, J. E. Chew.
Overseer, John Knudsen.
Lecturer, E. H. Clark.
Steward, Frank Hammond.
Chaplain, Mrs. Fred Heller.
Treasurer, J. A. Newville.
Secretary, L. D. Wilson.
Gatekeeper, Fred Heller.
Ceres, Miss Sadie Hammond.
Pomona, Miss Essie Shepard.
Flora, Mrs. Sam Persons.
Lady Assistant Steward, Miss Fannie Knudsen.
Member of Executive Committee, Herbert L. Diney.

Delegates to State Grange, Mr. and Mrs. William Means.

The next meeting will be held with Wilson grange Thursday, February 12, 1914.

Uncle Tom's Cabin, at the Charlevoix theatre, Friday, November 28. The one opportunity of seeing this great play, produced as it should be, with all special scenery, capable cast, scenic and mechanical effects, and like old friends that improve with age. Watch for the band.—Adv. 181

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met in regular form, Tuesday, November 18, with Frank H. Hammond, master in the chair. After the regular order of business one candidate was instructed in the mysteries of the first and second degrees by the degree team. One candidate was obligated in the third and fourth degrees. The lecturer's program was dispensed with as it was too late. For the good of the order Brother Matthew Saunders and wife were elected to get money and pay for the building of a kitchen. After the meeting the Sisters surprised the Brothers with a very delicious supper which was enjoyed by all. The next meeting will be held in two weeks.

If you are thinking of purchasing a Fur Coat or Set of Furs see my line now as they are going fast and will be closed out within a short time. Benj. Brown.—Adv. 481

Marion Center Grange 956.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session Friday evening with a good attendance. Visitors were present from Ellsworth and Ironton granges. Two candidates were initiated in the 3rd and 4th degrees. Lecturer's hour consisted of music, readings and a dialogue. After grange closed all adjourned to the dining room where oysters, coffee and cake were served. The next regular meeting will be held Friday evening, December 5th, when the election of the new officers for 1914 will occur. All members are requested to be present. Visitors—always welcome.

Harmon's Uncle Tom's Cabin, will be at the Charlevoix theatre, Friday, November 28, producing the correct and only authorized version of Uncle Tom's Cabin, the great masterpiece. Watch for the band.—Adv. 181

Wilson Grange.

Wilson grange No. 719 was called to order by the worthy overseer, Saturday, November 21, 1913, with an attendance of about twenty members and one visitor.

During the business session several bills were presented and allowed. Brother George Jagnay, who expects to go away for the winter sent in his resignation as treasurer and Brother E. S. Brimhall was appointed to fill the vacancy.

After the lecture hour which consisted of a few selections, Grange was dismissed to meet again in three weeks. After grange and at recess the hunt captain treated the members to candy and popcorn.

Chicago Stock Show.

President H. J. Waters of the Kansas Agricultural College, on a recent occasion expressed himself as follows:

"The International Live Stock exposition, which will this year be held from November 29th to December 6th, is the court of last resort in all matters pertaining to the improvement of live stock. It is the place where all controversies regarding superior merit are settled for the year, and as such contributes more to live stock improvement than any other single agency in America. As an object lesson it is unequalled on the continent. As a means of awakening interest in improved live stock, it and similar shows are indispensable. It is a liberal education in live stock production for any farmer, breeder or student to attend the International."

ANNUAL STATE BOYS CONFERENCE

Thirteen Hundred Present From All Parts of the State.

GREAT TREAT FOR THE BOYS

Decided to Hold Next Conference at Ann Arbor.

Speakers Advise Boys to Copy After the Man of 20 Centuries Ago—Interesting Discussions Held.

The Eleventh Annual State Boy's Conference which was held at Saginaw this year from November 28-30, was attended by about thirteen hundred boys from all parts of the state, representing Churches, Clubs, Sunday School classes, Boy Scouts and City and County Y. M. C. A. Clubs.

This large number of boys were heartily welcomed and cared for by the people of that city, especially the high school boys.

The regular session began at 2:00 in the afternoon on Friday, with the registration of delegates, although the larger number did not arrive in Saginaw till nearly six in the evening. About that time the fellows and speakers sat down to a splendid banquet. This was a great treat for the boys, some of whom came from such a distance as Escanaba. The following speakers of the evening, William H. Gay of Grand Rapids, and C. C. Robinson and A. E. Roberts of New York, gave very interesting talks. Saturday morning the conference divided into two sections composed of the city and county boys. The latter of these sections was led by I. M. Artman of Chicago, with the address "What can the Bible do for me." Then several papers were given by the boys in which it was resolved that the country boys had the most and greatest advantages and that the "C." in Y. M. C. A., and its meaning were what gained for it the highest recommendation of the people and also their esteem.

The other section of the conference was led by E. C. Foster of Detroit. Here also effective and interesting papers were given by those present. The afternoon was given over to recreation and educational features. The games, basketball, swimming and efficiency test were pulled off in the Burt Mendenhall Training School and the Y. M. C. A. building. The Boys Work Exhibit and the Art Exhibit of American Masterpieces took place in the Auditorium. After this many places of interest were visited by the boys Saturday evening group suppers were given in the various churches in the city.

At 7:30 the boys gathered in the large roomy Auditorium for the big and final meeting of the conference. Here it was decided after a close election and vigorous campaigns, to have the next conference at Ann Arbor. For speakers of the occasion we heard Courtwright of Lansing, on, "Clean Athletics," Dinie Upton, "the boys favorite of Michigan" on the "Christian side of men in Athletics," in which he brought out the relation of the mother to the child and why that child should make the best of its opportunities, and C. C. Robinson, gave an appeal to help boys who do not have the advantages of ourselves.

Sunday forenoon each boy accompanied the people with whom he stayed went to church and in the afternoon gathered at the Congregational church, where A. E. Roberts in "Can it be Done," spoke of cleanliness in habits, conscientiousness, 20th century chivalry and the power of Jesus Christ on the character of a man. At this same time about 50 boys took a decided stand for Christianity before the bowed heads of the audience.

Sunday evening Dinie Upton again addressed the boys. He advised the boys to copy after the man of 20 centuries ago and to be men for their mothers' sake.

Special features of the conference were the spirit of the boys, the music given by the Alpena Boys' Band, the conference parade Saturday and the hospitality of the Saginaw people.

READY FOR BUSINESS

Store of H. R. Fowler Presents so Attractive and Neat Appearance.

An illustration of what can be done to improve the appearance of a business location is shown plainly upon glancing at the present quarters of H. R. Fowler. Plate glass windows of goodly size give plenty of light at the front of the store, while the exterior is practically new, and presents a neat appearance. Sanitary meat coolers have been installed, also a complete line of the best brands of groceries and canned goods adorn the shelves. Everything has been done to give the store an attractive look, and in this issue of the Courier Mr. Fowler makes his announcement to the public that he is ready for business. Customers will find everything in the line of table needs at this well kept and neat appearing store.

MAY LOSE HIS EYE

George Cook, Jr., Meets With Serious Accident While Nailing Boxes

George Cook, Jr., who is employed at the Booth Fisheries Company, met with a serious accident on Wednesday, which may cost him the sight of an eye.

Wednesday while at work nailing covers on boxes used for shipping fish, a nail which had been struck a glancing blow by the hammer of Louis Bonrisseau, who was working near him, flew and struck Cook in the eye with such force that it penetrated the cornea of the eye.

A delicate operation may partially save the sight of the injured eye, but at all events, even with the aid of strong lenses, the sight will be greatly impaired.

SHOULD BE MAILED EARLY

Christmas Parcels Must Be Wrapped Securely to Insure Safety.

Address Should Be Plain—Little Precaution at Time of Mailing Saves Trouble.

In less than twenty days Christmas will be here. Many disappointments because of delayed gifts, owing to the fact that they were insecurely wrapped, incorrectly addressed or mailed so late as to be caught in a congestion of mail. To avoid this congestion, the Post Office Department urgently requests all patrons of its service to mail their parcels early. It is much better to feel that your gifts have reached their destination a day or two before Christmas than to feel they cannot be delivered until the day after. In order that your friends may know that the parcels contain Christmas gifts, you may write on your package "not to be opened until Christmas" or some similar direction.

Do not feel down hearted should your postmaster or his clerk refuse to accept your parcels because they are inaccurately wrapped. It is for your benefit. He cannot accept them for mailing unless properly packed for safe shipment. Umbrellas, canes and articles of a like character must be strapped securely to strips of wood of the same length and otherwise wrapped and sufficiently strong to withstand the impact of heavier packages coming against them in the process of transit.

Perishable articles, contact with which would be destructive to the contents of their parcels will be denied admission to the mail unless properly packed and labeled "perishable." Information as to the wrapper of perishable articles will be gladly furnished upon inquiry at the post office.

It is very important that parcels be addressed PLAINLY, and bear the NAME and address of the sender preceded by the word FROM. If you will follow the postmaster's instructions your mail will not go astray.

SPENT DELIGHTFUL EVENING

Guests Delightfully Entertained at Home of J. H. Cameron Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving night a party of young folks held high revel and made merry at the home of J. A. Cameron on West Boulevard, with Mrs. Ada Monty as chief entertainer.

Mrs. Monty rendered a number of French and English selections with her inimitable charm and perfection of expression, and especially delighted her audience with a French dialect version of "Old Mother Hubbard," appearing in costume.

Candy making, games and music, helped to make the occasion memorable as a real old fashioned good time peculiarly expressive of the true Thanksgiving spirit of cheer.

Occupies New Offices.

The offices of the Charlevoix Coal & Wood company were removed last week from the Francis block, over C. Danto & Son's grocery store, to the small office building on the Green estate on Bridge street. Mr. See since disposing of his grocery business, is giving his full time to the coal and wood business.

KICK AGAINST PROPOSED SEWER

Tax Payers in Second and Third Wards in Arms Against Proposition.

Hundreds of Citizens File Protest at Council Meeting Monday Evening.

Citizens of the second and third wards of this city met with the common council Monday evening and made a vigorous protest against the building of the proposed sewers as planned for the south side.

The main objection advanced were that in many instances the city intended to build a sewer where there were no water mains nor no chances of getting water for some time, also that their taxes were high enough at present without the additional burden of the excessive sewer tax.

The proposed new trunk line sewers covers practically the entire south side, and taxes were necessarily spread over the entire south side to the city limit, thus making property holders on the extreme city limits pay their proportionate tax, when it would be years before they would receive any direct benefit.

In many instances the property owners were unable to meet the payments, also in other cases persons who were buying their little homes on a contract, and had all they could do to meet their yearly payments, could not meet the special assessments against their property.

After the smoke of the battle cleared, Attorney R. L. Lewis who represented the taxpayers, made the proposition that three or more men be selected from the second and third wards to meet with the council at a special session Friday evening, and again review the assessment rolls, to see that if the building of the proposed sewers could not be delayed until a later date.

Charles Zeitler, B. P. Wilkinson and A. M. Burdick were chosen to represent the peoples' interests from the second ward, and Louis Oriowski, Harry Widdiell and Reinhold Geer for the third ward.

The project will undoubtedly be abandoned, as presented under the present plans. No changes can be made in the assessment rolls as now ordered, without making invalid the entire proceedings. New plans of lesser magnitude will probably be presented later on, giving those districts a sewer where it is petitioned for by a majority of the tax payers.

MRS. DECKER DEAD

Passed Away at Her Old Home on Friday of Last Week.

Last Friday morning H. L. Decker received a telegram from Crosswell, Michigan, announcing the death of his mother, Mrs. G. H. Decker. Mr. and Mrs. Decker left on the evening train for that city.

Mrs. G. H. Decker was a lady well along in years and while a resident of this city made many friends who will keenly regret the news of her death. She was a member of the Charlevoix grange.

The funeral services were held at Crosswell on Monday.

IDEAL IS POSSIBLE

Model Schoolroom for Rural Communities Shown to State Teachers.

One of the most unique educational exhibits ever made in the state were shown by the Department of Public Instruction at the annual meeting of the Michigan State Teachers' Association held recently in Ann Arbor. It was a model schoolroom illustrating the fact that a country schoolroom may be made as comfortable, healthful, attractive and efficient as one in the city. While the exhibit was of primary interest to the rural teacher, school officers and county commissioners, much of the equipment shown is as necessary in the city schools, so that it is expected that the thousands of teachers found many suggestions to work out in their own rooms.

A room in the Ann Arbor High School Building was converted into a typical rural schoolhouse, partitions being used to indicate cloak rooms, toilet rooms, entrance hall and workroom. A heating and ventilating plant, sanitary bubbling drinking fountain, indoor chemical closets, model pump and sink arrangement, paper towels, liquid soap, adjustable and moving seats and desks, hygienic blackboards, window shades of the right kind and properly installed, emphasized the health phase of the up-to-date school.

The most modern equipment in the way of maps, charts, agricultural material, scales, measures, practical arrangements for manual training, domestic science and typewriting in the rural school, were shown while the cultural side was taken care of by means of well-framed pictures, an excellent school library and an excellent phonograph. That vocational work is possible in a one room school was demonstrated by a remarkable display of basketry, sewing, art material and woodwork, all from a school conducted by one teacher and with sixty-one students on the roll.

WILL PRODUCE PRINCESS OF POE

Local Masonic Fraternity to Put on Play About December 16.

Leading Parts to Be Taken by Local Amateurs—Play Highly Spoken Of.

Preparations are under way by members of the local Masonic Fraternity of this city to produce the opera, "The Princess of Poe," on or about the 16th of December. The leading characters of the play will be taken by members of the lodge and O. E. S., many of whom are able to do the parts justice.

Below is published a clipping from the East Jordan Enterprise, whose comment on the play, which was recently produced in that city, is very flattering:

"Never has an attraction in East Jordan caused so much favorable comment as 'The Princess of Poe,' produced at the Temple Theatre, Monday night by an amateur cast of local people with the exception of Mr. Charles Gardner, a comedian who has an extremely enviable reputation throughout the theatrical circles and richly deserves it—the part taken by him in this play was written purposely for him, and a better drama to display his talent would be impossible to find—he is a laugh producer at all times. 'The Princess of Poe' is a comic opera, similar to 'Madam Sherry' and 'Prince of Tonight' both of which have been played here by casts composed of the leading artists in their line, but 'The Princess of Poe' produced by about 100 of our home talent supporting Mr. Gardner, gave greater satisfaction to our people. The play was worked out and drilled by Messrs. Chevalier, writer and owner of the play, gorgeous scenery, magnificent costumes, and Mr. Gardner."

Will Hold Election.

The Glenside of Ironton Arbor will hold their annual election of officers at the school house at Ironton, Friday evening, December 5. Every member is earnestly requested to be present, and help select the leaders for the coming year.

DAYBIRD IN SERIOUS TROUBLE

Now in County Jail at Petoskey on Serious Charge.

CHARGE OF CRIMINAL ASSAULT

Arrested While at Work in This City Wednesday Afternoon

Made Vicious Attack on Woman at Petoskey White—Too Her Way Home—Was Drunk at Time Crime Was Committed.

Wednesday afternoon of last week, Paul Daybird, an Indian printer, who has been in the employ of the Courier since September, 1912, was placed under arrest by Sheriff Purple of Emmet county, upon the charge criminal assault upon the person of Miss Ruth Miller of Pellston.

Daybird stated upon completing his day's work on the previous Saturday, that he intended spending Sunday with relatives in Petoskey, and would leave for that place on the evening train. He returned Monday morning on the morning train and resumed his work as he had done on previous occasions.

Saturday night Miss Ruth Miller, who lives at Pellston, and who is employed in Petoskey, was on her way to her boarding place in that city, when she was attacked by a stranger. In the scuffle her clothes were torn, glasses broken and face badly bruised. She finally broke away from her assailant and ran to her boarding place and notified the police. When the officers appeared upon the scene of the scuffle, the only evidence was a man's cap lying on the ground. With this clue the officers started to work to locate the man who committed the assault. He made the rounds of the Petoskey hotels and boarding houses and learned that a man had registered and paid for a room at the New Central, but had not returned to his room that evening. The man had registered from Charlevoix, and Wednesday morning Acting Marshall Wolf accompanied by Sheriff Purple came to this city.

After making the rounds of the stores in this city to learn if similar caps were on sale, and having located Daybird, whose description corresponded with that of the man who had registered at the hotel, they came to this office and confronted Daybird with the evidence. In his efforts to clear himself Daybird soon got into deep water and finally admitted that he had committed the crime, stating that he was drunk at the time, and did not know what he was doing.

Sheriff Purple placed him under arrest and took him to the county jail to await until the evening train, when he was taken to Petoskey.

Daybird was formerly from Harbor Springs, where he had been employed for several years before coming to Charlevoix. Since working here he has made a good record and was well spoken of by those who became acquainted with him. He was educated in the convent at Harbor Springs, and spoke both his native and the English language fluently, and is greatly regretted by the management of this office that he has gotten into serious trouble. He lays the blame for his crime to drink, purchased in Petoskey after his arrival there.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

SERIOUS ERROR IN CHARLEVOIX

Charlevoix Citizens Will Do Well to Profit by the Following.

Many fatal cases of kidney disease have reached an incurable stage because the patient did not understand the symptoms. Even today in Charlevoix there are many residents making the same serious error. They attribute their mysterious aches and pains to overwork, or worry, perhaps, when all the time their rheumatic pains, backache and bladder irregularities are most probably due to weak and ailing kidneys. If you are ill, if your kidneys are out of order, profit by this Charlevoix resident's experience.

Henry Newman, 203 Sheridan St. Charlevoix Mich., says: "I was troubled for years by my kidneys. I was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions at night and I also had backache. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at the Ivy Drug Store. They gave me great relief. I can now rest better and I don't have much backache."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Newman had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Following an operation for appendicitis performed Monday night, funeral services conducted by Rev. L. B. Carpenter of Pellston, and Rev. J. W. Stintow, were held here Monday afternoon, and the body was taken to Saugatuck Monday night for interment. Mr. Johnson had grown to manhood here, with the love and respect of all who knew him, and his death is keenly felt by his many friends. He is survived by his parents, and a sister, Mrs. Ohmer Ketch of Petoskey, to whom the sympathy of the whole community is extended.

IRONTON.

Mr. Saunders has his new barn completed.

WITHIN THE LAW

"A living chance!" The two women were exploded with dynamic violence. Gilder found himself unable to express the rage that flamed within him. The girl showed herself undismayed by his anger.

"Yes," she went on quietly, "that's all there is to it. Give them a living chance to get enough food to eat and a decent room to sleep in and show that will keep their feet off the pavement winter mornings. Do you think that any girl wants to steal? Do you think that any girl wants to risk?"

By this time, however, Gilder had regained his power of speech, and he interrupted sternly:

"And is this what you have taken up my time for? You want to make a mudlin plea—for guilty, dishonest girls, when I thought you really meant to bring me facts?"

"We work nine hours a day," the girl's quiet voice went on, a curious pathos in the rich timbre of it, "earning a day for six days in the week. That's a fact, isn't it? And the truth is, an honest girl can't live on $6 a week. She can't do it and buy food and clothes and pay room rent and carfare. That's another fact, isn't it?"

Mary regarded the owner of the store with grave questioning in her violet eyes.

"I don't care to discuss these things," he declared peremptorily as the girl remained silent for a moment.

"And I have no wish to discuss anything," Mary returned evenly. "I only want to give you what you asked for facts. When they first looked me up I used to sit and hate you."

"Oh, of course!"

"And then I thought that perhaps you did not understand—that if I were to tell you how things really are, it might be you would change them somehow."

"I," he cried incredulously, "change my business policy because you ask me to?"

There was something imperturbable in the quality of the voice as the girl went resolutely forward with her explanation.

"Do you know how we girls live? But, of course, you don't. Three of us in one room, doing our own cooking over the two burner gas stove and our own washing and brooding evenings after being on our feet for nine hours."

"I have provided chairs behind the counters," he stated.

"But have you ever seen a girl sit in one of them?" she questioned coolly. "Please answer me. Have you? Of course not," she said, after a little pause during which the owner had remained silent. She shook her head in emphatic negation. "And do you understand why? It's simply because every girl knows that the manager of her department would think he could get along without her if he were to see her sitting down loafing, you know? So she would be discharged. All it amounts to is that after being on her feet for nine hours the girl usually walks home in order to save car fare. Yes, she walks, whether or sick or well. Anyhow, you are generally so tired, it don't make much difference which you are."

"What has all this to do with the question of theft in the store? That was the excuse for your coming here. And instead of telling me something you rant about gas stoves and car fare."

CHAPTER IV. Inferno.

THE inexorable voice went on in its monotone, as if he had not spoken.

"And when you are really sick and have to stop work what are you going to do then? Do you know, Mr. Gilder, that the first time a girl steals it's often because she had to have a doctor—or some luxury like that? And some of them do worse than steal. Yes, they do—girls that started straight and wanted to stay that way. But, of course, some of them get so tired of the whole grind that—that—"

"I'm not their guardian, I can't watch over them after they leave the store. They are paid the current rate of wages as much as any other store-boys." As he spoke the anger provoked by this unexpected assault on him out of the mouth of a convict flamed high in virginal repudiation.

"Why," he went on vehemently, "no man living does more for his employees than I do. Who gave the girls their fine rest rooms upstairs? I did! Who gave them the cheap lunchrooms? I did!"

"But you won't pay them enough to live on!"

"I pay them the same as the other stores do," he repeated sullenly.

"But you won't pay them enough to live on!"

"And so you claim that you were forced to steal. That's the plea you make for yourself and your friends."

"I wasn't forced to steal," came the answer, spoken in the monotone that had marked her utterance throughout most of the interview. "I wasn't forced to steal, and I didn't steal. But, at the same time, that's the plea, as you call it, that I'm making for the other girls. There are hundreds of them who steal because they don't get enough to eat. I said I would tell you how to stop the stealing. Well, I have done it. Give the girls a fair chance to be honest. You asked me for the names, Mr. Gilder. There's only one name on which to put the blame for the whole loss, and that name is Edward Gilder. Now, won't you do something about it?"

At that naked question the owner of the store jumped up from his chair and stood glowering at the girl who risked a request so full of vituperation against himself.

"How dare you speak to me like this?" he thundered.

"Why, I dared," Mary Turner explained. "Because you have done all the harm you can to me. And now I'm trying to give you the chance to do better by the others. You ask me why I dare. I have a right to dare. I have been straight all my life. I have wanted decent food and warm clothes and a little happiness all the time I have worked for you, and I have gone with out those things just to stay straight. The end of it all is, you are sending me to prison for something I didn't do. That's why I dared."

Gilder could not trust himself just then to an audible command. He was seriously disturbed by the gently spoken truths that had issued from the girl's lips. He was not prepared with any answer, though he badly resented every word of her accusation.

Cassidy faced about, and in his movement there was a tug at the wrist of the girl that set her moving toward the door. Her realization of what this meant was shown in her last speech.

"Three years isn't forever," she said in a level voice. "When I come out of this I'll be a better person than I am now."

"You'll be a better person than I am now," she said in a level voice. "When I come out of this I'll be a better person than I am now."

"You'll be a better person than I am now," she said in a level voice. "When I come out of this I'll be a better person than I am now."

"You'll be a better person than I am now," she said in a level voice. "When I come out of this I'll be a better person than I am now."

"You'll be a better person than I am now," she said in a level voice. "When I come out of this I'll be a better person than I am now."

"You'll be a better person than I am now," she said in a level voice. "When I come out of this I'll be a better person than I am now."

wrist. But the bond between the two was not broken, for from wrist to wrist showed the steel chain of the manacles. The girl shook the links of the handcuffs in a gesture stronger than words.

"You are going to pay me for this!" she said. Her voice was little more than a whisper, but it was loud in the listener's heart. "Yes, you are going to pay—for this!"

They were grim years, those three years during which Mary Turner served her sentence in Burnside. There was no time off for good behavior. The girl learned soon that the favor of those set in authority over her could only be won at a cost against which her every maidenly instinct revolted. So she went through the inferno of days and nights in a dreariness of suffering that was deadly. Naturally the life there was altogether an evil thing. There was the material all over present in the round of vicious phreatic toll—the coarse, distasteful food; the hard row row comb; the constant, gnawing rakishness of imprisonment, away from light and air, away from all that makes life worth while.

The best evidence of the fact that Mary Turner's soul was not fatally soiled must be found in the fact that still at the expiration of her sentence she was fully resolved to live straight as the saying is which she had quoted to Gilder. This too, in the face of sure knowledge as to the difficulties that would beset the effort and in the face of the temptations offered to follow an easier path.

There was, for example, Aggie Lynch, a fellow convict, with whom she had a slight degree of acquaintance, nothing more. This young woman, a criminal by training, offered allurements of illegitimate employment in the outer world when they should be free. Mary endured the companionship with this prisoner because a sixth sense proclaimed the fact that here was one immoral rather than immoral, and the difference is mighty.

For that reason Aggie Lynch was not actively offensive, as were most of the others. She was a dainty little blond, with a baby face, in which were set two light blue eyes of a sort to widen often in demure wonder over most things in a surprising and laugh-ly world. She had been convicted of blackmail and she made no pretense even of innocence. Instead, she was inclined to boast over her ability to bamboozle men at her will. She was a natural mistress of the ingenuitè pose, and in that pose she could unfailingly beguile the heart of the wisest of worldly men.

She had been reared in a criminal family, which must excuse much. Long ago she had lost track of her father. Her mother she had never known. Her one relation was a brother of high standing as a pickpocket. One principal reason of her success in leading on men to make fools of themselves over her, to their everlasting regret afterward, lay in the fact that in spite of all the gross irregularities of her life she remained chaste.

The girl saw in Mary Turner the possibilities of a ladylike personality that might mean much financial profit in the devious ways of which she was a mistress. With the frankness characteristic of her, she proceeded to paint glowing pictures of a future shared by the two of them, and with a naïveté, but she was in no wise moved to follow such a life, even though it did not necessitate anything worse than a fraudulent playing at love. So, she steadfastly continued her refusals. She would live straight.

"You will find that you are up against an awful frost," Aggie would declare brutally.

Mary found the prophecy true. Back in New York she experienced a poverty more ravaging than any she had known in those five lean years of her working in the store. She had been absolutely penniless for two days, and without food through the agonizing hours when she found employment in a milliner's shop. Followed a blessed interval in which she worked contentedly, happy over the meager stipend, since it served to give her shelter and food honestly earned.

The police informed Mary's employer concerning her record as a convict, and she was at once discharged. The unfortunate victim of the law came terribly close to despair then, yet

"Won't you do something about it?"

you are going to pay for every minute of them. Mr. Gilder. There won't be a day or an hour that I won't remember that at the last it was your word sent me to prison. And you are going to pay me for that. You are going to pay me for the five years I have starved making money for you—that too. You are going to pay me for all the things I am losing today, and—"

The girl thrust forth her left hand on that side where stood the other. So vigorous was her movement that Cassidy's chair was thrown off the her spirit triumphed, and again she persevered in that resolve to live straight. She found a cheap position in a cheap shop, only to be again persecuted by the police, so that she speedily lost the place.

A third time she obtained work and there, after a little, she told her employer, a candy manufacturer in a small way, the truth as to her having been in prison. The man had a kindly heart and he ran little risk, so he allowed her to remain. When the police called his attention to the girl's criminal record he paid no heed to their advice against retaining her services. The police brought pressure to bear on the man. They even called in the assistance of Edward Gilder himself, who obligingly wrote a very severe letter to the girl's employer. In the end, though unwillingly enough, he dismissed Mary from his service.

It was then that despair did come upon the girl. She had tried with all the strength of her to live straight. Yet, despite her innocence, the world would not let her live according to her own conscience. She demanded that she be the criminal. She had branded her. It was hers to at all. She still walked the streets miserably, seeking some place, but her heart was gone from the quest. Come an hour when she thought of the river and was glad. So she went through the long stretch

Council Chambers, Dec. 1 1913.
 The Common Council for the city of Charlevoix met on the above date: Mayor Nicholls presiding, Aldermen present, Priest, See, Barney, Cartier and Shapton. Absent Powers.
 Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.
 A delegation of tax payers from the second and third wards were present to protest the construction of the south side sewers.
 Ald. Cartier supported by Ald. Barney moved the adoption of the following resolution:

Whereas, numerous protests have been made by the freeholders and residents of the city of Charlevoix, against the construction of the sewers, included in the Belvedere, Alice and May streets sewer district, the Bridge street sewer district, and the State and Newman streets sewer district, protesting that the construction of said sewers place too heavy a burden upon the person assessed therefor, and that the sewers are not a necessity, that the expense of the same as estimated is too great for them to pay at this time in addition to their present heavy taxes, and that the city's share of the cost of said sewers will add a large sum to be taxed against the tax payers at large who are now paying all the taxes that they are able to stand;
 Therefore, be it Resolved, that all resolutions passed by this the Common Council for the city of Charlevoix, applying or pertaining to the sewers or sewer districts known as and included in the Belvedere, Alice and May streets sewer district, Bridge street sewer district, and the State and Newman streets sewer district, be and are hereby rescinded.
 And That, the assessment roll as laid by the assessment board, in reference to said sewers or sewer districts, be notified to take no further action to secure bids for the construction of the said sewers.
 Ald. See supported by Ald. Shapton moved as an amendment to Ald. Cartier's motion, that the matter be laid on the table for one week. Motion carried.
 Moved by Ald. Barney and supported by Ald. Priest that the common council meet as a committee of the whole in Special Session on Friday evening, December 5th, 1913, in conjunction with a committee of the tax payers from the second and third wards and their attorney, to consider the advisability of rescinding their former actions relative to sewer districts 13, 14 and 15. Motion carried.
 The finance committee submitted the following report. Having examined the following bills report that they be allowed out of the several funds as herein stated.

Moved by Ald. Priest and seconded by Ald. Barney that the report as read be accepted and the Mayor and Clerk be authorized to issue warrants on the city deposits for $2,780.68 and the Clerk be instructed to draw orders on the various funds for the amount of each respective bill. Motion carried by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Priest, S. J. Barney, Cartier and Shapton. Nays, none.

The City Engineer reported that he had returned the duplicate copy of the south side sewer plans which he had been working from. With the sewer districts indicated in red ink and notated districts lines.
 There being no further business the council adjourned.

Work Progressing Finely.

Work on the new addition to C. Danto & Son's store, is progressing finely, and will be completed in about ten days. The addition is being built of cement blocks and is a much needed improvement. As soon as completed Mr. Danto will run a first-class meat and fish market in connection with his well established grocery business.

Card of Thanks.

How to Make Coffee For Two.

Always send the coffee pot immediately before using. Keep the inside of the coffee pot perfectly clean and leave the cover up and place in a sunny window. Never let coffee stand more than five minutes after it is boiled before serving. Buy the coffee unground and grind just before using, is the advice given in the Woman's World.

The flavor of the coffee may be improved by heating the ground coffee carefully just before making.
 Four level teaspoonsful of ground coffee, one teaspoonful of the white of egg and the crust shell of one egg.

Mix with four tablespoonfuls of cold water, pour on two and one-half cupfuls of boiling water and cover closely and let boil from three to five minutes. Then add three tablespoonfuls of cold water to settle and set the coffee pot where the coffee will keep hot, but not boil, and let stand for five minutes. Pour out a half cupful of the coffee, and put it back into the coffee pot to rise down the grounds and serve at once. The first cup of coffee is considered the best.

How to Make "Old" Lace.

Once more we have reached the point in the revolution of fashion when laces, especially the real ones, must have the old look now required by the costumers in making up lace trimmed gowns. There is a way to make new lace look old, which, so far as color is concerned, cannot be told from the priceless heirlooms.

All that is needed is a newspaper. Strips of newspaper are cut a trifle wider than the lace is to be tinted. To these the colors of the lace are carefully sewed. A roll of newspapers about the size of an ordinary mailing tube is then made, and the lace trimmed newspaper strips are then rolled around this smoothly. The whole is then sealed and laid away. In the course of a few weeks or months the lace will have acquired the most perfect "old" color. A hundred years couldn't produce any better results than the newspaper properly put on.

Mr. and Mrs. F. George Finnican entertained a few friends at their home on Bridge street Monday evening in honor of Miss Bessie McCrone of St. Ignace.

We will offer special subscription rates on the Courier for the next 30 days. Subscribe for the leading home paper and thus keep in touch with the affairs of the city.

G. E. Dutton, wife and little daughter, Flora, leave Thursday for a four weeks visit at his old home near Minneapolis, Minnesota, and other neighboring villages.

Last week the last one of the 97 cottages on the Belvedere resort was closed for the winter, when Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee of Breezy Point moved to the Bartlett.

Lee Smith and wife returned Friday from a three weeks trip in southern Michigan and Chicago. They also attended the Michigan-Pennsylvania foot ball game at Ann Arbor.

Mr. Lowie of Cincinnati, Ohio, who has been overseeing the repair work on the south pier, was called home Thursday by a telegram announcing the sudden death of his father.

Miss Mary Finnican entertained forty guests Tuesday evening at her home on Clinton street in honor of Miss Bess McCrone of St. Ignace. Delightful refreshments were served and everyone spent a very enjoyable evening.

Geo. H. VanPelt and daughter, Mary King VanPelt, of Chicago, were in the city a few days the first of the week on business. Mr. VanPelt left Monday for New York, as representative of the Chicago Board of Commerce.

Mrs. Will Francia entertained 50 ladies at an afternoon party Saturday, in honor of her daughter, Mrs. John Plank, who leaves this week to spend the winter in the Ozark mountains, where Mr. Plank has large interests in real estate.

Mr. Beemus, so Arkansa lumbar, is building a new cottage on the Belvedere resort. He is shipping most of the choice timber from his home state. The site of the cottage is where Hoo. A. Buttars was married and also where Mr. and Mrs. Morris J. Stockman started housekeeping.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Buttars entertained on Thanksgiving Day a number of friends and relatives. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Morris J. Stockman, who left the following morning for Port Orange, Florida, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Buttars and son of Pellston, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Waller of this city.

TEMPERING ROCK DRILLS.

Care Should Be Exercised Not to Overheat the Steel.

A correspondent of Blacksmith and Wheelwright gives the following method for tempering chisels, drills and other stone cutting tools:

Do not force your fire while sharpening and making these tools. Let the steel heat slow, taking great care not to heat it over a good red heat, for if a white heat is reached in making a sharpening your steel is spoiled and will not stand. Here is where the trouble generally lies.

After the tools are sharpened lay them aside to cool for a few minutes. Now have lukewarm soft water with about two pounds of salt in two gallons of water. Next take one tool at a time and place the edge in the fire and heat about three-eighths of an inch of the edge just to a cherry heat and plunge in the water, cooling enough so that the temper will not run down. But remove from the water before it quits hissing and lay aside and let it cool.

This is the right temper, but you must take pains at first until you become accustomed to it. If you should get them too hard at first do not heat quite so hot next time. The degree of success depends upon getting the right heat. You will have no water cracks in the steel with this way of tempering.

MULTIPLYING CARD.

Device For Teaching Children the Use of the Slide Rule.

A device designed to teach children the principle of the slide rule has recently been brought out in France and is shown in the illustration. This device operates on the principle of slide rules generally, since it finds the product of two numbers by finding the number corresponding to the sum of their logarithms, says Popular Mechanics.

It consists of a central disk and a pointer arm which are pivoted so that they can be revolved on the cardboard body, as shown. The central disk carries a semicircular scale for multipliers, while the cardboard body carries an inner semicircular scale for multiplicands and an outer circular scale for products. In multiplying, the pointer on the central disk is set to the proper figure on the multiplier scale, while the short end of the pointer arm is set to the proper figure on the multiplier scale carried on the central disk, and the long end of the pointer arm then points to the figure on the product scale, giving the correct product of the two numbers.

The Revolving Ship.

The revolving ship is one of those inventions which, although they are obviously impracticable, seem to have a fascination for the inventor which is rather difficult to explain. Several years ago there was built and tried in this country a boat of the revolving type, which, if we remember rightly, reached a stage at which it was launched and an attempt was made unsuccessfully to propel it. According to a dispatch from London, a Paris inventor is now busy upon another of these craft, and judging from the meager descriptions available, the designer is following along the lines that were proved to be altogether impracticable fully a dozen years ago—Scientific American.

Care of the Car Bonnet.

When a car has been run in a heavy rain particular attention should be given to the bonnet, because after a long run the bonnet becomes fairly hot, and if the raindrops are left to dry upon it they will stain far more than they will upon the body or wheels. If circumstances do not permit of the car being washed down at once, the precaution should always be taken of sponging off the bonnet and then leathering it lightly to take up the moisture, otherwise it will spot so badly that it will never look right again until it is repainted and varnished.

A White Paint For Boats.

A government formula for a white paint to use on the outside of a boat is as follows: The proportions of the pigment and fluids are varied to suit the requirements. The formula is given for the first coat, which is the thickest: White lead in oil, seven pounds; zinc white in oil, seven pounds; raw linseed oil, two quarts; turpentine, two gills; jesso drier, one gill. This will make a gallon of paint. If too thin add more lead and zinc, and if too thick add more linseed.

Aluminium Welding Test.

The soundness of aluminium welded joints may be tested by placing in water, according to a German inventor. If bubbles of gas are seen within the weld, it is a sign that the welding was badly done. The gas is hydrogen.

of ill lighted streets, crossed some railroad tracks to a pier, over which she hurried to the far end, where it projected out to the fiercer currents of the Hudson. There, without giving herself a moment's pause for reflection or hesitation, she leaped out as far as her strength permitted into the cold water. But in that final second natural terror in the face of death overcame the lethargy of despair, a shriek burst from her lips.

On the side of the pier a man had just tied up a motorboat. He stood up in alarm at the cry and was just in time to gain a glimpse of a white face under the dim moonlight as it swept down with the tide, two rods beyond him. He threw off his coat and sprang far out after the drifting body. He came to it in a few furling strokes and caught it.

Then began the savage struggle to save her and himself. The current tore at him wrathfully, but he fought against them with all the fierceness of his nature. What saved the two of them was the violent temper of the man. Always it had been the demon to set him alight. His rage mounted and gave him new power in the battle. Under the urge of it he conquered and at last brought himself and his charge to the shore.

Mary revived to clear consciousness, which was at first inclined toward hysteria, but this phase yielded soon under the sympathetic ministrations of the man. His rather low voice was soothing to her tired soul, and his whole air was at once masterful and gently tender. When finally she was able to stand and to walk with the support of his arm she went forward slowly at his side without so much even as a question of whither.

Joe Garson had performed, perhaps, his first action without thought of self at the back of it. He had risked his life to save that of a stranger. The sensation was at once novel and thrilling. Since it was so agreeable he meant to prolong the glow of self satisfaction by continuing to care for this want of the river.

Joe Garson, the notorious forger, led the dripping girl eastward through the squalid streets until at last they came to an adequately lighted avenue, and there a taxi was found. It carried them farther north, and to the east to an apartment house that was rather imposing, set in a street of humbler dwellings.

Here Garson paid the fare and then helped the girl to alight and on into the hallway. Mary went with her quite unafraid, though now with a growing curiosity.

The two entered and went slowly up three flights of stairs. On the landing beyond the third flight the door of a rear flat stood open, and in the doorway appeared the figure of a woman.

"Well, Joe, who's the skirt?" this person demanded as the man and his er, though he considered them far beneath him in the social scale, since their criminal work was not of that high kind on which he prided himself. But as he cast about for some woman to whom he might take the hapless girl he had rescued his thoughts fell on Aggie. He was relieved rather than otherwise to learn that there was already an acquaintance between the two women, and the fact that Aggie had served time in prison did not influence him one jot against her.

Mary let herself drift. It seemed to her that she had abandoned herself to fate in that hour when she threw herself into the river. Afterward, with out any volition on her part, she had been restored to life and set within an environment new and strange to her. In which soon, to her surprise, she discovered a vivid pleasure. So she fought no more, but left destiny to work its will, unhampered by her to the strivings.

For the first time in her life, thanks to the hospitality of Aggie Lynch, so secretly re-entranced from the funds of Joe Garson, Mary found herself living in luxurious idleness, while her every wish could be gratified by the merest mention of it. She was fed on the daintiest of fare, she was clothed with the most delicate richness for the first time as to those more mysterious amenities which women love. In addition there were as many of books and magazines as she could wish.

The mind, long starved like her body, seized avidly on the nonrestraint thus afforded. In this interest Aggie had no share—was perhaps a little envious over Mary's absorption in printed pages. Aggie took a vast pride in her guest, with the unmistakable air of elegance, and she dared to dream of great triumphs to come, though as yet she carefully avoided any suggestion to Mary of wrongdoing.

In the end the suggestion came from Mary Turner herself, to the great surprise of Aggie, and, truth to tell, of herself.

There were two factors that chiefly influenced her decision. The first was due to the feeling that, since the world had rejected her, she need no longer concern herself with the world's opinion or retain any scruples over it. Back of this lay her bitter sentiment toward the man who had been the direct cause of her imprisonment, Edward Giller.

The factor that was the immediate cause of her decision on an irregular mode of life was an editorial in one of the daily newspapers. This was a scathing arraignment of a master in high finance. The point of the writer's attack was the grim sarcasm for such methods of discovery as are kept within the law. That phrase held the girl's fancy, and she read the article again with a quickened interest. Then she began to meditate.

It was the law that had worked the ruin of her life, which she had striven to make wholesome. In consequence she felt for the law no genuine respect, only devastation as for the epitome of injustice. Yet, she gave it a supercilious respect, born of those three years of suffering which had been the result of the penalty inflicted on her. Now, in the paragraph she had just read she found a clue to suggestive thought, a hint as to a means by which she might satisfy her rage against the law that had outraged her, and this in safety since she would attempt tonight save that within the law.

How to Fill Up Holes in Wood.

It sometimes becomes necessary to fill up cracks or dents in fine wood work, furniture, floors, etc. The following is the best way of doing it. White tissue paper is steeped and perfectly softened in water and by thorough kneading with glue transformed into a paste and by means of other (earth colored) colors as nearly as possible to the shade of the wood. To the paste cab-lust magnesia is then added and it is forced into the cracks or very firmly to the wood and after drying retains its smooth surface.

HOW ISRAEL CROSSED JORDAN.

Joshua 3:7-17—Nov. 30.

"For thou wilt, for I am with thee."—Isaiah 41:10.

UNDER Divine direction the hosts of Israel removed to the Jordan River three days in advance of the time appointed for the crossing. The Jordan, as usual at this season, was overflowing its banks. Ordinarily about ninety feet wide, it is supposed to have been about five hundred feet wide at this time.

The communities in general, and Jericho in particular, although expecting an invasion, would not expect it when the river was impassable and bridges little known.

The Israelites, too, must have had various opportunities for extending faith or doubt in respect to crossing. The fact that nothing is said respecting doubts, fears or uncertainties implies that their wilderness experiences had taught them valuable lessons of faith in God and trust in Divine appointments.

The crossing day came. Joshua, by Divine instruction, directed the priests to bear the Ark of the Covenant and to go before the people. As their feet touched the water, it began to recede and they advanced, until finally they stood in the middle of the river bed, still bearing the Ark, representing the Divine promise under which they had left Egypt and were hoping for grand results.

The hosts of Israel, living the banks of the Jordan for miles, crossed over from Moab to Canaan. Twelve large stones representing the twelve tribes, were taken from the river bed and piled on the shore as a monument of God's aid, while twelve stones from the shore were placed in the river as a similar memorial. Finally the priests followed the people to the Canaan shore. Shortly thereafter the waters began to return to the river bed.

How the Miracle Was Done.

The fact that we may know with considerable certainty just how this miracle was performed should not in the least detract from its value. With God nothing is a miracle, since He is able to accomplish His will in every respect. Many things are miraculously because we do not understand the Divine processes. The growth or even a blade of grass is something wholly beyond our power, and in a general way beyond our comprehension as a process.

The account tells plainly enough that the heaping up of the waters was in the direction of Adam. This place has been cited with considerable certainty by Prof. Wright as seven thousand miles above Jericho, on the Jordan. These the waters became in a heap, or pile, the Professor assumes, by reason of a landslide which choked the narrow passage in the river, where there were steep banks.

The character of the soil in that vicinity would be favorable to the blocking of the narrow channel of the Jordan there by the slipping of the hill sides. Indeed, history tells that a similar slide took place in that vicinity in A. D. 1207, damming up the Jordan for several hours and leaving the river bed below quite dry, the waters draining off to the Dead Sea.

Prof. Wright says, "So striking is this conformity of facts to conditions indicated in the Biblical account that geologists can find but little difficulty in believing the written record. At the same time the written record is so precise itself and free from fantastic elements that the literary critic cannot well consider it anything but the unvarnished tale of an eye-witness."

The marvel of the story is that the Divine marching orders were so timed as to suit the circumstances and conditions exactly.

Entering Into Canaan Rest.

St. Paul, in Hebrews 4:8, gives us the suggestion that Israel's entrance into Canaan under Joshua's leadership typified the Church's entrance into the rest of faith and special privilege under the "good ship of righteousness" (Hebrews 1:10).

The Israelites had rest from their wilderness journeyings. It was a wonderful change for them, yet it was not the full realization of all that God had promised them. That condition will be attained only in Eden itself, as the result of Messiah's glorious Resurrection work.

Following the Apostle's lead, we perceive that Israel's experience up to the time when Moses died represented the Law Dispensation, which ended at the Cross. The Gospel Dispensation, beginning at Pentecost, is typified by the crossing of Jordan and taking possession of the land.

The storming of the cities of Canaan typified the warfare of the New Creature against the desires, the weaknesses and the depravities of the flesh. Each believer is called upon to exercise faith and cross over Jordan. In the sense of beginning a new life of devotion to God, a life of warfare against sin and the entrenched weaknesses in his own body.

Sampling Mother's Doughnuts

HUNGRY kids are sampling them today just as they did in your doughnut days.

Our artist has taken the old familiar story and brought it up to date. He has given Mother a modern up to date Acetylene cooking range.

It may surprise you to learn that such ranges are actually being used by the women folks in over two hundred thousand country homes.

As you will note from the picture, they are duplicates of city gas ranges used throughout the world. They furnish heat on tap—and have the high ovens with glass doors and all other modern features.

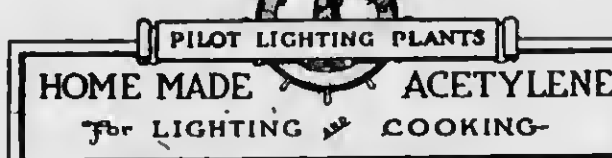

If you feel that your folks would appreciate the convenience of gas for lighting and cooking—if you feel that they have battled long enough with kindling, oil, coal, ashes and soot, you should without delay look into my home made Acetylene proposition.

I am the representative for this district, of the largest manufacturers of country home Acetylene plants in the world—namely, the Oxweld Acetylene Co.—manufacturers of the famous Pilot Acetylene Light Plants.

Pilot plants are different from any of the other hundreds of American Acetylene machines. They work on a different principle. They are not storage systems—they are automatic—they make gas—a little at a time, while the stove or the lights are in use. At other times the plant stands idle.

Pilot lighting plants are built upon honor to last a lifetime. They are permanent features of the homes in which they are installed.

In fifteen years only two accidents have been charged to the misuse and abuse of Pilot plants. While during the same period over one hundred thousand fires and accidents have been charged to other illuminants.

How to Detect the Alum Baking Powder

"Which are the alum baking powders; how can I avoid them unless they are named?" asks a housekeeper.

Here is one way: take the can of a low-priced powder in your hand and read the ingredient clause upon the back label. The law requires that if the powder contains alum that fact must be there stated. If you find one of the ingredients named alum, or sulphate of aluminum, you have found an alum baking powder.

There is another and a better way. You don't have to know the names of the alum powders. Use Royal Baking Powder only; that assures you a cream of tartar powder, and the purest and most healthful baking powder beyond question.

THE BILLPOSTER.

"The billposter is a parasite. His only reason for existence is the desire to make money. He sells us advertising of a kind that we had better be without. He steals his space from the public. He takes his preferred positions from property that belongs to us all equally—the picture of our world. We buy his space. We are receivers of stolen property and guilty under the law of public rights. We were given this world to enjoy, not to despise. I have called billposters parasites with premeditation. The dictionary says that a parasite is one who lives basely at the expense of another. Billposters are the hookworms of business."

Thus spoke the advertising manager of one of the larger American business concerns at an "ad. fest" of the Advertising Association of Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit.

OKLAHOMA TOWN MAKES ICE.

Decided It Needed Ice Plant More Than a City Hall.

Although certain large cities have agitated the question of municipally controlled ice factories, the little town of Weatherford, Okla., with a population of 2,116, has installed what is said to be the first plant of the kind in the country. This installation is interesting, says the Electrical World, not only because Weatherford was foremost in trying out the economies of a small plant, but because of the possibilities shown here, as elsewhere, for utilizing the exhaust steam from the generating station.

High J. Cooper, commissioner of public utilities at Weatherford, made the following statement: "The practical operation of our plant has proved that the theory of connecting an ice plant with a power plant is a correct one."

The strongest opposition which was maintained against the municipally operated ice plant was that the city would be unable to obtain economical results with such a small equipment. The point made in this opposition, said Mr. Cooper, has been reversed by trial, and now forms the loudest part of the praise.

The plant has already been in operation three months and has a normal output of ten tons of ice a day, but can produce fifteen tons by crowding. The cost of manufacturing is 50 cents a ton, and consists of 40 cents for labor and 10 cents for fuel.

The installation cost the city $11,000, appropriation for which was obtained by utilizing a fund which was originally raised by the city for the erection of a city hall. Mr. Cooper decided, however, that an ice plant in connection with the generating station and water works was more likely needed than a city hall, which would probably entail additional help and equal expenses. He convinced the city of its need, and the ice plant was erected.

TOWN PLANNING ACT.

New Brunswick Government to Control All Development.

A town planning act passed by the legislature of New Brunswick recently places restrictions upon various phases of city and town development. It provides that any town or city council may prepare a town planning scheme, but before it is put into effect it must be approved by the government. This all future developments in the towns and cities of the province will be subject to the supervision of the government.

Local commissions, whose appointment is subject to the approval of the government are to be responsible for supervising the development of new town areas. The commissions are given important powers in regard to making provision for traffic highways and proper sanitary conditions and may regulate the number and nature of buildings per acre. Private rights when injured must receive compensation. -Survey.

HOT LUNCHEONS IN PARKS.

Los Angeles Citizens Can Now Picnic Without Trouble.

For the benefit of Los Angeles the park authorities, according to the Independent, are placing different devices in the parks which make hot lunches possible.

A cement stove has been built, upon which coffee can be prepared, bread toasted or a dozen other different things heated without any danger of setting fire to dry grass. In one of the parks a sink and drainboard for washing dishes have been constructed, also of cement, which serves excellently people who have to carry their lunch baskets home on the street cars.

The cement stove also aids the park caretakers, for bits of paper can be destroyed or piled up for kindling fires for the next lot of picnickers who come along.

Problems Increase With Population.

The last census bulletin shows that the city of Canton, O., increased 63.7-10 per cent in ten years; the city of Little Rock, Ark., had increased 48 per cent in the same period; the city of Pasadena, N.J., 52½ per cent; Fort Worth, Tex., 174.7 per cent; Birmingham, Ala., 253.4 per cent, and so on through the list.

Naturally the problems of these cities are increasing with equal rapidity, and the need for thoughtful, patriotic attention to municipal questions is today greater than ever before.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MOTHERHOOD

Topic Ably Handled by Mrs. Shockley at W. C. T. U. Meeting.

DUTIES OF ALL MOTHERS

Must Not Neglect Great and Urgent Trust Imposed in Her.

Should Not Turn Care and Guidance of Offspring to White Robed Nurses—Social Duties Should not Interfere.

Below we publish a paper on "The Responsibilities of Motherhood," read by Mrs. A. J. Shockley at a recent W. C. T. U. meeting. A careful perusal will show that the topic was given careful study and contains many assertions that deal directly upon the conditions existing in many homes:

"Most of all the other beautiful things in life comes by two and three, by dozens and hundreds; plenty of roses, stars, sunsets, rainbows, brothers and sisters, aunts and cousins, but only one Mother in all the wide world."

—Kate Douglas Wiggin.

When we stop to study and think of all the above words imply, no mother, however busy, and weighed down with the responsibilities of a home and family, who loves her children, and is anxious to see them grow up into broad minded, industrious, honest men and women, will so forget the great trust imposed in her, as to live daily a life that will fall far short of this great confidence placed in her by her children, whether they be one or many. How can we estimate the great worth of a good mother to a growing family? and when we ask this we do not mean the mother who turns the care and guidance of her offspring over to a white robed nurse, who is supposed to assume all the responsibilities, religious, educational and social she may consider necessary, but the woman who puts the rearing and educating of her children, in the first and most hallowed place in her love and life, just as God intended she should. What shall she say in that stand before the loving Father and He shall say unto her, "where are the boys and girls I gave thee?" "What hast thou done to prepare them for the world that was, and for the home I have ready for them?" Shall she say, "Lord the responsibility of motherhood was too heavy for me," or, "I had too many social duties, and there was not much time for home and family," or, shall she say, "Lord, here are those thou gavest me, I did the best I could for them." Well done, thou faithful mother, sit thou on my right hand. When shall we begin to assume the responsibility of motherhood? My answer is, before the child is born. When the mother looked forward to child is in the embryonic stage, the mother's responsibility to that child is as great as at any time in its after life. Why is that? you say. Pre-natal influences play a very great part in the formation of the disposition and tastes of every child. If the mother to be, is worried or irritable, or care less about her mode of living and health, if her ideals are not of a high and refined nature, just so surely as the child lives, whether male or female, he or she will be influenced by them. But someone says, "what if the child inherits tastes from the father's side which may not be for its best interests in after life, how is the mother to help that?" She can help it to a great extent, for environment counts for more than heredity every time. Look at the great men and women of this and past ages. An almost every instance their testimony is: "All that I am, and hope to be, I owe to my mother."

What greater tribute could any man or woman pay to the one who bore, suffered and labored for them? In the beginning of the young child's life the mother finds her greatest opportunity and responsibility. The old saying, "Give me the first ten years of a child's life and the world can have him afterward," has much of truth in it, but not all. We can scarcely realize that the first few days after a child is born he is forming habits and is greatly influenced by the care given him. Just try walking the floor with a crying baby a few days old. As long as you keep up the walking he will be quiet; sit down, and he will begin to squirm and cry. The mother's responsibility in the forming of the child's habits begin with its life, and go on until he has reached an age of accountability and discretion, and even from then on her influence, encouragement and advice should continue.

Some people contend that the rearing and training of girls is a greater responsibility for motherhood than that of boys. It should not be if a mother is true to her trust. Some say girls are with their mothers more than boys, therefore more susceptible to guidance and advice. True, but why are not boys near to the mother and home where the daily comradeship should be evenly distributed? The thought that a boy will become satisfied if he makes a chum of his mother and helps her in the dear home tasks is one of the most erroneous this world has ever harbored.

I call to mind a boy who used to help his mother wash for the public in order that she might provide a living for herself and several children, (and most of the time for a worthless husband and father), who was so poor he never owned an overcoat until he was seventeen years of age; who nobly faced the direst poverty and privations, who, while still young, began to fill positions of trust and later served as governor of his state and was talked of as president of this, our United States, and would have been, as surely as the sun shines, if death had not claimed him while only forty years of age, who said in one of his memorable speeches: "Yes, I am the son of a wash-woman, as my enemies have so often taunted me, with my

HOLD SEVEN DAY PROGRAM

Citizens of Charlevoix Close Contract With Redpath Bureau.

Greatest Seven-Day Chautauque Ever Held in Northern Michigan.

One of the first commendable propositions to be put across by the "Committee of 21" was the closing of a contract last evening with the Redpath Chautauque Bureau for a seven-day program to be held in this city during the latter part of July or first week in September, 1914.

The entertainments will be held in a tent which has a seating capacity of nearly 2500 people. Entertainments of various nature will be given three times a day, making a total of twenty-one entertainments for the entire course. The program that will be offered this season eclipses any seven day chautauque program ever presented. Upon the program will be such celebrities as Hon. Joseph W. Folk of Missouri; Dean Sumner, superintendent of the city missions of Chicago; J. Adam Bede of Minnesota; Ralph Bingham; Dr. E. W. Huelster; O. D. McKeever, at one time secretary to the world-famous evangelist, D. L. Moody; the Ben Greet players, a company of fourteen, personally trained and coached by Ben Greet; America's greatest cornetist and director, with the famous Kyrl band. Bohumir Kyrl has been pronounced by critics as the greatest living cornetist, and for several years traveled with Sousa's band. The Bergen-Marx Grand Concert Company will also appear on one of the numbers, besides other famous lecturers and musicians.

The entire seven-day program will consist of high class music, literature, drama, oratory, magic and grand opera. Only the best of talent will appear, as high as $15,000 having been paid by the bureau for a single attraction for the season. Season tickets for the entire seven-day program, consisting of twenty-one numbers will be sold for $200, making single admissions but 10 cents. The committee, with the aid of other citizens have contracted for the sale of 750 tickets at $2.00 each. Each member signing the agreement with the bureau thus becoming responsible for the sale of the tickets. These tickets will be placed on sale early in next season, and should find a ready sale.

KEEPING THINGS MOVING IS BEST

The Only Method for the Building Up of a Town.

Coastal, Truthful Advertising Will Attract Attention of the Outside World.

There are different methods of making a town grow. Some people have the idea that the only manner in which growth can be obtained is by bringing in a lot of factories, and yet at the same time they are not willing to put up any of their good cash to bring such an event to pass. On the other hand there are others who believe that their home town will make a good growth if they stand idly by and wait for something to turn up that will bring additional people within the corporation limits. Both of these classes are laboring under a wrong impression, for town growth depends first upon the makeup of the people who compose the population and the geographical location. A town that is inhabited by live people who never let an opportunity pass to do something worth while in development work is always assured of a steady and healthy growth. When this condition is coupled with the fact that the town is located in an ideal place for business and is backed up by a fertile soil then the problem of growth is solved, for people will always follow the course of progress and good producing land. Town booming is a poor method of growth and many a promising place has been sent on a downward course after the first enthusiasm subsided. One of the greatest factors in town building is constant, truthful and consistent advertising and the ability on the part of the real live citizens to keep something moving that will attract the attention of the outside world to their particular locality.

This system builds up towns upon a firm business basis and provides the newcomers with positions as fast as they come, and does not flood the labor market over-crowded business. Boom towns attract a class of people who are looking for easy money and not a permanent residence. On the other hand when people can be convinced that a town is a good place in which to live and bring up a family the result is that a desirable element will be attracted, who in turn will take an active interest in community development.

OFF TO THE BEAVERS

Seven Charlevoix Hunters Spend the Day on the Historical Island.

Saturday morning a party of seven Charlevoix hunters, consisting of Orlin Nordman, Amos Webster, R. A. Emery, E. E. Fraubens, Ralph Washburn, Archie Lemieux and Roy Ripley, went to Beaver Island on the Arbutus for a days hunt after rabbits, which are reported very numerous on the island. The boys claim they had a hard time getting away from the rabbits, which would come out in front of them and sit still while being shot at, and a couple became so careless that by some accident their lives paid the penalty for even Orlin and Ralph occasionally managed to get a few scattering shots to hit a still object.

COMMITTEE OF 21.

Charlevoix Business Men Organize for Good of Community.

Twenty-one business men of Charlevoix have organized what will be known as the "Committee of 21," the initial purpose being to promote the welfare of Charlevoix.

The committee will be composed of 21 members and a secretary and treasurer. Nine members constitute a quorum and a majority vote binds the other twenty-one members to support any proposition put across. At each meeting a new chairman is selected, no one member being allowed to occupy the chair at consecutive meetings.

A world of good can be done in any community by an organization of this character, and no place is more in need than our home town.

LOWER PRICE ON HEN FRUIT

Food Commissioner Helme Gets Into Fight for Lower Egg Prices.

Will Present Bill at Next Legislature to Prevent Monopoly on Product.

State Food Commissioner James W. Helme has stepped into the fight for lower egg prices. He is preparing a bill that will strike at the very heart of the trouble, he says, and will present it at the next session of the legislature, be it a special or regular one. The measure will prevent those having eggs in storage from gaining a monopoly.

"The function of the cold storage is to hold the spring surplus of eggs for the fall slack," said the commissioner. That is its use; but there is also a great abuse.

"The cold storagesmen, or the commission men who place eggs in storage, are in the game for the money, naturally they hold the eggs during the slack season until the prices go sky-high.

"The commission men holler 'the hens aren't laying, we can't help the high prices.' Of course the hens aren't laying this time of the year. They never do. The situation this year is but little different from that of any year.

"In my opinion, the cold storage houses are loaded with April eggs, which could be placed on the market at reasonable prices. The eggs were bought for about 20 cents or less I know, for I sell eggs on my farm and know conditions about the state.

"Pennsylvania has a new law that compels the storage men to place their April and May eggs on the market within six months after they are stored. The storage men must report to the state food commissioner each month. As a result spring eggs cannot be monopolized and must be placed on sale during the slack season. I am going to head every effort to have such a law passed in Michigan. Last year I presented a similar one to the legislature and it lost by a few votes—and last because commercial interests used their influence."

That a boycott will have little effect unless waged in every big city in the country is the opinion of the commissioner.

BIG JUBILEE CELEBRATION

Northern Michigan Pythians Gather at Meeting in Petoskey.

Fiftieth Anniversary of Founding of Order of the Knights of Pythias in United States.

Twenty-two local Knights of Pythias attended the golden jubilee meeting of Inawandwin Lodge, No. 38, at their castle hall in Petoskey Monday evening, making the trip by train, bus and automobile. This was the first meeting of its kind ever held in Petoskey or, in fact, anywhere in northern Michigan.

The event was in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Knights of Pythias lodge in the United States and was of more than the usual interest because of the fact that Pythianism was originated in Michigan, not so many miles from Petoskey.

Nearly a hundred knights sat down to the banquet table at 6:45 and were served with one of the most appetizing and delicious banquets ever enjoyed in the history of the order in Petoskey. Pythians from all over northern Michigan were on hand to enjoy the celebration.

The guests of honor were Grand Chancellor, H. E. Van de Walker of Ypsilanti and Grand Keeper of Records and Seal, W. E. Hampton of this city, whose presence added much interest and enjoyment to the gathering.

Perhaps the most pleasant and enjoyable part of the whole celebration were the addresses given by the two guests of honor, who spoke briefly on Pythianism and the fine work that has been accomplished, also of the rapid growth of the order in the state during the past year.

RECEIVED SPLENDID GIFT

Bay View Donated a New Auditorium and Pipe Organ by Members.

Thomas Gordon, of Howell, Michigan, president of the Bay View Assembly association, and John M. Hall, of Detroit, leading spirit in the world famous Bay View Chautauque course and university, last week completed plans for Bay View's new auditorium.

The new building is the gift of Mr. Hall and its new pipe organ is made possible by Mr. Gordon.

The new auditorium is to be about the size of the present building, will contain a gallery with seating capacity for nearly a thousand people, giving the building an entire seating capacity of from 2,300 to 2,600 people.

The building is to be erected of concrete and steel and be practically fire-proof. The new pipe organ will be one of the finest made.

The work of razing the old building will be commenced at once and the new auditorium will be completed in time for the opening of the assembly course next summer. —Petoskey News.

BANK ACCOUNT A LIABILITY

C. H. S. A. A. to Put on Play to Cover Up Shortage.

People of City Are Urged to Give Financial Support by Buying Tickets.

At the end of the most successful football season that a Charlevoix team has ever experienced it was found that their bank account was a liability. This is a seasonal thing when the strings of everyone's pocketbook naturally become loosened and we feel sure that the citizens will patronize the Annual Benefit that will be held in the Charlevoix Opera House Thursday of next week.

If you believe that athletics tend to develop many characteristics as well as physical strength you must realize that it takes money, and lots of it, to run a successful schedule. We feel sure that your generosity in the past is only an indication that you are interested and believe these things worth while. There are, to be exact, 47 seats in the local playhouse. The association is going to fill the house on December 18th and there is going to be no discrimination. The first come the first served. There are just eight more days before the festivities, so it behooves everyone to scurry around and procure their ticket early. BUY ONE WHETHER YOU COME OR NOT. THEY NEED THE MONEY.

The benefit this year will take the form of a play and motion pictures. Manager Lookot of the Opera House has secured several special reels of good educational value and excellent moral tone.

The play is four scenes taken from the dramatization of Dickens' "Christmas Carol." The entire cast will be composed of members of the high school student body. It is a realistic production, showing clearly how a man ought to live and the views of life that are worth while. Come and see the squeezing, grasping, wrenching old Scrooge changed by the spirits of the underworld to a man who could really enjoy Christmas. Remember the date, December 18, and attend.

CELEBRATE EIGHTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

Shakespeare Study Club Observe Event at Iddings Home.

SPLENDID PROGRAM PREPARED

Dr. R. B. Armstrong Presided as Master of the Evening.

Menu All That Skill Could Devise—Special Feature of the Evening a Delightful Innovation.

On Thursday evening, December 11th, the Shakespeare Study Club held its eighth annual banquet at the home of Mrs. H. L. Iddings on Park avenue.

At seven o'clock the doors of the dining room were opened, where a table surrounding a court of palms and statuary was laid out in magnificent display. The injunction to "eat and drink as friends" was followed by the thirty people who occupied chairs at the table. The menu was all that skill could devise, under the direction of Mrs. J. S. Baker and Mrs. G. W. Croner.

The program as prepared by Mrs. R. B. Armstrong, Mrs. F. W. Mayne and Mrs. W. E. Hampton was received wonderfully well. The president of the club Mrs. H. S. Harsha welcomed the guests and invited Dr. R. B. Armstrong to assume the role as master of the evening. This he did with much mirth and satisfaction to all. Mr. Lisle Shahan responded to a toast of unanimity, signifying that "charity itself fulfills the law." A vocal solo by Mrs. Constance Iddings was loudly enjoyed. She made "Marvelous Sweet Music." Mr. H. S. Harsha responded to a toast "The Optimist," taking as his theme, "My crown is called Content." "The Modern Eve" was responded to by Mr. George Priest who used as his guide—"Is she not passing fair?"

Then followed a special feature prepared by the program committee "Which is the Villain?" This scene was a bit of the dialogue between the ghosts of Shakespeare and Bacon, who were called by Hecate—queen of the witches—to come forth, and each assume his claim to what is known as Shakespeare's writings. This was a delightful innovation.

Miss Dorothy Armstrong was pianist of the evening. Mrs. Horatia Iddings, Horatio V. Harsha, Lloyd Auld, William Hampton Jr., served the guests at table.

A vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Iddings for her hospitality, also to the committees for their efficiency. The club looks forward to many more anniversaries.

WILKINSON A DELEGATE

Member of "Committee of One Thousand" to Go to Washington.

As the outcome of the big national convention of the Anti-Saloon League held in Columbus, Ohio, November 10, a committee known as the "committee of a thousand" from every state was appointed to proceed to Washington, December 10, and memorialize congress to pass a bill permitting the several states to vote on a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor in the United States.

Dr. A. M. Wilkinson was honored by appointment as one member of this committee and left Sunday night for a two week's sojourn in Washington. He was accompanied as far as Detroit by Mrs. Wilkinson, who will visit at the home of her sister until the Doctor's return.

friends, as well as myself, but what I am, and what I hope to be for my family, myself, and my country, I owe to my mother, who instilled into my young mind and heart, while we washed and labored, lessons of truth, honesty, industry and love of home and country.

Responsibility of motherhood! Can we measure the weight, and estimate this one mother's influence and her understanding of her duty toward her child, her God and her country.

The responsibility of motherhood should be divided into four classes or heads: Moral, Physical, Educational and Religious.

Moral responsibility prepares the way for the other three. No mother can afford to overlook the great necessity of beginning very early to teach the young child the difference between right and wrong and the meaning of truthfulness.

We often hear mothers say to their babies, "If you do this and so the bad man will get you, or a big bear will come and eat you up," and in a short time the child comes to understand that mother didn't mean that, or mother was just fooling, and thus the first seeds of untruthfulness are sown.

As the child grows to more mature years the habit of lying is well established. The mother failed in her responsibility to her child.

Industry is another quality mothers cannot begin too early to instill into their children. As soon as the little one is able to toddle about let it begin to help mother. It is a source of happiness to the child and a very great help to the mother as the years go by.

I know of no more pitiable condition than a boy or girl growing up without a knowledge of how to do things for themselves and others, thus losing the training that will make them useful men and women in the world. Give the boys and girls something to do; something to make them useful men and women in the world. Give the boys and girls something to do, something to keep them interested, and in close touch with their mothers, and morally they will be, in nearly all cases, clean men and women.

Physically, one of the mother's responsibilities is to teach the young child how to live, the care of the body and the imperative need of regular habits. Early to bed and early to rise is what every child needs. Regular meals is another of the mother's responsibilities, and yet more the shame, many mothers will let their children lunch between meals on such monstrosities as cake, candy, chocolate, sundae and the like, and then bewail the fact that their children are nervous and irritable and have no appetite for their food. If a child is hungry at any time, give him good bread.

SOME DON'T'S For Stomach and Liver Sufferers

Don't take medicine for your Stomach ailments morning, noon and night, as usually such medicines only give temporary relief and simply digest the food that has to be in the stomach. Don't permit a surgical operation. There is always serious danger in operations and in many cases of Stomach, Liver and Intestinal ailments the knife can be avoided if the right remedy is taken in time.

Don't go around with a foul smelling breath caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver, to the discomfort of those you come in contact with. If you are a Stomach Sufferer don't think you cannot be helped, probably worse cases than yours have been restored by Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy.

Most stomach ailments are mainly caused by a catarrhal condition. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy not only removes the catarrhal mucus but also the chronic inflammation and assists in restoring the entire alimentary and intestinal tract antiseptic, and this is the secret of its marvelous success.

Don't suffer constant pain and agony and allow your stomach ailments to physically undermine your health. No matter how severe your case may be or how long you have suffered—use dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—surely you will be restored to health again. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy has been taken and is highly recommended by Members of Congress, Justice of the Supreme Court, Educators, Lawyers, Merchants, Bankers, Doctors, Druggists, Nurses, Manufacturers, Farmers, Miners, and people in all walks of life.

Mrs. John Hull, 102 West Lincoln avenue, Charlevoix, Michigan, says:

"About a year ago I had a severe attack of lumbago. I suffered greatly and tried many remedies, but got no relief until I took Donn's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store. A few months ago I was again having trouble from weak kidneys and backache. I again took Donn's Kidney Pills and they acted promptly in bringing me relief."

and butter, an apple or a glass of milk, and you'll be laying a solid foundation for the regular meal. On the responsibilities of motherhood is heavy along this line.

The education of the child, both secular and religious, is one of the heaviest responsibilities of motherhood. Too many mothers let their better judgment be over-ruled by the child's pleadings to be allowed to remain at home from school on account of a headache or some other imaginary ailment, but shortly after the bell ceases to ring Johnny or Mary are suddenly better and asking to go out and play, and perhaps don't want to ask.

Mother love and mother wisdom must assert itself at this time, remembering it is for the child's welfare and for the well being of the generation to come, and that she must be firm, kind and strong, for some day these same children will say, "If my mother had made me go to school I might have amounted to something; or if my mother had been more particular about my habits and diet, I might have been a stronger, better and more useful man or woman, as the case may be."

Well the writer remembers the precepts and teachings of the dear mother that was hers for only a few years. Today her voice is still heard, and helps smooth over many a rough and troubled place. Truly her children have golden memories of her life. She was ever alive in the responsibility of her motherhood.

In all the world, where you in bliss, May soon forget another, There is none whom you will miss When she is gone like—mother.

Religious training of the child oftenest falls upon the mother, and here lies her greatest and most sacred responsibility. How many men and women in later life, when in doubt or trouble or when tempted to do wrong can hear their mother's voice in prayer asking God to save and keep her dear ones and guide them to Himself.

The title, "Now I Lay Me," prayer, so often repeated at mother's knee, will be sacred as long as the world lasts and through all ages, the lips of mother that first taught it to some tender, receptive childish mind, will be hallowed in history. Oh! mothers, be not weary or discouraged; do your best, honestly and conscientiously, and leave the results to God, remembering that while our efforts may not count for much at the time, they will surely bear good fruit in the years to come.

WITHIN THE LAW

BAYARD VEILLER

CHAPTER V.
Keeping Within the Law.
MARY'S heart leaped at the possibility back of those three words, "within the law." She might do anything, seek any revenge, work any evil, enjoy any luxury as long as she should keep within the law. There could be no punishment then. That was the lesson taught by the captain in high finance. He was at pains always in his stupendous robberies to keep within the law. To that end he employed lawyers of mighty cunning and learning to guide his steps aright in such tortuous paths. There, then, was the secret. Why should she not use the like means? Why, indeed? She had brains enough to devise, surely. Beyond that she needed only to keep her course most carefully within those limits of wrongdoing permitted by the statutes. The sole requirement would be a lawyer equally unscrupulous and astute. She took Joe Garson into her confidence. He was vastly astonished at the outset and not quite pleased. To his view this plan offered merely a fashion of settling difficulties in the way of achievement.

Presently, however, the sincerity and persistence of the girl won him over. The task of convincing him would have been easier had he himself ever known the torment of serving a term in prison. Thus far, however, the forger had always escaped the penalty for his crimes, though often close to conviction. But Mary's arguments were of a compelling sort as she set them forth in detail, and Garson agreed that the experiment should be made. An agreement was made by which Joe Garson and certain of his most trusted intimates in the underworld were to put themselves under the orders of Mary concerning the sphere of their activities. Furthermore, they bound themselves not to engage in any devious business without her consent. Aggie, too, was one of the company thus constituted, but she figured little in the preliminary discussions, since neither Mary nor the forger had much respect for the intellectual capabilities of the adventuresome, though they appreciated to the full her remarkable powers of influencing men to her will.

It was not difficult to find a lawyer suited to the necessities of the under-taking. Mary selected Silasman Harris, an attorney, just in the prime of his mental vigor, who possessed a knowledge of the law only to be equaled by his disregard for it.

Fortwith the scheme was set in operation. As a first step Mary Turner

became a young lady of independent fortune, who had living with her a cousin, Miss Agnes Lynch. The day was abandoned. In its stead was an apartment in the Netherlies on Riverside drive, in which the ladies lived alone with two maids to serve them. Garson had rooms in the neighborhood, but Jim Lynch, who persistently refused the conditions of such an arrangement, betook himself afar, to continue his reckless gathering of other folk-money in such wise as to make him amenable to the law the very first time he should be caught at it. A few tentative ventures resulted in profits so large that the company grew mightily enthusiastic over the novel manner of working. In each instance Harris was consulted and made his confidential statement as to the legality of the thing proposed. After a few perfectly legal breach of promise suits, due to Aggie's winsome innocence of demeanor, had been settled advantageously out of court Mary devised a scheme of greater elaborateness, with the legal opinion of the lawyer to endorse it in the matter of safety. It was planned as the swindling of a swindler, which, in fact, had now become the secret principle in Mary's morality.

A gentleman possessed of some means, none too scrupulous himself, but with high financial aspirations, advertised for a partner to invest capital in a business sure to bring large returns. This advertisement caught the eye of Mary Turner, and she answered it. An introductory correspondence encouraged her to hope for the victory in a game of cunning against cunning. She consulted with Harris and especially sought from him detailed information as to partnership law. His statements gave her such confidence that presently she entered into a partnership with the advertiser. By the terms of their agreement each deposited $20,000 to the partnership account. This sum of $40,000 was ostensibly to be devoted to the purchase of a tract of land, which should afterward be divided into lots and resold to the public at enormous profit. As a matter of fact, the advertiser planned to make a spurious purchase of the tract in question by means of forged deeds granted by an accomplice, thus making through fraud a neat profit of $50,000.

No sooner was the $40,000 on deposit in the bank than Mary Turner drew out the whole amount, as she had a perfect right to do legally. When the advertiser learned of this he was, naturally enough, full to overflowing with wrath. But after an interview with Harris he swallowed his wrath as best he might. He found he could not go into court with clean hands, which is a prime stipulation of the law, though often honored in the breach. So he let himself be misled in raging silence.

The event established Mary as the arbiter in her own coterie. She next decided that a certain General Hastings would make an excellent sacrifice on the altar of justice—and to her own financial profit. The old man was a notorious rascal of most unscrupulous reputation as a destroyer of innocence. It was probable that he would easily fall a victim to the ingenious character of Aggie. As for that previous damsel, she would run no least risk of detection by the satire.

General Hastings met Aggie in the most casual way. He was captivated by her freshness and beauty, her demureness, her ignorance of all things vicious. Straightway he set snares. He showed every gallant attention on the naïve, broad and butter-milk and succeeded gratifyingly soon in winning her heart—to all appearance. But he gained nothing more, for the coy creature abruptly developed most effective powers of resistance to every blandishment that went beyond strict propriety. His ardor cooled and died when Harris served a summons in a suit for $10,000 damages for breach of promise.

Even while this affair was still in the course of execution Mary found herself engaged in a situation that offered at least the hope of attaining her great desire—revenge against Edward Gilder. This opportunity came in the person of his son, Dick. After much contriving, she got an introduction to that young man. Fortwith she showed herself so deliciously womanly, so intelligent, so daintily feminine, so singularly beautiful that the young man was enamored almost at once. The fact thrilled Mary to the depths of her heart, for in this son of the man whom she hated she saw the instrument of vengeance for which she had so longed. Yet this one thing was so vital to her that she said nothing of her purposes, not even to Aggie, though that observant person may have possessed suspicions more or less near the truth.

It was some such suspicion that lay behind her speech as, in negligence, she sat smoking a cigarette, while watching Mary, who was adjusting her hair before the mirror of her dressing table one pleasant spring morning. "Dollin' up a whole lot, ain't you?"

Aggie remarked affably, with that laxity of language which characterized her natural moods.

"I have a very important engagement with Dick Gilder," Mary replied tranquilly.

"Nice boy, ain't he?" Aggie ventured inquisitively.

"Oh, I suppose so," came the indifferent answer from Mary as she tilted the picture but in an angle a trifle more jaunty.

"I don't get you, Mary. You never used to look at the men. The way you acted when you first run round with me, I thought you sure was a snuffragette. And then you met this young Gilder—and good night, nurse!"

"Well?"

"His old man sends you up for a stretch for something you didn't do, and you take up with his son like?"

"And yet you don't understand! There was scorn for such gross stupidity in the musical voice.

Aggie choked a little from the cigarette smoke as she gave a gasp when suspicion of the truth suddenly dawned on her slow intelligence.

"Hully gee!" Her voice came in a treble shriek of apprehension. "You wise?"

"But you must understand this," Mary went on, with an authoritative note in her voice. "Whatever may be between young Gilder and me is to be strictly my own affair. It has absolutely nothing to do with the rest of you or with our schemes for money making. And what is more, Agnes, I want to know what you meant by talking in the public street yesterday with a common pickpocket."

Aggie's childlike face changed swiftly to sullenness.

"You know perfectly well, Mary Turner," she cried indignantly, "that I only said a few words in passing to my brother Jim. And he ain't no common pickpocket. Hully gee! He's the best dip in the business."

"But you must not be seen speaking with him," Mary directed, with a certain air of command now become habitual to her among the members of her clique. "My cousin, Miss Agnes Lynch, must be very careful as to her associates."

"He just stopped me to say it's been the best year he ever had," she explained, with ostentatious vanity.

"How can that be when the dead line now is John street?"

"The dead line," Aggie scoffed. "Why, Jim takes lunch every day in the Wall street Belmont's. And only yesterday he went down to police headquarters just for a little excitement, 'cause Jim does sure hate a dull life. Say, he told me they've got a mat at the door with 'Welcome' on it in letters three feet high. Now, what do you think of that? And, oh, yes," she continued happily, "Jim, he lifted a leather from a bull who was standing in the hallway there at headquarters. Jim sure does love excitement." Mary lifted her dark eyebrows in half-amused inquiry. "It's no use, Agnes," she declared, though without entire sincerity. "I can't quite keep up with your thieves' argot—your slang, you know. Just what did this brother of your do?" "Why, he copped the copper's kale," Aggie translated, glibly. Mary thirtied out her hands in a gesture of dismay. Thereupon the adventuresome instantly assumed a most ladylike and mincing air which ill assorted with the cigarette that she held between her lips. "He gently removed a leathern wallet," she said sedately, "containing a large sum of money from the coat pocket of a member of the detective force." The elegance of utterance was inimitably done. But in the next instant the ordinary vulgarity of enunciation was in full play again. "Oh, gee!" she cried gaily. "He says in specter furber's got a gold watch that weighs a ton, an' all set with diamonds which was give to 'im by admiral's friends! We didn't contribute." "Given to him," Mary corrected with a tolerant smile. "What difference does it make?" Aggie demanded scornfully. "He's got it, ain't he? Just as soon as I get time I'm goin' after that watch—be lieve me!" (Continued on page 6).

"I have an important engagement with Dick Gilder."

MINISTER DISAPPEARS

Rev. A. van der Meer of Harbor Springs Missing for Two Weeks.

Harbor Springs is greatly excited over the mysterious disappearance of Rev. A. van der Meer, pastor of the Presbyterian church of that city.

Two weeks ago he left his boarding place saying that he was going to take dinner with a friend in Petoskey. Later a note was found on his table, together with the money he had collected for the purpose of sending certain boys to the Y. M. C. A. meeting at Saginaw. The note also contained a request that the money be returned to the donors.

The last news of the missing man was from Wigneton, that he had been seen walking eastward through the village. Since that time no trace of him has been found, and people are watching the shores of Little Traverse bay for his body, thinking he has done away with himself. A search has also been made in surrounding cities, and at his old home in Chicago.

Many bargains to be plucked at Graham's quality furniture store.

SHAY STOCK SOLD

Purchased by John Oldham of Petoskey Tuesday forenoon—Was Disposed of Later.

The remaining stock of the Shay estate was sold under chattel mortgage foreclosure to James Oldham of Petoskey. Some time last year the same stock was sold by Charles Zeitler, administrator, to Frank Chamberlain, who conducted the store up to a few weeks ago, when he suddenly left town for Detroit, where it is stated he is now working.

The stock was sold to Frank Chamberlain under a chattel mortgage, and upon his failure to make good, was again sold to Mr. Oldham. Later in the day a deal was made between Benj. Brown, the latter purchasing the entire stock.

FELL DOWN ELEVATOR SHAFT

A. F. Ruch of Petoskey in a Serious Condition From Accident.

A. F. Ruch, a prominent business man of Petoskey and well known in this city, lies in a serious condition at his home in that city as a result of falling down the elevator shaft at Darling & Behan's Thursday afternoon. His head is badly cut and bruised, his left hip broken, and the whole left side of his body is covered with bad bruises as the result of his fall onto the cement and stone bottom of the shaft.

Just how the accident happened is not known. Mr. Ruch is seventy-four years of age and will be some time recovering from his injuries.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

How to Use Leftover Meats.
The greatest economy in the home comes with the knowledge of making over meat into a dish that is both tasty and nourishing and a dish that does not prowl in too loudly the fact that it is a leftover, says the Modern Housewife.

However, there are many ways in which the remnants may be clothed and adorned so that the original dish is not recognized.

Chicken, lamb or mutton may be freed from the bone, heated in its own gravy and used as follows: Make a small pan of biscuit dough and when it is baked split it open and pour out the meat. Place the remainder of the biscuit on top and pour over all the thickened gravy.

Slices of meat of any kind may be heated in a portion of the gravy and canned mushrooms added. Add butter thickened with flour and serve on toast.

Pork may be cooked until the meat falls to pieces; then remove the bone, add seasoning, a little thyme, boiling water and thicken with cornmeal to make a stiff mush, boiling a half hour. Turn out into a bread mold, and when cold it is sliced and fried. It is known as scrapple.

Beef Loaf.—Use a cupful of cold beef that has been run through a chopper; mix with a half cupful of bread crumbs, some grated onion, a little melted butter, one egg and the thick part of canned tomatoes. Season well, heat in loaf form and bake in oven until brown. It should be heated occasionally with hot water and melted butter. Tomato sauce may be served with it.

Another form of using cold beef is a chop in fine, add one egg to a cupful of the meat, a little grated onion, and bread crumbs to thicken. Heat all together, cool and form into tiny balls. Dip these in egg and crumbs and fry in smoking hot fat. Drain on paper and serve.

Hash.—There are many forms of hash, and it may be made to taste and look very appetizing.

Gold corn loaf perhaps is the most desirable meat to use. To one cup of the chopped meat add two cups of chopped raw potatoes. Cold boiled potatoes may be used, but they do not give the same taste that the raw ones do. Cover with cold water and cook until the potatoes are tender. Season well and thicken with cracker dust adding a lump of butter. Cover and allow to set until a crust forms on the bottom of the mixture and then fold like an omelet. It may be garnished with parsley and rings of pepper. It does not brown readily if may be shifted to another frying pan with hot butter, and it will brown quickly.

ENTERTAINING FAD.

How to Give a Unique and Popular Card Party.

Any game of cards may be played that the hostess prefers or that is popular in the town. Request the guests to dress in costumes representing either the face or suit cards. For instance, have two five of diamonds, one a lady and one a man—so that when all have arrived partners may be chosen for the first game. The prizes may be a handsome deck of cards in a vase, a book on card games, ferns growing in a pretty jar, a bit of brass or a piece of pottery.

The score cards may be cut out of cardboard in the shape of diamond, hearts, clubs and spades. The markers may be of these same figures, cut out of thin colored paper and gummed a few days before they are used, so they will be dry.

Serve hot bouillon in cups, patties of chicken and sweetbreads, salad, cream sherbet, small cakes, coffee, nuts, bonbons. If ice cream is preferred use the brick cut in thin slices, ornament with tiny hearts, diamonds, clubs and spades cut from citron and candied cherries.

How to Keep Baby Covered.

An old side garter solves the problem of kicked off bedclothes without the toru sheets that safety pins always perpetrate. To each side of the crib, around one of the side bars or sewed to the mattress by the elastic, fasten one of the clips which hold the stockings. These should be placed so that they come just to the fold of the bed clothes on each side. After the baby is laid in fasten the clips to the sheet and one blanket on each side as if they were stockings.

How to Make Photographer's Paste.
This formula for making photographer's paste will be found very satisfactory:

One cupful flour, one dessertspoonful alum, half a cupful water. Mix this to a smooth paste, add two and a half cupfuls more water and let come to a boil. After it is boiled heat in 5 minutes worth of formaldehyde and a few drops of oil of cinnamon.

How to Make Perspiration Powder.
Mix French chalk, baking soda, powdered alum andorris root in equal proportions and dust the body after a bath but not the face. The soda counteracts the acidity noticeable in excessive perspiration.

The Wrestler's Pride.
In olden times a wrestler who had won a belt used to go to his village church on the following Sunday wearing the belt. On the Sunday following that he went to some neighboring church in his belt and claimed precedence over the other young fellows. Nearly all the champions were men great in girth and weight. Old Stepmann, accounted by many the most powerful wrestler ever known, was twenty stone weight. — Manchester Guardian.

BROKE HIS ARM

Game of Tag Resulted in Bad Accident to Harold Cartier.

While playing tag last Friday, Harold Cartier, the 13 year old son of Alderman F. A. Cartier, fell and broke his right arm above the wrist.

Harold with a number of other playmates were engaged in this favorite game for boys, and in his endeavor to escape from the boy who was "it," climbed upon the roof of the house and started to come down over the porch, when part of the cornice gave way, letting him fall about sixteen feet to the ground. The break was not a serious one.

Broke Her Leg.

Tuesday evening about 4 o'clock Mrs. John Ward slipped and fell on the steps at her home on south State street and broke her right leg above the knee. The accident is a serious one on account of the advanced age of Mrs. Ward, who has been rather feeble for some time. Dr. Armstrong, who reduced the fracture, reports the patient getting along nicely.

Had Highest Amount.

It was found that Mrs. A. B. Thompson was entitled to the first prize in the contest being conducted by S. M. See & Sons at the first count Saturday evening. Mrs. Rollet A. Ross was second. The next count will take place in January.

FOR POWER TRANSMISSION.

Enormous Herringbone Gear Wheel Cut by Machine.

The advance which has now been made in the way of producing double herringbone gear wheels for all kinds of industrial use is well illustrated by the remarkable specimen presented herewith, and it is also an example of the way in which gear manufacturing is becoming specialized.

The factory where the gear was made has gear cutting machines installed for cutting herringbone gears upon wheels up to thirty feet in diameter and rolling mill pinions of as much as ten feet in length. Within a recent period the advantages of this class of gearing have become more and more appreciated, not only for use in rolling mills to transmit the large amount of power needed for the rolls and at the same time be able to stand the very severe shocks arising in this kind of work, for also in the navy and other fields where the use of electric motors is now becoming general.

This kind of gearing is, in fact, well adapted to work in a number of cases where a large amount of power is to be taken from an electric motor. In view of the increasing demand for the gearing the factory above referred to was erected in Paris exclusively for producing herringbone gears, and owing to the specialization of this work it is now turning out gears of high quality and precision. In consequence the French navy is now making use of these gears largely. They are used upon a number of the battleships of the fleet for driving some of the machinery on board. They are also employed in the Transvaal mines, where thirty-one gear sets serve for electric winches of 250 to 500 horsepower, and twenty-three sets are used for tube mills.

Rust on Wire Wheels.

Regardless of the quality of the enamel that is used on wire wheels constant vibration is likely to cause it to chip, and where it chips the spokes will rust, and in time they will break. If the rust is permitted to eat its way into the metal. The ounce of prevention consists of the application of successive coats of this hard enamel, say, once or twice a season or as often as the existing enamel shows signs of chipping or wearing off. Almost any good enamel produced for use on metal surfaces will serve the purpose, and it should not be put on too thickly or it will show a tendency to chip easily. The better way is to apply several coats of very thin enamel, allowing each to dry thoroughly before the next is put on. The drying process is an important part of the work and should be given ample time. — Automobile Dealer and Repairer.

High Motor Speed.

A speed of 3,210 revolutions per minute for an automobile motor was established by the automobile testing plant of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Massachusetts. The condition under which the tests were made approximated as closely as possible actual duty on the road. A dynamometer indicated that the twenty horsepower rating of the motor was reached at 1,129 revolutions per minute. At 1,500 revolutions thirty horsepower was developed, and at 3,210, the maximum, thirty-six horsepower, equivalent to a speed of eighty-nine miles per hour. At about 3,200 revolutions the power curve began to drop.

Mending Broken Oilstones.

A broken oilstone can be repaired so that it will last until the stone wears out in the following manner: The pieces are first heated on an iron plate to remove all oil, then thoroughly cleaned. The surfaces to be joined are well dusted with powdered shellac, which is melted by heating in the same manner. The parts are then placed together and tightly clamped until they become cool. The joints thus made will not interfere with the cutting surface.

Vibrator Adjustment.

Ordinarily the vibrator should be set much stiffer for magneto than for battery, as the life of magnetos is not affected by excessive demands for primary current. The stiffer adjustment will cause a better spark and consequently more power. This is one of the many advantages of the magneto.

LUCKY--NIT

Charlevoix lucky After Boy City Busch left vicinity.

Lucky Charlevoix!—Judge Willis Brown is making plans for starting a town for bad boys in the upper part of the state, having purchased the township of Walhalla, near Charlevoix. —Detroit Journal.

Lucky-luck has certainly been with Charlevoix since the Boy City pipe dream bubble exploded, about three years ago, and the boy city management left for other locations.

And "Walhalla," this is a new one on us. Some of the town cranes have analyzed the meaning of the word as follows: W stands for "Willis," A stands for "After," L stands for "loss," H for "the dough we are out," I, for a "hotter place," and A for "Amen."

WITHIN THE LAW

"No, you are not. You are under my orders now. And as long as you are working with us you will break no laws."

"But I can't see! Aggie began to argue with the politeness of a spoiled child."

"When you were working alone did you have a home like this?"

"No."

"Or such clothes? Most of all, did you have safety from the police?"

"No; but, just the same, I can't see!"

"Agnes, the richest men in this country have made their fortunes, not because of the law, but in spite of the law. They made up their minds what they wanted to do and then they engaged lawyers clever enough to show them how they could do it and still keep within the law. Any one with brains can get rich in this country. If he will engage the right lawyer. Well, I have the brains, and Harris is showing me the law—the wonderful twisted law that was made for the rich since we keep inside the law we are safe."

"And now I must be off to a most important engagement with Mr. Dick Gilder."

CHAPTER VI.

A Tip From Headquarters.

AGGIE gave herself over to more cigarettes in an easy chair sprawled out in an attitude of comfort never taught in any finishing school for young ladies. Soon the coming of Joe Garson, who was usually in and out of the apartment a number of times daily, provided a welcome diversion. Aggie explained in response to his question that Mary had gone out to keep an engagement with Dick Gilder.

"Mary has been with him a good deal lately," he said, half questioningly.

"That's what," was the curt agreement.

"Think she's stuck on him?"

"Why not?" Aggie retorted. "But your life I'd be if I had a chance. He's a swell boy, and his father's got the coin too."

At this the man moved impatiently, and his eyes wandered to the window. Again Aggie studied him with a swift glance of interrogation.

"Joe, if there's anything on your mind shoot it."

"It's Mary," Garson explained, with some embarrassment; "her and young Gilder."

"Well," came the crisp question.

"Well, somehow," Garson went on still somewhat confusedly, "I can't see any good of it for her."

"Why?" Aggie demanded, in surprise.

"Old man Gilder's got a big pull, and if he caught on to his boy's going with Mary he'd be likely to send the police after me—strong."

"We ain't doing nothing they can touch us for," Mary says so."

"Whether we've done anything or whether we haven't don't matter," he objected. "Once the police set out after you they'll get you. Russia ain't in it with some of the things I have seen pulled off in this town."

"Oh, can that 'frail talk' Aggie exclaimed roughly. "Tell you they can't get us. We've got our fingers crossed."

A noise in the hall door interrupted her, and she looked up to see a man while behind him appeared the maid, protesting angrily.

"Never mind that announcing thing with me," the newcomer rasped to the expectant servant in a voice that suited well his thick set figure, with the bullet shaped head and the bull like neck. He was Cassidy, who had had Mary Turner in his charge on the occasion of her ill fated visit to Edward Gilder's office four years before.

"Hello, Joe," he cried familiarly.

"Hello, Aggie."

"Well," Joe demanded.

"Just a little friendly call," Cassidy announced in his strident voice.

"Where's the body of the house?"

"Out," Aggie spoke tersely.

"Well, Joe," Cassidy went on, "when she comes back just tell her it's up to her to make a getaway and to make it quick."

"Say," Aggie retorted viciously, "you can't throw any sense into us. See?"

"Nothing on you, eh? Well, well, let's see." Cassidy regarded Garson with a grin. "You are Joe Garson, forger?"

As he spoke the detective took a notebook from a pocket, found a page, and then read: "First arrested in 1891 for forging the name of Edwin Goodsell to a check for $10,000. Again arrested June 13, 1893, for forgery. Arrested in April, 1898, for forging the signature of Oscar Hemmenway to a series of bonds that were counterfeited."

Arrested as the man back of the Reilly gang in 1903. Arrested in 1908 for forgery."

"Haven't any records of convictions, have you?"

"No, but we've got the right dope on you, all right, Joe Garson." He turned savagely on the girl.

"And you're little Aggie Lynch," Cassidy declared as he thrust the notebook into her face.

of the drawing room. As she heard the outer door close behind the detective Aggie's expression grew vicious.

"The truck horse detective!" she sneered. "An eighteen collar and a six and a half hat! He sure had his nerve trying to bluff us!"

"Perhaps it wasn't a bluff, Aggie," Garson suggested.

"Well, what have we done, I'd like to know?"

Garson unscrewed with a note of weariness that was unlike him.

"It ain't what you have done," he said quietly. "It's what they can make a jury think you've done. And, once they set out to get you—God, how they can frame things! If they ever start out after Mary—"

He did not finish the sentence, but sank down into his chair with a groan that was almost of despair.

[To be continued next week]

Is that all you've got about her? Garson demanded.

book back into his pocket. "Just now you're posing as Mary Turner's cousin. You served two years in Burdus for blackmail. You were arrested in Buffalo, convicted and served your stretch. Nothing on you? Well, well!"

Again there was triumph in the of Garson's chuckle. He went on speaking with obvious enjoyment of the extent to which his knowledge reached.

"And the head of the gang is Mary Turner. Arrested four years ago for robbing the Emporium. Did her stretch of three years."

"Is that all you've got about her?" Garson demanded with such abruptness that Cassidy forgot his dignity sufficiently to answer with an unqualified yes.

"Nothing in your record of her about her coming out without a friend in the world and trying to go straight? You ain't got nothing in that pretty little book of your'n about your going to the millinery store where she finally got a job and flipping them off to where she came from?"

"Sure, they was tipped off. We got a protect the city."

"Got anything in that record of your'n," Garson went on venomously, "about her getting another job and your following her up again and having her throw out? Got it there about the letter you had old Gilder write, so that his influence would get her caught?"

"Oh, we had her right the first time."

"You did not," she was retorted for a job she never done. She went in honest, and she came out honest."

"And that's why she's here now with a gang of crooks," Cassidy retorted.

"Where else should she be?" Garson demanded viciously. "You ain't got nothing in that record about my jumping into the river after her. That's where I found her—a girl that never done anybody any harm, starting her cause you police wouldn't give her a chance to work. In the river because she wouldn't take the only other way that was left her to make a living, because she was keeping straight. Have you got any of that in your book?"

"Any way," the officer went on, with a new confidence, now that his powers were free from the gaze that had burned into his soul, "you've got to clear out, the whole gang of you, and do it quick."

"We don't seem worth a cent," Aggie snapped, with the challenge of a victim. "You can't do anything to us. We ain't broke the law. There came a sudden ripple of laughter, and the charming lips curved joyously as she added, "Though perhaps we have bent it a bit."

"Well, you've got the tip," Cassidy returned somewhat disconcerted after a swift flash of his own. "It's up to you to take it that's all. If you don't one of you will make a long yell with some people out of town and I'll probably be Mary's. Remember, I'm giving it to you straight!"

Cassidy turned and went, nodding out.

At this the man moved impatiently, and his eyes wandered to the window. Again Aggie studied him with a swift glance of interrogation.

I have the honor to advise you that the same has been adopted by the council and is now in force.

Acetylene Light in a Modern Cow Barn

WE sell a great many Pilot Acetylene lighting plants to dairy farmers. Because dairy farmers can get even more out of an Acetylene installation than anybody else.

Our dairy farmer patrons make these Acetylene plants do double work. They run an extra line of pipe to each barn—and sometimes to the other outbuildings. In these buildings they fasten the great balls of Acetylene light to timbers and rafters.

They also equip these lights with ignition devices—to make them light with the pull of a chain without matches.

Two of these Acetylene barn lights will make a big dairy barn as light as day. They give more light than a dozen lanterns—and unlike lanterns, they cannot be tipped over.

The same is true of Acetylene house lights. They burn in handsome stationary bronze or brass fixtures securely fastened to ceilings or walls.

You can tell one of these Acetylene lighted dairy barns from the road—a quarter of a mile away. The light is extremely brilliant. It is also soft and white in color—so nearly like sunlight that scientists have used it with success to grow plants on an extensive scale.

These qualities make it a cheerful light. Unquestionably it helps to keep the whole household happy and contented. Weak, dingy, yellow lights, on the other hand, just as surely tend to make people dull spirited and gloomy.

That is why we say Acetylene light is a mighty big help towards keeping the country boys and girls from drifting to the city.

Acetylene is too a boon to the women folks in another way. In addition to the beauty of the light it brings to the country home a great convenience in the gas cooking stove.

For acetylene can be and is used in gas cooking ranges in thousands of country homes, just as its cousin, city gas, is used in millions of city homes.

In every one of these homes the gas range has shortened cooking hours and has done entirely away with the drudgery of handling coal, wood and ashes.

You will be intensely interested in the simple mechanism of the Pilot which makes it different from all others in principle.

Its patent safety features have made it quite "trouble proof." They have given such perfect satisfaction that we have been able to sell no less than sixty thousand Pilot plants in fifteen years.

With these sixty thousand plants working incessantly in country homes, undergoing all kinds of misuse and abuse, we have only heard of two accidents. During the same period there has been over one hundred thousand accidents charged to other illuminants.

For this reason the Engineers of the National Board of Insurance underwriters called Acetylene safer than any illuminant it commonly displaces.

We would very much like to give you a free demonstration of the working of "the Pilot plant." For this purpose we have a portable plant which we can bring to your home. Or if you wish we will be pleased to mail you our advertising books containing the whole story of Acetylene. Just drop a card to—

BURNED TO DEATH

Horrible Death of Two Little Children in Bliss Township, Emmet County.

Word comes from Bliss township, near Petoskey, of the burning to death of two little children of Mr.
and Mrs. G. Stoneburner, who lives on section eleven, in that township.
The two little tots, a boy of three and girl of two, were locked in the log cabin by the mother, who wished to see her husband who was working in the woods some distance from the house.

Shortly after she left the house,
a neighbor noticed smoke issuing from the burning house and visited it to see if anyone was at home. Repeated knocking brought no one to the door, and they broke in a window, but seeing no one, returned to his home, and brought his team and pulled the roof off the house to put out the flames. Later he went into the house and found the blackened and burned bodies of the little children, under one of the beds, where they had crawled in their efforts to get away from the smoke and flames.

The parents knew nothing of the burning of their home and loss of their children until they returned from the woods about an hour later.

days.

E. B. Ward left Monday for Flint, where he will attend the meeting of the state grange. He will stop at Ahun, on his return trip, to visit his daughter, Edna, who is attending school at that place.

Robert A. Miller, a pioneer resident of this city, who for some time has been an inmate of the Masonic Home at Alma, was suddenly taken seriously ill Tuesday at the home of J. Parish. His condition is reported as serious.

John Walt and son, Melburn of Grand Rapids, formerly of this city and well known here, were in the city the first of the week greeting old friends and acquaintances. Mr.
Walt, son and brother Ralph are guests of R. H. Sherman, near Ironton.

Although buried for nine days in a snow bank, a sheep belonging to John Garten, a farmer living a few miles northeast of Caronville, is still alive and recovering rapidly.
The animal disappeared during the big snow storm and was not found until the snow began to melt.

The department of agriculture at Washington blames the packers of the nation for high cost of living prevailing at present. It seems reasonable, too, because so much of the world's provisions are in cold storage, causing an increased demand, consequently a higher price.

A post card from Lonie See, who is enroute for Portland, Oregon, states that the trip has been a fine one and that he had enjoyed the agency through Montana very much. The card was post marked Seattle, December 6, and stated that he would reach his destination
the following day.

Monday D. C. Nettleton received a telegram from Grand Rapids, announcing the death of Benjamin Dixon, aged 21 years, son of John S.
Dixon, a former well known resident of this city. The cause of his death was not stated in the telegram. Funeral services were held Tuesday at 2:30 o'clock.

Mrs. John Pride and children, Francis and George, formerly of this city but now of Petoskey, were in the city Monday visiting relatives and friends. Tuesday morning, accompanied by Mr. Pride, they left for Philadelphia, Penn., on account of the serious illness of Mr. Pride's mother.

Harbor Springs claims the distinction of being the first city in the state in which all the business men have joined a "hiking" club and instated that their clerks do likewise.
Every night a big crowd of business men and their clerks go for a two hour hike and every member is loud in his praise of the innovation.
—Mancelos Herald.

We would suggest that one of the first and most needed duties of the "Committee of 21," whose primary object is the welfare and betterment of Charlevoix, is to insist that the evening mail, which arrives on the late train, is distributed and in the postoffice boxes of the patrons not later than 7:30 the following morning.

Two weeks more in which to do your Christmas shopping. The stocks of the local merchants are at their best and are rich in holiday offerings, cheaper in price, too, than in the larger cities where the displays are no better. The Courier would advise the holiday investor to get in on the ground floor, make selections early and trade at home.
By so doing your Christmas will indeed be a "merry" one.

Fear Brother Lost.

Repeated telegrams have failed to bring any answer from Edward S.
Saville, brother of W. B. Saville of Petoskey and Mrs. Ada Shockley of this city, who lived at Mount Selma, Texas, one of the cities totally destroyed during the recent flood in that section. Mr. Saville left Tuesday from Petoskey to make an effort to locate the missing brother, who at the time of the great Galveston flood, lived, three days in the tree tops, and has been in two other floods in the south.

Priest, the photographer, will take pictures for the next 10 days and guarantee delivery in time for Christmas.—Adv. 501

CHARLEVOIX NEEDS ONE.

Should Follow Example Set By Our Neighboring City.

Petoskey has a humane society which during the coming winter will see that the practice of leaving horses exposed and uncovered for hours at a time is discontinued.
According to the Independent of that city, it is proposed to keep in stock at a certain place a number of good warm blankets and every time a horse is found standing un-blanketed in the street to care for the animal. One of these blankets with the words "Cared for by the humane society" will be placed over the animal and if that is not enough the horse will be placed in a livery stable, the owner to pay the charges. A warrant will also be issued for the owner and he will be prosecuted to the extent of the law, which provides for severe punishment.

SPLENDID TOPICS ABLY DISCUSSED

Speakers at W. C. T. U. Meeting Discuss Various Topics.

All Laws Should Contain Gist of Ten Commandments Says A. L. Coulter.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union met in the League room of the Methodist church Friday evening, December 12th. On account of the continued illness of the president, Mrs. S. J. Alcox, Mrs. Taggart, the first vice president presided.

The meeting was opened with singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers." Mrs. Taggart read from Paul's epistle to the Romans, and called on Rev. Quinton Walker to lead in prayer. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting, which was approved as read, a song, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning," was sung by the audience.

Mrs. Campbell then took charge of the program. The general topic of the evening was, "Some Laws We Need to Understand." The first speaker was A. L. Coulter, who had for his topic, "The Relation of Law and its Enforcement to Moral Reform." Mr. Coulter took us back to the beginning of law, and said that all law should contain the gist of the ten commandments as given by God to Moses. Public sentiment must be back of all law enforcement, and we are law makers so far as creating public sentiment is concerned. Mr. Coulter spoke as one knowing what he was saying, when he said there was not a single good thing to be said of the liquor business. It was bad, all bad.

Rev. C. E. Taggart had for his topic, "What New Laws Have We Had This Year in the Interest of Moral Reform?" The speaker mentioned a few only of the many laws which have been enacted, in our own state during the past year. Among them he said no minor under seventeen years of age shall be found in any place where liquor or tobacco are sold or used. The use of liquor on trains in dry territory is prohibited. The speaker also read some provisions of the Prohibition law, and dwelt on them at some length. "Laws Relating to the Home" was the topic which Judge Correll had under consideration. The Judge was well equipped to handle his subject, having brought his portfolio with him, giving some instances under his own supervision, explaining the Mothers' Pension Law, etc.

Rev. Quinton Walker was to speak on "Our Suffrage Laws," but the hour being so late was very brief. He said that "Woman has an inherent right to the ballot." Singing a verse or two of "America" closed the evening program.

WIVES BEWARE

Must Not Take Pay From Husbands for Paying Razors.

It is contended by the framers of the bill relative to barbers that a number of women in the state are violating section 18 of the act when they cut their husband's hair for money.

Section 18 says: "To trim or shave the beard or cut the hair of any person or to perform work customarily done by barbers as such for hire or reward shall be construed as practicing the occupation of a barber."

Violators are subject to a fine of $50 or ten days in jail.

A woman, therefore, who shaves her husband's beard or cuts his hair for "hire or reward" is amenable to the law. It is said that the high cost of living is driving many Michigan women to keep their husband's faces and heads in a state of repair.

The reward is sometimes only a kiss or perhaps a reprimand. Any way, any kind of reward is considered unlawful by the board and for a husband to slip the good wife a nickel after she has nearly run out of hair trying to make both sides of the head look alike is deemed a gross violation.

STOLE MARCH ON FRIENDS

Charlevoix Young Couple Married at Traverse City Monday.

Leo T. Carey and Miss Marion Emrey Feel Friends Who Were Lying for Them.

Stealing a march on their friends who had been anticipating having a good time on them, Mr. Leo T. Carey, the youngest son of Charles Carey, and Miss Marion Emrey, daughter of Registrar of Deeds R. A. Emrey, took the morning train Monday for Traverse City, where they were united in marriage by Rev. Slade at the Grace Episcopal church.

Both the bride and groom are well known in Charlevoix, having lived here all their lives. Mr. Carey is one of Charlevoix's promising young business men and will follow his occupation, and during the coming year engage in the business in a larger scale. The bride has a host of friends which she has won by her genuine worth and kindness of heart. She has been identified with the social and religious life of the city and for a time assisted her father in his work in the register of deeds office.

Mr. and Mrs. Carey left Traverse City on the afternoon train for Grand Rapids and Detroit, where they will visit among friends during the next ten days. They will be at home after January 1 at 206 Dixon avenue. Their friends in Charlevoix are legion, all of whom extend best wishes for a long and happy wedded life.

LOCAL MERCHANTS ADVERTISE

The Biggest Christmas Offerings in This Community—Readers Can Profit by Reading Them.

Readers, we want to tell you that it will be greatly to your benefit for you to read closely the Christmas advertisements in this week's issue of the Courier.

At this season of the year everyone of the generous mind and heart is propounding the question "What shall I buy this year for him or her?" And the nearer Christmas approaches, seemingly more difficult of solution becomes the problem. The great majority of our readers are those whose pocket-books are small but whose hearts are big. Therefore, dear reader, you want to buy something that will satisfy a big heart and a small purse, so the problem is really difficult after all.

Let us suggest a good way to do that Christmas shopping: Do not start out to cover the town in vague hopes that you are going to find just the things that will suit your friends the best. The better way, more satisfactory, more economical and more time-saving, is to take the current week's issue of the Courier, sit down in a quiet corner and read the Christmas offerings from the merchants. There are scores of articles suggested in this issue for suitable Christmas gifts and if after careful reading you cannot find in all this list the very things you want and can afford to buy your case is indeed hopeless. Just let the Courier do your shopping this week and next and you will be surprised how much more easily and cheaply your 1913 Christmas wants are filled.

To My Pupils.

Prof. E. J. Babbitt will be absent from December 15th to January 1st. Will be back after this date and again take up as usual.—Adv. 511 pd.

Wishing You a Merry Christmas.

At this Christmas season the Courier desires to express its hearty thanks and appreciation to its subscribers, readers and advertisers for their hearty co-operation and business for the past year. It has been the extreme endeavor of the management to furnish only the most interesting and reliable news that has occurred. We also extend an invitation to readers who perhaps are not subscribers to read the Courier and tender us their name for subscription. This would be an inexpensive present to some distant relative or friend for Christmas and beyond doubt a pleasing gift.

To the advertisers who have so readily used our columns we wish to express our thanks. The advertising bill a great part in the success of any paper and for the courtesy extended by the local merchants we are more than thankful.

Next year the management hopes to greatly increase the value of this paper, both to the reader and to the business man. Every effort will be made to make the Courier better and more interesting to all concerned.

Thanking the correspondents for their hearty co-operation as well as those who have given us news for publication, we wish you all "A Merry Christmas."

TUG LUCY A. WENT ASHORE

Melvin Brady, H. L. Brady and John Wideman Have Narrow Escape.

Beached On Fox Island for Several Days—Boat Was Badly Damaged.

Saturday, December 6, H. L. Brady, Melvin Brady and John Wideman, fishermen, left at 9:00 o'clock in the morning in the former's boat, the Lucy A., to lift their nets. A heavy gale was blowing when they left this port. After lifting their nets from beyond the Foxes they intended to start for home.

Sunday morning at four o'clock they started for home and at one o'clock in the afternoon they went ashore on the west side of the little Fox island. The compact from being beached badly damaged the boat, knocking out six planks. A shanty on the island was used as a shelter and with the above taken off their boat the men managed to keep warm. The tug McCann of the Beavers saw them and phoned to this city for assistance.

The men had in their possession a gun and some shells and with these shot rabbits. When the shells were used up they resorted to the bow and arrow to get meat to eat. The men used the last of their provisions for breakfast the morning of their rescue by Roy Ranger and Homer Davis, of this city. Planks were taken from the shanty on the island to repair the tug and with the untiring efforts of the three men continually bailing out the boat Messrs. Ranger and Davis managed to tow them back home last Saturday, just one week after they had left this city.

SPIRIT OF CO-OPERATION NECESSARY

In Bringing Towns to the Front and to Successfulness.

Every Town Exactly What the People Who Live There Make It.

Lack of interest in public affairs on the part of the residents is one of the reasons why the development of some towns is slower than that of others. When everybody shows an interest in what is being done it forms an incentive to those in charge of the different lines of endeavor to make a showing in their department, but when nobody seems to care how things are going stagnation occurs and nothing of moment is accomplished. Every town is exactly what the people who live there make it. If they are wide awake and take advantage of every opportunity to improve in every direction the spirit becomes contagious and results are bound to follow. The only successful way to build up a business is to attend strictly to it and never let a chance pass by to improve your methods and secure results. The same policy must be applied in a town in order to make it grow and assume an important part in the work of the region where it is located. A town that is inhabited by a progressive population is readily distinguished by strangers because every body they meet is filled with a spirit of optimism and have nothing but good words to speak of the town. Live citizens soon communicate their vitality to the whole community and action takes the place of inaction. A town cannot make people, but the people are the only ones who can make or unmake the town. Co-operation is the keynote of success in this direction and the closer the people stick together and work together the surer are beneficent results. Everybody loves an optimist, whether they admit it or not, and if there is any spirit of progress in them they will find it awakening when they come into contact with this class of individuals. If a majority of the people in a town believe in its future its growth cannot be stopped and things will happen in rapid succession to bring it to the front as a progressive municipality. The personal factor is the strongest point in bringing about satisfactory town conditions.

FINE GROWTH OF ALFALFA

Six Acres Sown First of August Shows Growth of Nine Inches.

That the soil of Charlevoix county will grow alfalfa as quick, if not quicker, than any county in northern Michigan has been fully demonstrated at the farm of D. S. Payton in Eveline township. Last week Mr. Payton paid a visit to the farm with the intention of looking over its condition and the fall crops. About the first of last August six acres of his land was planted to alfalfa. An examination of its condition showed that the crop had been a good one and he pulled a handful of the plant with roots running from seven to nine inches in length. Mr. Payton states that all through the six acres the growth is about the same.

Miscellaneous Shower.

Miss Margery Miller entertained Friday evening at a miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Marion Emrey at her home on Clinton street.

Twenty-five young ladies enjoyed a most pleasant evening and the gifts were dainty and numerous. A dainty luncheon was served by the hostess and Miss Lillian Emrey.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, it requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and impurities, and giving the system strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for anyone that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney Co., Toledo, Ohio. HAS PETOSKEY FOUND THE SAME?

The Answer is Found in the Straightforward Statement of a Petoskey Resident.

We have been reading week after week in the local press of Charlevoix citizens who have been rid of distressing kidney and bladder troubles by Doan's Kidney Pills and we have often wondered whether the same high opinion of this medicine is to be found in our neighboring towns. This frank and earnest statement by a well known and respected resident of Petoskey will set this doubt at rest.

John E. Warren, 823 Howard street, Petoskey, Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills at different times for kidney complaint and lame back and have always been benefited. I was subject to attacks of lame back and at times my kidneys didn't act as they should. I had to get up frequently at night and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they relieved me."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Warren had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Library money can be used only for the purchase of books and the subscriptions to suitable magazines and newspapers. There is nothing to prevent a school board using general fund money for these purposes, whether or not the district has voted for a library. Educators to-day appreciate the fact that a good library is the most valuable equipment in a school room.

BLACK ROT OF CABBAGE.

Recognized by Blackened Veins of Leaves—Treatment Recommended.

Black bacterial rot of cabbage, says a bulletin of the Connecticut agricultural experiment station, occurs on a number of related cruciferous plants. We have reported it from this before only on cauliflower. While we did not see it on cabbage until last season, it seems quite probable that it has caused more or less harm to this crop before, since it has been reported as quite injurious in several other eastern states in times past.

This disease is recognized by the blackened veins of the leaves, where the bacteria develop chiefly, and it then extends down into the head. The leaf tissues finally turn yellow, and the leaves are easily pulled off. Soft rot, caused in part by other organisms, often follows them at the base and develops an ill-smelling internal decay. The bacteria gain entrance through drops of water at the water-pores of the laminae of the leaves.

As the germs of this disease can be carried on the seed it is wise to see that the seed used does not come from a diseased crop. It doubt exists it is well to treat the seed with formalin, 1-240, or corrosive sublimate, 1-1000, for fifteen minutes. Likewise, if the disease shows up in a seed bed, this should be changed the next year. If bad in the field this land should not be used for cruciferous crops for several seasons and, even if the disease is not present, yearly rotation is desirable where it can be carried on without special difficulty. Refuse from diseased cabbages should never find its way to the manure pile.

Miss Whitting is assisting the members of the normal class in making charts which will aid each member of the class in teaching the primary grades.

GET MONEY FOR BOOKS

School Districts Which Have Voted for Libraries Receive Apportionment.

Library money is now apportioned to the various school districts which have voted to establish libraries on the first day of August instead of in June. The library fund is made up of the penal fines paid into each county and is distributed according to the number of children on the census list. Contrary to general opinion, it does not cost the school district anything to establish a library. After the vote is taken at an annual or special meeting and the fact is reported to the Department of Instruction on the annual report the district receives its share of the library fund.

FINDS VALUE IN ALFALFA

Progressive Farmer Did Not Know Value for Feed.

Writer in Farm Magazine Shows Advantage Over Clover and Timothy.

Herbert Quick, editor of Farm and Fireside, the national farm paper published at Springfield, Ohio, tells the following story in the current issue of his publication apropos of the value of alfalfa:

"Three years ago a stockman who farms about 1100 acres of the finest land in Ohio, was not much in favor of alfalfa. He is a very progressive farmer, but, like most of us, he was running along in the old corn-wheat-clover fashion. He had a two men feeding for him—one an old colored man who had been with him a long time and the other an agricultural college man. He also had a few acres of alfalfa. There was a contest on between the old colored man and the expert as to which could put more weight per head per month on their respective herds. The first month's weighing showed the expert in the lead. The next weighing put the colored man so far ahead that the expert wondered how it could be. Both herds had good running water. Both had plenty of good timothy and clover hay. Both had all the good corn they could manage. Was the old negro a better feeder than the college man?

"It seemed so, but the expert, being scientifically educated, began looking for the reason in a scientific way. He found that the only difference was to be found in the fact that the crafty old colored man had been systematically mixing alfalfa hay with the ration. The protein in the alfalfa had been going into the muscle and bones of the cattle he fed.

"A good stockman needed no further proof as to the value of alfalfa over timothy and clover. Acting on this proof, he began working into alfalfa. He plans to build more silos and as soon as he can will make his feed ration one of corn-silage, ear-corn and alfalfa-hay. This ration is shown by the tests at Lincoln, Nebraska, to be the feed that will make beef cheapest."

MAY LEAD TO ARREST

Minors Must Not Consume Paper Pipes on Streets or in Public Places.

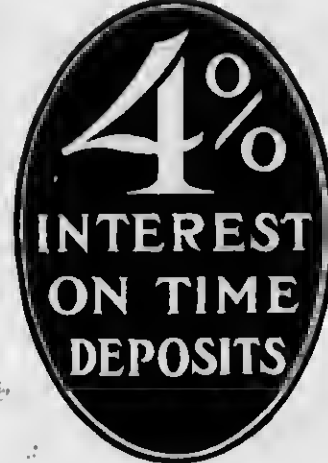

Charlevoix youths who persist in "hitting the paper pipe" are liable to arrest, according to an opinion just given by Attorney General Fellows. The attorney general has been looking up the law regarding the sale and use of cigarettes and finds that minors who smoke the rollin' and in public places, parks or highways may be arrested. However, sentence may be suspended by the court if the boys will give evidence as to who furnished them the paper tubes. If the boys smoke at home, where they are under the jurisdiction of their parents or guardians, they are not subject to arrest.

CHAPTER VII.

A Legal Document.

MARY TURNER spent less than an hour in that mysteriously important engagement with Dick (Gilder) of which she had spoken to Aggie. After separating from the young man she went down Broadway, walking the few blocks of distance to Sigismund Harris' office.

Harris regarded his client with an appreciative eye as he bowed in greeting and invited her to a seat.

"I sent your cousin, Miss Agnes Lynch, the release which she is to sign," he explained, "when she gets that money from General Hastings. I wish you'd look it over when you have time. It's all right, I'm sure, but I appreciate your opinion of things. Miss Turner particularly of legal documents."

"Thank you," Mary said. "And have you heard from them yet?"

"No," the lawyer replied. "I gave them until tomorrow. If I don't hear then I shall start suit at once." Then the lawyer's manner became unreasonably bland and self-satisfied as he opened a drawer of the desk and brought forth a rather formidable appearing document, bearing a most impressive seal.

"You will be glad to know," he went on methodically, "that I was entirely successful in carrying out that idea of yours as to the injunction. My dear Miss Turner, Portia was a squawking baby compared with you."

"Thank you again," Mary answered as she took the legal paper. For a moment her glance ran over the words of the page.

"It's splendid!" she declared. "Oh, you have much trouble in getting it?"

"Why, no," he declared. "But at the outset when I made the request the judge just nearly fell off the bench. Then I showed him that Detroit case to which you had drawn my attention and the question of it all was that he gave me what I wanted without a whimper. He couldn't help himself, you know."

That mysterious document with the imposing seal rested safely in Mary's bag when she returned to the apartment.

Mary had scarcely received from Aggie an account of Cassidy's threatened invasion when the maid announced that Mr. Lewis had called.

"Show him in," Mary directed.

"Who's the girl?" Aggie demanded.

"You ought to know. He's the lawyer we retained by General Hastings in the matter of a certain breach of promise suit."

"Hope he's brought the money," Mary ordered.

"Leave the room now," Mary ordered. "When I call to you come in, but be sure and leave everything to me. Merely follow my lead. And, Aggie, be very ingenious."

"Oh, I'm wise—I'm wise," Aggie nodded as she hurried out toward her bedroom. "I'll be a squish-squish thing you know!"

Next moment Mary gave a formal greeting to the lawyer who represented the man she planned to molest if feebly.

Irwin lost no time in coming to the point.

"I called in reference to this suit which Miss Agnes Lynch threatens to bring against my client, General Hastings."

"It's not a threat," Mr. Irwin. "The suit will be brought."

"You realize, of course, that this is merely plain blackmail?"

"If it's blackmail, Mr. Irwin, why don't you consult the police?"

Mary turned to the maid, who now entered in response to the bell she had sounded a minute before. "Fanny, will you ask Miss Lynch to come in please?" Then she faced the lawyer again, with an aloofness of manner that was contemptuous. "Really, Mr. Irwin, she drawled, 'why don't you take this matter to the police?'"

"You know perfectly well," the lawyer said bitterly, "that General Hastings cannot afford such publicity."

"Oh, as for that," Mary suggested evenly, and now there was a trace of flippancy in her fashion of speaking. "I'm sure the police would keep your complaint a secret. Really, you know, Mr. Irwin, I think you had better take your troubles to the police rather than to me. You will get much more sympathy from them."

"Very well, I will then," he declared. Mary pushed in his direction the telephone that stood on the table.

"3100 Spring," she remarked encouragingly. "Will bring an officer almost immediately." She leaned back in her chair and surveyed the baffled man amusedly.

"Nevertheless," he rejoined, "you know perfectly well that General Hastings never promised to marry this girl. You know!"

He broke off as Aggie entered the drawing room.

Now, the girl was demure in seeming almost beyond belief—a childish creature, very fair and dainty, guileless surely, with those untroubled eyes of blue, those softly curving lips of warmest red and the more delicate bloom of the rounded cheeks. There were the charms of innocence and simplicity in her manner as she stopped just within the doorway, where she regarded Mary with a timid, pleading gaze, her slender little form poised lightly as if for flight.

"Did you want me, dear?" she asked.

"Agnes," Mary answered affectionately, "this is Mr. Irwin, who has come to see you in behalf of General Hastings."

"Oh," the girl murmured, her voice quivering a little as the lawyer, after a short nod, dropped again into his seat. "Oh, I'm so frightened!" She burned, blushing, to a low stool behind the desk beside Mary's chair, and there she sat down, dropping slightly, and catching hold of one of Mary's hands as if in more pleading for protection.

"Nonsense!" Mary exclaimed soothingly. "There's really nothing at all to be frightened about, my dear child. You mustn't be afraid. Agnes, Mr. Irwin says that General Hastings do not promise to marry you. Of course, you understand, my dear, that under no circumstances must you say anything that isn't strictly true and that

"Oh, I'm so frightened!"

If he did not promise to marry you you have no case—none at all. Now, Agnes, tell me. Did General Hastings promise to marry you?"

"Oh, yes—oh, yes, indeed!" Aggie cried eagerly. "And I wish he would. He's such a delightful old gentleman!"

The legal representative of the deplorable old gentleman scowled disquietedly at this outburst.

"Was that promise made in writing?"

"No," Aggie answered gushingly. "But all his letters were in writing you know. Such wonderful letters. So tender and so—so—interesting!"

"Yes, yes, I dare say," Irwin agreed hastily, with some evidences of chagrin.

"But you're quite sure, Agnes," Mary questioned gently, "that General Hastings did promise to marry you?"

simple young friend, we would not have been arrested very neatly indeed—for blackmail!"

"Gee!" she cried. "That would have been fierce! And now?" she questioned apprehensively.

Mary's answer repudiated any possibility of fear.

"And now," she explained contentedly, "he really will go to our lawyer. There he will pay over that same marked money. Then he will get the letters he wants so much. And just because it's a strictly business transaction between two lawyers, with everything done according to legal ethics."

"And it's actually the same old game!" Aggie mused.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Thief.

MARY was in joyous spirits after her victorious matching of brains against a lawyer of high standing in his profession when she had entered the telephone booth, which had been installed in an extra closet of her bedroom for the sake of greater privacy on occasion. During her absence from the drawing room Carson again came into the apartment seeking her. On being told by Aggie as to Mary's whereabouts, he sat down to await her return, listening without much interest.

VAN DE MEER IS LOCATED

Missing Harbor Springs Minister is Found by Miss Pearl Komp, His fiancée.

Rev. A. van de Meer, who disappeared from Harbor Springs on Thanksgiving Day and for whom officers have since been searching at Petoskey and in Chicago, has been located in New York through the efforts of Miss Pearl Komp of Chicago, his fiancée.

All of his business matters were put in shape by van de Meer before he left, but he neglected to leave behind any indication as to where he was going and why.

Believing that he might have killed himself, officers spent two days in dragging the waters of Little Traverse Bay until it developed that the man had in all probability left this part of the country.

Information is being regarding his being in New York, but a suitable answer will in all probability be made by the minister upon his return.

PROPOSITION CARRIED

City of Cadillac Soon to be Under-Commission
 Form of Government.

When the votes were counted last Tuesday at Cadillac they gave those in favor of commission form of government a majority of 103. The result of the election was a big surprise, as so much opposition had been heard previous to the election.

 One ward went against the proposition and the other three each gave majorities in favor of it. The next thing they will do will be the nominations for mayor, commissioners, constable, recorder, justice and four members of the school board. These will be voted on the first Tuesday in February.

Probate Court Matters.

December 1st—Petition for appointment of guardian for Roy Rodewald, a minor. Rollin O. Bisbee appointed guardian for Roy Rodewald.

December 4th—Petition filed for appointment of administrator in the estate of Henry Rodewald filed.
 December 4th—Solar A. Rodewald appointed special administrator of estate of Henry Rodewald, deceased.

December 9th—Edward H. Newman files bond as guardian of John H. Newman and receives letters of guardianship.

December 10th—Hearing on final account of John A. Johnson in the estate of Marion E. Johnson, deceased. Account allowed and administrator discharged.

December 13th—Hearing on claims in the estate of Lavonia I. Thompson, deceased.

"KNECHT RUPERT" WAS GERMAN SANTA CLAUS

The Santa Claus idea has grown up of a variety of legends and customs. The festival of St. Nicholas, who was the especial friend of the children, was celebrated in Germany about the 10th of December. It was easy enough to make this coincide with the later and more general festival. The tale of the Santa Claus was called "Knecht Rupert," and usually he was some member of the family dressed up to represent a beneficent gift giver. It was the custom to have a yew branch placed in the parlor of the German home, and on this all the packages containing gifts were placed. On Christmas morning the whole family assembled to claim the gifts, each having to guess the donor. "Knecht Rupert" distributed the gifts to the younger children, but he lectured them also on obedience and good behavior, and if any one had been bad, instead of a gift he or she was given a switch that they might be punished. So the little Germans try hard to be very good before Christmas.

Bad Day For Birds.

The day after Christmas, St. Stephen's day, is a queer way by some of the many boys, and Ditchfield says they feel privileged to stone women at this time because of a story to the effect that in days gone by a most dangerous shrew was finally compelled to assume the form of a wren one year on the 26th and ultimately to be killed by mortal hands. Another tradition furnishes an excuse on the ground that it was a wren that awakened the guard of St. Stephen but as the latter was about to escape from prison.

CHRISTMAS LULLABIES.

Songs Popular at Yuletide Season. Traced Back For Centuries. Christmas lullabies to the Divine Child may be traced back to medieval times. In one of the Coventry plays occurs what is plainly a cradle song to the infant Jesus, which has been preserved in music as well as in text. Five hundred years ago the tape picture did not suffice the faithful. The scene had to be enacted. The play was called "The Cradling of a Child." Standing on a platform at the mansion, boys representing angels proclaimed the birth of the Saviour. Priests took the part of shepherds and gathered around the manger. Here stood Joseph, Mary and the servant of Joseph.

After the choir had sung hymns among them "Christus Natus Hodie" Mary sang the first verse of the German song, "Joseph, dear Joseph may help me to rock my babe, that I may reward me in heaven the day of the Virgin Mary." Joseph answered with the second verse of the song, "Gladly, my dear nurse, will I hold thee rock thy babe, that God may reward me in heaven," etc. The song is sung, "Rejoice, Christian multitude. The King of heaven, who was born of the Virgin Mary, has taken on mortality."

And so the scene in the churches went on every Christmas.

A Sure Sign.

Dr. Probe—I guess that Peterby doesn't intend to pay his bill this year. Mrs. Probe—What makes you think so? "I just got a Christmas present from him this morning."

CHRISTMAS IN HOLLAND.

In Holland Santa Claus pays his annual visit to all good children twenty days before he comes to this country. Dec. 5 is the feast day of St. Nicholas, alias Santa Claus. He has nothing whatever to do with Christmas, and his visit there is an Anglo-Saxon achievement. As their patron saint, children were taught to look to Nicholas for care and protection. In England the custom was abolished with the worship of saints at the reformation and was re-established in the American guise of Father Christmas in the middle of the last century. But in Holland Santa Claus continues to make his visits on the right day, Dec. 5. The Dutch children do not hang up their stockings, but place their shoes, filled with hay or straw for the donkey on which St. Nicholas rides, in front of the fireplace.

The Christ Child. An Irish legend tells that on Christmas eve the Christ Child wanders in the darkness and cold and the peasants still put night candles in their windows to guide the sacred infant, that they may not stumble on the way to their homes. In Hungary the householders fasten to their doors, for the Christ Child. They spread feasts and leave their doors open that he may enter at his will. Through out Christendom there is a belief that no evil can touch the child who is born on Christmas eve.

A Custom Well Forgotten. Children used to be reminded in an uncomfortable manner that Dec. 28 was Innocent's day for it was considered wholesome on that morning to give them a good whipping or other form of punishment, presumably to remind them of the sins which were not committed by the innocents whom Herod ordered slain on that day. Fortunately every vestige of this fashion is now blotted out.

Helping Things Along. Mrs. Chastrow—What's that you're blowing on your lungs, dear? Bobbie—The cat to arms, ma. Sister's young man has her under the mistletoe.

SIGNIFICANCE OF HOLLY.

Why holly at Christmas? The pagan Romans dedicated the holly to Saturn, whose festival was in December, around Christmas. The early Christians, to escape persecution, decked their homes with holly and other Saturnian emblems. The Romans sent their friends holly sprigs during the Saturnalia with wishes for their health and prosperity.

Enemies of the Christmas Tree.

Not every balsam nor every spruce is a Christmas tree. The expert connoisseur learns to tell at a glance if the branches grow in perfect rings, which give strength and symmetry to the tree. He may be sure, too, that the squirrels have not eaten the buds from the tips of the topmost branches, and that the cattle and deer have not sharpened their horns in passing.

No Heredity About It. Gerald—My father was an old salt. Geraldine—That's funny. You are a young fresh.

to the chatter of the adventures. The maid appeared and said:

"There's a girl wants to see Miss Turner."

"She says it's important. I guess the poor thing's in hard luck from the look of her," the kindly Fannie added. "Oh, then, she'll be welcome, of course," Aggie declared, and Garson looked inquisitive. "Tell her to come in and wait, Fannie. Miss Turner will be here right away." She turned to Garson as the maid left the room. "Mary sure is an easy body," she remarked cheerfully. "Bless her soft heart!"

A minute later a girl perhaps twenty years of age stepped just within the doorway and stood there with a downcast, rather one swift, furtive glance about her. Her whole appearance was that of dejection. Her soiled black gown, the clinging posture, the pallor of her face, proclaimed the subject misery of her state.

"Are you Miss Turner?" she asked in a voice broken by nervous dismay.

"Really, I am very sorry," Aggie replied, "but I am only her cousin. Miss Agnes Lynch. But Miss Turner is likely to be back any minute now."

"Can I wait?" came the timid question.

"Certainly," Aggie reassured helpfully. "Please sit down."

As the girl slowly sank down on the nearest chair, her eyes addressed her cousin, and she said in a low voice:

"You don't know what has happened to me?"

"No," Aggie answered, "I don't."

"Then you don't know what has happened to me?"

"No," Aggie answered, "I don't."

"You were going to do what the chaplain had told you," Mary went on. "You were going to start all over again, weren't you?"

The bent head of the girl bent lower in assent.

"It doesn't work very well, does it?"

"No, I'm whipped," Mary's answer came.

"Well, then, how would you like to work with us?"

"You—you mean that?"

"Our kind of work pays well when you know how. Look at us. Suppose I should take you for the present and put you in with a good crowd."

"You would have to do would be to answer advertisements for servant girls."

"I will see that you have the best references. Then, when you get with the right people, you will be in the front door of a good home, of a fine home. Of course you will make a good away when they do and get your life as well."

There flashed still another of the swift, shy glances, and the tip of the girl parted as if she would speak. But she did not, only her head sagged even lower on her breast and the shrunken form grew yet more shrunken.

"It doesn't suit you? Good! I was in hopes it wouldn't. So here's another plan. Suppose you could go west—some place where you would have a fair chance, with money enough so you could live like a human being till you got a start?"

There came a twinging of the relaxed form, and the head lifted a little so that the girl could look at her questioner.

"I will give you that chance," Mary said simply, "if you really want it."

The wretched girl sat suddenly erect and her words came eagerly.

"Oh, I do!" And now her hungry gaze fastened first on the face of the woman who offered her salvation.

"Then I have just one thing to say to you first. If you are going to live straight, start straight, and then go through with it. Do you know what that means?"

"You mean keep straight all the time?" The girl spoke with a force drawn from the other's strength.

"I mean more than that. I mean forget that you were ever in prison. I don't know what you have done. I don't think I care. But whatever it was, you have paid for it a pretty price, haven't you?"

"I have—I have!" The thin girl looked up.

"Well, then, Mary went on, "and begin at once again, and be sure you stand up for your rights. Don't let them force you to pay a second time when you have been crooked. If they think you are crooked, why do it? Then nobody will have any more to say to you. Will you promise that?"

"Yes, I promise," came the answer, very gravely, upturned with hope.

"Good!" Mary exclaimed, with a sign of approval. "Wait a minute. She dropped and left the room."

"Hush! Pretty soon for some people Aggie remarked to Garson, with a smile."

Mary returned soon. In her hand she carried a roll of bills. She went to the girl and held out the money.

"Take this. It will pay your fare west and keep you quite awhile if you are careful."

But, without warning, a revulsion seized on the girl. She shrank back and turned her head away as her body trembled.

"I can't take it!" she exclaimed. "I can't! I can't!"

"Didn't you come here for help?"

"Yes," was the faltering reply, "but I didn't know it was you!"

"Then you have met me before?"

Mary said quietly.

"No, no!" The girl's voice rose. She spoke her mind with truthfulness. "She's lying."

Garson asked: "His was was steady in a tone of complete certainty. The Mary, too, was in the opinion of the shown in her next words."

"So you have met me before?"

Where?"

The girl only replied, made ready to answer the question.

"I don't know," she said, "I don't know."

with her.

"I found out they were watching me, and I was afraid they would catch me. So I took them and ran into the cloak room and put them in a basket that wasn't close to mine and some of the pocket of a coat that was hanging there. God knows I didn't know whose it was. I just put them there. I was frightened."

"But they caught you later. Why didn't you tell them?"

"I was afraid," came the answer from the shuddering girl. "I told them it was the first time I had taken anything, and they let me off with a year."

"You cried and lied, and they let you off with a year. I wouldn't cry. I told the truth and—"

Mary's voice broke in a fearless sob. The color had come out of her face, and she stood rigid, looking down at the girl whose crime had ended her life with an expression of infiniteathing in her eyes.

Aggie took advantage of the pause. Her voice was low. "Some people are snobs. Just snobs!"

Somewhat the speech was welcome to the girl, gave her a sense of comfort, and she sat up, looking at Aggie with a new interest.

"It was more like the abuse it was than I had heard. A rush of tears came."

"I'll never forgive my old mother," she murmured.

"Yes, yes, you will," Mary said in a low voice. "People forgive their sins pretty easily. Snobs don't. No body is a snob to him or her."

"She then turned toward the girl and crowded it into the face of her own face, and she said:

"Take it and get out. The comfort in her voice was a sharp shaper. "Wait, before I change my mind."

The girl looked at second bidding. With the money she had taken, she had a little in her hand, a little in her pocket. At the last moment the woman she had wronged should change in mood and take back the money.

Freed from the madness of this pressure, Mary remained motionless for a long minute, then, she turned from her turned heart.

"A girl I didn't know," she said to herself, "perhaps had never spoken to who snatched my life from me. Oh, if it wasn't so, if it would be funny! It would be funny!"

THE PRESENT.

Remember that man's life has all within this present as 'twere but a hair's breadth of time. As for the rest, the past is gone, the future yet unborn. Short, therefore, is man's life and narrow is the corner of the earth wherein he dwells.—Marcus Aurelius.

AN AMATEUR SANTA CLAUS

By HAMILTON POPE GALT

Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association

WE had all agreed that O'Shaughnessy was the very one to be Santa Claus at our Christmas tree.

"No," he said, "No!"

We had never seen Mr. O'Shaughnessy so vehement before.

"That is one thing I will never do, not if the year of insects were to command it."

"Why?" asked some one from a safe distance.

"Because I played the part once, and I will never do it again. I may as well tell you about it, and then you'll know that it is of no use to bother me about it any more."

"One Christmas I was broke, I was hungry, and my feet were on the ground. I had asked a thousand people for something to do, anything to

"I want that," said the boy, pointing to me.

"He has taken a fancy to you," continued the father.

"I can't see that I have any advantage over the giraffe," I said.

"Just then the boss of the store came along. He was just busting himself for the millionaire.

"My boy wants your Santa Claus," said the gentleman to the boss.

"And the kid jumped up and grabbed me by the hand and began pulling at me and fighting the maid off with the other hand.

"Well," said the boss, "take him along, Mr. Van Veggie. It will be a loss whatever to us, I assure you."

"This recommendation seemed to encourage the millionaire.

"I will pay you for your time," he said to me.

As the father was pulling me in arm off I went and went along. He pulled me through the store against a tide of open-mouthed people. We got into a big red automobile, and the millionaire said to the chauffeur, "Hurry, as quick as possible for goodness sake."

"Away we went," my child, who was flying in the wind.

"Pretty soon the millionaire said to the chauffeur, 'Look here, you need to display us and show them around. Kindly be kind and show them around.'

"The kid was sitting next to me, holding my hand.

"The chauffeur started to slow down in front of a mansion when the millionaire gave a shout.

"Hold on!" he said. "Drive on quick. I forgot Mrs. Van Veggie's company. Will you mind the back way?"

"We were turning the corner to the right, the other way when the chauffeur shouted again suddenly, 'The road is closed!'

"We were looking suddenly at another that he knew.

"That's what passed through a gate, and the boy towed me and a through a conservatory or two to a secret room.

"This was a store. There were a lot of things there still. They seemed to take a great interest in the present.

"Well, when an article served to the millionaire's wife.

"What the man was explaining to her was the boy and me around over the house by the hand. He was not let go.

"He had to have me sit beside him while he ate his dinner, and I had a go home now and work on the toys for Christmas, but he held on tighter than ever and insisted that I would have to sleep with him.

"This made it pretty bad. If I was to pull off my boots and my beard and my stomach and one thing and another the boy would be paralyzed with feared, they said, and for me to turn a boot, he'd stop and all with the Van. The millionaire seemed to be very impressed.

"We compromised by my sitting in his bed and holding his hand until he went to sleep. Would you believe it? That was the first night I've ever slept in a bed since I was born. I tried to get up and go to my room, but a good word would come and he would hold me tighter and tighter.

"I sat up in bed holding that hand. I had a man in attendance who brought me everything I wanted. I had a good sleep, but from that time I had a good sleep.

"The next day I had to be with him when he got his bath and his breakfast, and I had to be with him when he went to his office.

"I was at his kindergarten too, along about 4 o'clock he lay down on a couch and went sound asleep.

"I stole from the room softly and in silence. I had had enough of the job and was resolved to escape.

"Just as I was getting out of the front door a good sized boy came along and started to talk something about 'Hello, Santa Claus' and tried to grab hold of me.

"I paralyzed him by pulling out my stomach and hitting him over the head with it.

"I galloped the street and flew home, dodging this way and that to battle pursuit and shedding beard, boots, cotton and fur all along the way.

"I hid for three days and then emerged and got a nice little job loading coal on a ship. I have always gone in for a some Christmas ever since that little experience."

We did not press Mr. O'Shaughnessy.

Concerning Christmas Presents.

A man may not be so badly off for presents if he only has presence of mind.

The question of the hour is: "What on earth shall we buy for a Christmas present?"

Never look a gift horse in the teeth. It is also wrong to look a Christmas present in the price mark.

"What shall I give the hired girl?" is a Christmas conundrum that puzzles some. Give her last week's pay and get another girl.

The proprietor of a big hotel may love his patrons' children, but he never gives the youngsters drums or horns at Christmas. N. B.—Or any other day.

Boys and Girls.

You may chisel a boy into shape, as you would a rock, or hammer him into it if she be of a better material, as you would a piece of bronze. But you cannot hammer a girl into anything. John Ruskin.

HE TOWED ME THROUGH THE AISLE

big, fat butter shoving my chair around for me and waiting on me. I got some bits and one thing and another under my pillow and my furs but I was a full war.

"It was too warm for comfort when I got around then, there was a cold. The Santa Claus at the Van Veggie house. All the children came from all over the neighborhood to make me.

"But young Van kept a tight grip on my hand and fought them off when ever they got too near.

"When bedtime came they tried to tell little Van that Santa wanted to do, and finally a mother in a department store said, 'All right, will you be a Santa Claus out of town?'

I WANT THAT!

"I told her I didn't see the point of a Santa Claus at a job.

"Well, well, it's a job, she said, and I had to do it.

"So, with gloves and boots, and a hat, and a fur coat outside was nothing at all made. I started in to be Santa Claus in the toy department.

While I was thinking about my work and the two kids at home needing money, and no better remedy for anything like that, I heard one of the fellows in the store say to the boss.

"Say, that St. Nicholas of yours is about as jolly as a hymn book. He reminds me of a funny song entitled 'Silver Threads Among the Gold.' Why don't you throw him out?'

"I will when I get time."

"I tried to live up a little after hearing this praise of my histrionic talent, but it wasn't much use.

"Pretty soon I saw a boy coming down the aisle like a wolf on the fold. He was also seeking whom he might devour. He was followed by an anxious looking maid and a gentleman in a silk hat, who was an indignant millionaire father.

"The kid sauntered along in an independent, bored way, squeezing his arms kind of restless, as if he was in line of breeding something and relieving the monotony.

"When he came up to where I was sitting he stopped. He had seen plenty of toys for I guess I was something new in the way of a St. Nicholas.

"He called his daddy and pointed to me.

"I want that," he said.

"Oh, no, dearie," said the maid. "Here, look at this nice giraffe! See! It does this."

"The kid shook the nurse off irritably.

"He doesn't seem to take much interest in the giraffe," I remarked to the father.

"No, nor anything else," he answered in a patient, weary tone. "He has had all these toys before, and he knows all about them inside and out. He had one of those giraffes last year and broke it open to find out what was in it, and he was mad when he found there was nothing."

Actors on Christmas

There's lots of work,
And there ain't no play,
So what's the use
Of a Christmas day?

THAT little verse, paraphrased from our familiar to soldiers, just about sums up the real Christmas sentiment existing among people connected with the theatrical business. No, that doesn't mean that the actor, the manager and the advance agent do not appreciate the giving and receiving of presents from their friends. But it does mean that people connected with the stage have come to look upon the Christmas time as a season of short pay and hard work.

It isn't generally known, but it is none the less true, that most actors have a clause in their contracts which calls for half pay the week before Christmas. This clause was inserted in the days when the week before Christmas really was a "tough" one in the theatrical business. But nowadays there are many productions which pack the theaters to the doors the week before Christmas as well as any other week in the year. Nevertheless some of the managers live up to that contract and deduct the half week's pay. That is one reason why actors aren't particularly merry at Christmas.

There are other managers who make a practice of laying off their companies the week before Christmas and some of them ten days or two weeks before. In that case there is no salary at all forthcoming. That probably is another reason why the average actor cannot understand why Christmas is an occasion to be unduly joyful.

It was only last year that some of the managers came to the conclusion that stage people like other human beings, might like to spend some part of the Christmas holiday with their friends and relatives. Up to that year it had been the custom of all managers to give a special matinee at Christmas day. That meant of course that about all the actor had to do on this festive occasion was to make the theater's most important scene as he acquired his regular amount of stage experience. But a few of the managers changed that just once by making the Christmas matinee a day off. The result was that the following day was a very busy one for the actor, but the Christmas matinee, however, was a success. The actor was not only able to spend the day with his family, but he was able to give his friends a special matinee at Christmas day. That meant of course that about all the actor had to do on this festive occasion was to make the theater's most important scene as he acquired his regular amount of stage experience.

That meant of course that about all the actor had to do on this festive occasion was to make the theater's most important scene as he acquired his regular amount of stage experience.

DINNER ON STAGE BETWEEN PERFORMANCES

Christmas matinee was confined almost exclusively to a few of the first class theaters in New York city. On the road it is different. The actors have to work just as hard as they ever did, and opposition from local managers will probably prevent the elimination of the Christmas matinee outside of New York.

With some companies Christmas is not the disagreeable occasion that it is with others. One or two owners make it a practice to instruct the manager with the company to have a Christmas dinner prepared at the expense of the show. Sometimes a caterer is called in, and the dinner is served on the stage between the matinee and the evening performance. In that event the dinner usually proves prolific of material for the house press agent, and the affair is duly recorded in the daily papers. Sometimes it is served on the stage after the evening performance. Other times arrangements are made at some hotel.

It was one of these after the performance affairs that came pretty near putting a traveling stock company out of business in a town out in Iowa last Christmas. This theater, by the way, boasts of the only dog critic in existence. This comes from the fact that if the dog doesn't like a show he will start to howl, and he has to be removed from the theater before the performance can be continued.

Only a month before a well known concert singer was appearing at the theater. She had about finished one of her best selections when the dog poked his nose over the railing of an upper box and began to howl his disapproval. That led to the temporary banishment of the dog critic from the theater. But when the stock company came along the manager heard about the dog, and, willing to take a chance that the dog's judgment of his show would be favorable, he suggested that the dog be allowed to sit by a big well, which was a part of the scenic effect in one of the acts, just for the sake of realism.

Now, this same manager had concluded to give his company a dinner on the stage after the performance. In the course of the play the dog was brought out and tied to the well. Everything went all right until the dog sniffed the turkey and the other good things at the side of the stage, and without waiting for the finish of the act he made for the food, dragging the "heavy rock walled well" behind him.

This action on the part of the dog critic disturbed things generally.

CHRISTMAS TIME FOR STAGE PEOPLE

for the villain had just been appearing with one of his confederates to tell himself of the hero of the play toasting him down the afore-said well. The villain, of course, had the good sense to realize that his part of the plot required the hero to have the hero tossed down the well, and instead of having him tossed to a railroad track. However, the audience refused to take the plot seriously after the well disappeared.

There is probably more real Christmas sentiment in plays that have to "bury" children as a part of the production than there is in any of the others. With these shows there is usually a Christmas tree between the matinee and the evening performance in which every one takes part and makes merry.

A hard job is that of the actor who happens to be playing what is known as "the small time" around the holidays. "Small time" contracts call for three shows a day, and on Christmas day an extra one is usually added. A vaudeville actor on "big time" probably has more time to appreciate Christmas. If Christmas really can be appreciated anywhere, it is in the theater. If an actor is usually in the theater but an hour in the afternoon and an hour in the evening, and the rest of the time is his own unless the house manager has arranged to "post" him to go over to some club and entertain the guests at their Christmas reception, of course the actor doesn't have to do this, but if the manager is of any second sight at all in the vaudeville world the actor usually finds it expedient to give the toast.

But the one probably who spends the Christmas holidays at home is the poor advance agent—recognized on the program as business manager, advance representative or manager in advance. Unless the advance agent is close enough to his home town to "jump" for Christmas he usually gets a genuine attack of the stammer pure and simple. True, the advance man who has been on the road for any length of time can usually be depended upon to meet people he knows, but they are people who live in the town, and he usually finds himself dining alone when the time comes for him to eat his "Christmas dinner."

A Real Santa Claus.
SANTA CLAUS, I hang for you.
By the mantle, stocking two.
One for me and one to go
To another boy I know.

There's a chimney in the town
You have never traveled down.
Should you chance to enter there
You would find a room all bare.
Not a stocking, could you spy,
Matters not how you might try.
And the show you'd find are such
As no boy would care for much.
In a broken bed you'd see
Some one just about like me,
Dreaming of the pretty toys
Which you bring to other boys.
And to him a Christmas seems Merry only in his dreams.
All he dreams, then, Santa Claus, Stuff the stocking with, because When it's filled up to the brim
I'll be Santa Claus to him!

THE LOGOS MADE FLESH.

John 1:1-18—Dec. 21.

"And the Logos became flesh, and dwelt among us."

OUR Christmas Study is one of the most beautiful in the Bible. This lesson goes back to the beginning of all beginnings, when God was alone. The very beginning of Divine operation was the Logos, "the beginning of the creation of God," "the First born of every crea-was also the last, the Omega, of the creation, as He Himself informs us,

"I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end."—Rev. 22:13

The Logos, then, is the first and the only by the sacrifice of a perfect man.

The Law declares, "An eye for an eye

In November, 1910, John Evelyn made a note in his diary to the effect that there was a thick mist and for that people lost their way in the streets, it being so intense that no light of candle or torches yielded any night. At the Thames they beat drums to direct the watermen to make

Waiting For Santa Claus

A Feel In the Christmas Air

By JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY

THEY'S a kind o' feel in the air to me
When the Chris'mas times sets in That's about as much of a mystery
As ever I've run ag'in.
For instance, now, whilst I gain in weight
And ginerall health, I swear
They's a goneness somers I can't quite state—
A kind o' feel in the air.

They's a feel in the Chris'mas air goes right
To the spot where a man lives at!
It gives a feller a appetite—
They ain't no doubt about that!
And yit they's somepin—I don't know what—
That follers me here and there
And ha'nts and worries and spares me not—
A kind o' feel in the air.

They's a feel, as I say, in the air that's jest
As blamed-on sad as sweet.
In the same ra-sho as I feel the best
And am the spryest on my feet
They's allus a kind o' sort of a ache
That I can't locate nowhere.
But it comes with Chris'mas, and no mistake—
A kind o' feel in the air.

Is it the racket the children raise?
Why, no!—God bless 'em, no!
Is it the eyes and the cheeks ablaze,
Like my own wuz long ago?
Is it the bleat o' the whistle and beat
O' the little toy drum and blare
O' the horn? No, no! It is jest the sweet—
The sad-sweet feel in the air.

SNAPPING THE CRANBERRY.

Dinner Game Suggested, but Not Recommended.

This is a game to be played at the Christmas table. When the cranberry sauce is brought on each guest must place a cranberry on the end of a knife, holding the knife in the left hand with the right hand close behind the cranberry. At the word "snap," given by the hostess, the cranberry should be snapped with the first finger of the right hand at the target. The game shall be continued until each player has shot away all of his cranberries. The score is counted thus:

Hitting the hostess with a cranberry counts one.
Hitting grandma counts two, grandpa, three, Uncle Will, four, Tom, five, and so on, depending on whom the guests and those around the table are.

A cranberry that goes on the floor is out of play, but one that falls in any person's lap or sticks in the hair or on a coat or dress can be picked up and played again. Anybody that hits anybody else squarely on the nose counts fifty to the lucky player's score. This is a highly diverting game and one that all will enjoy, especially the hostess.—New York World.

Saving Up For Christmas

A well dressed man in a Market street car tendered the conductor a one dollar bill in payment for two fares and, receiving his change, carefully selected the ten cent pieces and placed them in a separate pocket. "From the 1st of September until Christmas I never spend a dime," he explained to his companion. "Every time I get one I keep it separate from my other change, and when I get home

I deposit my mites in one of those savings banks that don't open until they contain $10. I am one of a very large family addicted to the Christmas present habit, and sometimes I am obliged to give as many as thirty or forty gifts. By not spending my dimes I create a Christmas fund without really feeling it. I have done this for several years and find it an excellent plan."—Philadelphia Record.

Why She Shops Early.
"I'm going to start my Christmas shopping right now and get it over with," said Mrs. Jones at the breakfast table.

"Ah, to aid the poor, tired shopper and help the movement for early deliveries!" her son remarked in tones of commendation.

"Never thought of that," was the disconcerting reply. "I'm going to buy all my presents at Smart & Co.'s, and shops like theirs have handsome delivery wagons. I want all the neighbors to see the wagons stop at my door. Last year I bought a lot of these things at expensive shops, and not a parcel was delivered until after dark. For all the neighbors know they might have come from those pay by the week stores in unmarked wagons."

"What makes little Tommy so sad on this happy Christmas day?" asked Foodlek.

"His presents are all unbreakable," replied Foodlek.—Town Topics.

Little Jack Horner and His Christmas Pie

With Variations In the Style of the Poets

By CALLY RYLAND

LITTLE Jack Horner sat in a corner
Eating his Christmas pie,
He put in his thumb and pulled out a plum
And said, "What a good boy am I!"

If Edgar Allan Poe Had Written It.
See Jack Horner in his corner
With his pie,
Where's his nut? Will no one warn her?
He will die!
With a thought that is dozing
While he's plotting, plotting, plotting,
He is fishing for the floating Plum, oh, my!
All his best of being good,
Careful of his food,
Twinkles merrily within his saucy eye.
Eye, eye.

Robert Browning Might Have Done It.
Pastry's all or nothing, it is not mere Dough
Fondled and pulled and puzzled over, ah
For whiteness or for lightness, and this Pie
Was of the very stuff of life, sir.
None of your blundering bits of work, but Infinitely stable. Well, Horner sat there Ruminating 'Twas Christmas, ruminating time.
You say, and you are right, sir,
Lazily alive and open mouthed he sat,
Feeling the pastry tickle at his lips,
Yet scarcely knowing how to fathom it.
When of a sudden, the fellow's keen—Occurred his thumb to him, whereupon Straightway he plucked it in the sweet
"Good boy," quoth he, and pulled out a Jumpy plum.

This Would Be Walt Whitman's Style.
I sing the Christmas pie,
The flour, the hard the butter that compose it.

The richness of its stuffing,
A divine odour exhales from it.
It attracts with force, undeniable attraction.
I am drawn by its breath no less than Jack Horner, who holds it upon his knees.
I am one with the plum concealed in its magnificently yastiness.
I loosen my lips freely and am at the door of its secrets, its smacking to taste its pleasures.
But he does not know how to get at you
pie.
He sits, steadily considering the pose of his head, he puffed out lips, betraying his gluttony.
Presently a fine smile comes on to his face. He plunges into the pie with firm thumb. Its crust yields.
He possesses himself of its richness.
Oh, young men, I would not have you go in a corner considering pie stuffings.
Be bold. You—wherever you are—are allowed the eternal purports of a pie.
(I loved a certain Christmas pie ardently, and it gave me indigestion.)
Yet out of that I have written this song.

In the Great William Shakespeare's Style.

"Sweet pastry, do not scorn me, do not sile
And frown at me with crusty surliness.
I know that in your fleshy depths is hidden
A mammoth plum, which, 'Ode my little life!
I'll have it if I must swing for 't.' Thus Jacques.
Who, thereupon, with swashing stab of
the thumb,
Smote through the crispy lid, which erst held tight,
And with triumphant shout, "'Ode bodi-
kins,
A good lad 't' withdrew the sought for plum.

Algernon Charles Swinburne's Style.
Here where the world is quiet,
Here upon Christmas day,
With plums and a pie for diet,
In a corner sat Horner.
No feast was ever sweeter,
No finger was ever fleetier
To yank a plum with glee to
A mouth that sapes away.

Why should we call ourselves men unless it be to succeed in everything everywhere?—Mirabehn.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

WHEN A MAN'S MARRIED

PUDGE PERKINS' PETS

Her Own Town

She Found It by Chance

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Settled in her chair in the Pullman car, Angela Long studied the time table with kidlike brows. Finally she flung it aside and drew out a small railway guide. Now her actions became quite mysterious.

She closed her blue eyes and ruffled the leaves of the booklet with pink finger tips. Suddenly she slipped in a finger and opened the book. At the same time her eyes popped open, and she looked eagerly at the schedule or the printed page.

"The X. L. S. and R." she crowed. "I just knew if I left my destination to fate it would take me to some new and interesting region. Now my finger shall run up and down the columns and whatever station it pauses at, ever though it be a watering tank, there will I alight and seek my adventure."

Again she closed her eyes, while her finger wandered uncertainly over the page. At last it paused, and Angela opened her eyes to scan her fate.

"Angela!" she gasped. "The very idea of my finger choosing a town of my own name! Well, Angela Long, Angela station it is. I'm glad my ticket is a through one. I can branch off up into Wyoming and come to my own town."

She studied the time table carefully, consulted the attached map, made a few memorandums in her little book and then, sank back in her chair with closed eyes to dream of the past and the future.

The motherless daughter of a rich manufacturer, Angela Long had spent many years in expensive private schools, for her father was a very busy

"I'M VERY GLAD TO SEE YOU, MY DEAR." Mrs. Dexter said to Angela as she entered the room.

Then came the terrible moment when Angela learned that her father's fortune had been a mere gilded shell which hid an immense burden of debt, and when matters were cleared up Angela pocketed the $2,000 that represented her patrimony and set forth to make a place for herself in the world.

Because of her youth and inexperience and ignorance she had happily left her destination to mere chance, and that is why she was speeding westward toward a little cattle town in the northwest with a vague idea of opening a school or a millinery parlor, or a candy shop, whatever seemed to be the crying need of that particular town.

When Angela and her three trunks were left on the station platform, while the little train snuffed away through a rift in the hills, she felt a sudden pang at the loneliness. There were the hills, the railroad tracks, the neat little station and a dusty white trail winding away into the blue haze of distance.

In front of the platform was a buckboard to which were harnessed a pair of calico ponies. A tall man dressed in a funnel shirt with corduroy trousers tucked into leather boots turned and looked at her from under a wide brimmed hat.

"I beg your pardon," he said courteously. "Perhaps you are looking for some one to take your trunks?"

"I don't know. I guess so," faltered Angela, turning pink with sudden embarrassment at the absurdity of her wild plan. "I should like to go to the best hotel, if you please."

The man hesitated. "The best hotel isn't very good," he admitted. "You see, there hasn't been so many changes in the management that—"

"Perhaps you can recommend a good boarding place," interrupted Angela.

"There is Mrs. Benson, but the laundry people all board there, and I believe her house is quite full. You better come over to the ranch with me. My mother—"

you are settled—tent is, if you are not going to remain."

"I will see Mrs. Benson first," agreed Angela. And she watched the man while he easily lifted her heavy trunks and deposited them on the buckboard.

In five minutes they were flying down the trail, leaving a white cloud of dust behind them. Both of them were very quiet during the drive. Finally they entered the town, a straggling street of little houses that promised some day to grow up into a reality. The ponies stopped before a two-story house, on the porch of which sat several men smoking. They looked with interest at Angela and her companion. A strong odor of frying onions was wafted from the open front door.

Angela looked appealingly at her companion, and he smiled down at her and nodded. "Awful, isn't it?" he asked. "I reckon you better come out and see my mother, eh?"

"Thank you, I will," said Angela gratefully, and she was surprised at the feeling of relief that followed her decision.

Just at sunset the ponies turned to at a white gate and went rattling to a word a low, comfortable ranch house perched on a knoll and surrounded by beech trees. To Angela's delight a beautiful white haired old lady, exquisitely neat in a lavender cotton gown and white apron, came out to meet them.

"Well, Gray, I see you've brought me company," she smiled, scanning the newcomer with nearsighted eyes.

"I am afraid you will consider me an intruder," cried Angela nervously as she gave her hand to her driver and jumped to the ground. "Your son was very kind and—"

"I'm very glad to see you, my dear," interrupted Mrs. Dexter, kissing the girl gently. "After Gray has sent the horses away he will explain all about it. Come up to your room; you must be very tired."

"You speak as though you had been expecting me," murmured Angela as they entered the cool house and mounted the stairs.

"We who live in the loneliness are always on the lookout for visitors," laughed Mrs. Dexter, patting her hand. "Here you are; now make yourself comfortable and I will bring you a cup of tea."

"Wait, please," cried Angela, tossing aside her hat and veil, and turning her flushed face toward her hostess, and ed. "Please let me tell you how I happened to come to this town before you go any further."

"Very well, dear," and Mrs. Dexter folded her hands and sat down while Angela told the story of her life and of its rude awakening to poverty and the necessity for starting anew. She faltered when she related how she had foolishly left the point of her destination to chance, and here a flood of homesick tears drowned her speech.

Mrs. Dexter gathered her into motherly arms and kissed and crooned over her, with now and then a murmured chuckle of delight.

"I thought of opening a millinery shop," said Angela, smiling through her tears. "I really am clever at hats. But I suppose there are not many women to wear them here."

"Not very many, my dear, but we will see what we can do. Wait until Gray comes and—"

A masculine voice sang up the stairway and announced that supper was ready.

"Come, Angela," said Mrs. Dexter, giving the girl her hand. And, strange to say, Angela Long went down to the dining room.

Gray Dexter gave her a pleasant greeting, and Angela unraveled at the ill concealed delight in her presence that mother and son revealed in look and word.

"I am afraid you will think I am a sort of impostor," she said after she had related her story for Gray's benefit.

"Tell her, mother," laughed Gray, with tender eyes on the girl's lovely face.

"My dear, it was a wonder working Providence that caused you to choose to come to Angela. For it is your own town. Listen. Five years ago Gray was working as bookkeeper in your father's factory. His health was very poor, and the doctor ordered him to adopt an open air life. It was that or death."

Gray could not afford to come farther, he had me to care for, but your father interested himself in the case and advanced the money to enable Gray to come out here and buy the ranch. We have been very successful, and Gray has repaid all the money to your father."

"We have been most grateful to your father and, although unknown to you, much interested in his daughter, whose picture we saw once in a society paper. So, when the name of the town was changed from Green Snake, Gray was asked to rename it, and he called it Angela, after you, the daughter of the man who had given him life and happiness and success."

"Now, don't you think this is your own town?" Angela smiled at them through tears. "It is wonderful, wonderful," she murmured.

"So you had better remain with me until you decide what to do," went on Mrs. Dexter, helping Angela to the dusty biscuit.

"Thank you, I will!" cried Angela happily.

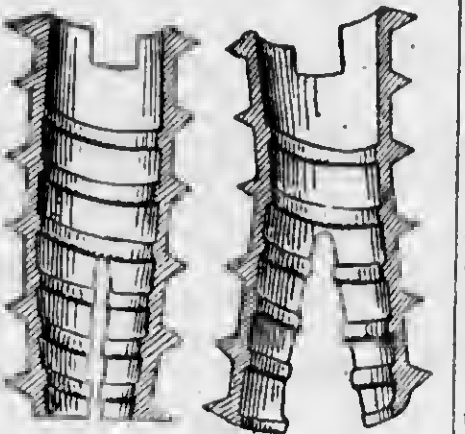

Gray Dexter looked at her rather shyly. He was thinking in his great heart that he might be able to persuade Angela that her vocation lay there at the ranch, being a real daughter to his mother and his wife. And that's the way it turned out after all.

NEW RAIL FASTENING.

Expanding Socket For Screw Spikes In Railroad Ties.

In order to provide a better hold for screw spikes in railroad ties a Parialau engineer has recently invented an expanding socket. The socket consists of a metal tube threaded both within and without. The socket is slit at the lower end to about half its length so as to form four arms which may be spread out by screwing the spike in after the socket has been screwed to the wood. Thus the socket is firmly anchored in the tie and affords a far better grip for the screw spikes than can be obtained by screwing them directly into the wood. At the top of the socket are two diametrically opposed notches, which serve like the slot in a screw head to permit of screwing the socket into place. The socket must be placed as close as possible to the edge of the rail base and so the exterior thread is determined by the thickness of the base flange.

As shown in the section, the depth of the socket is not uniform throughout. At the lower part the projection of the thread gradually increases without, however, changing the pitch. When fitting the sockets into new wood a hole is first bored to the necessary depth and tapped, after which the top of the expanding socket is fitted with a mandrel and the socket is then screwed home. As the lower part of the socket is slit, the arms will converge, as indicated in one of the sectional views. However, when the screw spike is screwed into the socket the arms will be forced out, as shown, anchoring them firmly into the wood so that it will be impossible for the socket to be pulled out. In addition, when the screw spikes have been turned out of their holes or the wood has decayed it is merely necessary to enlarge the hole and tap it to fit the expanding socket. Old screw spikes can be re-used in this way right on the track without having to move the rail or the tie.

Sand to Stop Skidding.

There is a report from London of a device to prevent skidding, intended primarily for motorbuses, but adaptable to motor vehicles of all kinds. This device makes use of the familiar expedient of scattering sand in the track of the rear wheels, but it does so in a new way. Action is automatic, and the sand or grit is forced—not dropped—under both rear wheels as soon as the vehicle begins to move in a lateral direction or skids. The driver's duties are not increased, but if desired he may also make use of the sand when there is any spinning or slipping of the wheels on a greasy surface or a hill. The sanding, which is spasmodically done by municipal authorities under certain conditions and in certain localities, thus becomes automatic whenever the road is in dangerous condition or within the judgment of the driver. The English device is said to be of very simple construction and cheap to make.

Magneto and Spark Plugs.

Spark plug adjustment will often clear up magneto troubles. If the points on the plugs are adjusted right the gap will be such that the current can readily jump the gaps and ignite the charge. Often the car will run all right on the battery, and yet when switched on to the magneto there is trouble, and the blame is laid on the magneto when a mere changing of the spark plug caps is all that is needed. Some magneto manufacturers provide a fine gauge for spark plug gaps, while others advise a gap varying from one fortieth to a sixteenth of an inch. It is important, however, to make sure that the gap on all four plugs is uniform; otherwise the motor will work with a jerk. Automobile Dealer and Repairer.

The Methuselah of Mines.

The Sterling Iron mine, the oldest mine of importance in New York, has been operated continuously for over 100 years. It is situated in Lakeville, in Orange county, southeastern New York, and is rich in historical associations. The deposit is of magnetite in a gneiss country. The ore is hoisted in a flat inclined shaft and hand sorted on picking conveyors. The company owns 17,600 acres, including a lake over the mine workings. Substantial stone buildings are erected and electric power chiefly used.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

Eliantite, the New Alloy.

Eliantite is a new alloy, prepared in the electric furnace, which is particularly resistant to acids. It is not attacked by chloric or bromic in a free condition, by hydrochloric, sulphuric or nitric acids or by aqua regia made up of three parts of hydrochloric acid to one of nitric acid. The specific gravity of eliantite is 6.8 and its melting point is 1,250 degrees C. (2,282 F.). American Machinist.

May Have Agriculture School Here.

Within the past few years the Michigan Agricultural College has been making an effort to extend the influence of its teachings and raise the standard of Michigan agriculture.

For this purpose a new department, that of Agricultural Extension, has been added to the college. It is the aim of this department to reach the man already in the pursuit of agriculture and help him to carry on his work on a scientific basis, or, in other words, to bring before the man who is unable to attend the college the principles of scientific agriculture.

With this end in view this department of the college each winter sends out men, experts along particular agricultural lines, who conduct one-week schools of agriculture upon whatever subjects the people of the community so desire.

This year an effort is being made to secure a one-week school at Charlevoix. The faculty of the local high school have been in communication with the college and there is little doubt that if the people of Charlevoix and the surrounding country who are interested in agriculture desire such a school one can be secured for some week this winter.

If you are interested in this matter kindly notify Supt. L. M. Devore or J. D. Fletcher, science teacher, whether you would attend the school and what agricultural subjects you would like to have discussed.

It might be added that this is no money-making scheme for anyone, but is an effort on the part of the state to improve and strengthen the agriculture of Michigan through its agency, the State Agricultural College. It is your chance to derive new ideas and receive answers to any questions about your farm or work that you may care to ask. You cannot help but gain by attending such a school and hearing the principles of scientific farming discussed by experts along these lines who are in the employ of your state institution. If you are interested notify the above mentioned persons as soon as possible.

INDIANS CLAIM MANY MILLIONS

From United States Government Under Ancient Treaty.

Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of Michigan Enter Claim for $20,000,000.

Approximately five hundred Ottawa and Chippewa Indians in Michigan early this month expect to enter a claim for $20,000,000 against the United States government for alleged deprivation of valuable lands and fishing rights in the great lakes. Several attorneys who have investigated the claim, which is said to be the most gigantic ever entered against the public domain by Indians, say it is valid.

Two former claims of similar nature made by these Indians were recognized as valid by the government and something over $200,000 paid to the tribes.

The validity of this latest and largest demand against the government hinges upon the interpretation of the treaty of 1833 between the government and twelve Indian tribes, including the Northern Michigan Ottawas and Chippewas.

Until recently it was supposed that under the terms of this treaty the red men had signed away all rights to land where South Chicago is now located, to all the Great Lakes islands and to unrestricted fishing rights in the lake waters, as well as other property of enormous value in Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan. It now develops that through faulty wording of the treaty and through oversight the South Chicago land the great lakes islands and the fishing rights were not included in the treaty.

Some of the lake islands involved in the fishing rights claim are: North and South Manitou, North and South Fox, Beaver and its cluster of smaller islands, Mackinac Island, Bois Blanc and numerous fishing bays.

CHRISTMAS DON'TS

State Fire Marshal Cautions People in Regard to Christmas Fires.

The State Fire Marshal's Bureau desires to call the attention of the people of Michigan to the "Christmas Don'ts."

Let us not mar this season of mirth, good will and good cheer by bringing into it mourning and sadness caused by carelessness.

If the people of our state would observe the following simple rules there would be no recurrence of the holiday fires which are reported to the department every year.

Don't forget that a Christmas tree decorated with cotton batting, tinsel and varnished toys, together with lighted candles, forms a dangerous combination.

Don't let currents blow in from open windows or doors on the tree while the candles are lighted.

Don't select inflammable decorations for the tree.

Don't put the presents on the tree. Put them under and around it.

Don't let gaudily dressed Santa Claus get too close to a blaze.

Don't fail to have a pail of water handy.

Don't put cotton and paper decorations too close to lamps, stoves or stovepipes, either in homes or stores.

Don't have defective electrical conditions.

Don't lose your head if there is a fire.

Now at Brown's Harness Store.

Chas. J. Zeidler, who for a number of years has taken care of his implement and repair business at the store of Levi Shea and later at Frank Chamberlain's, has moved to the Benjamin Brown harness store, where he will conduct all business in his line in the future. Mr. Zeidler moved his stock last week.

WEIGHT LIMIT TO BE RAISED

New Parcel Post Ruling to Become Effective January 1.

Rates on Packages Have Been Reduced in All Other Zones.

On and after January 1 the limit of weight of parcels for delivery under the parcel post service in the first and second zones will be increased from twenty to fifty pounds and in the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth zones from eleven to twenty pounds. There is also a change in rates for delivery in some of the zones, which will take effect on the same date. In the local zone the rate will be five cents for the first pound and one cent for each additional two pounds; in the first and second, five cents for the first pound and one cent for each additional pound; in the third, six cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound; in the fourth, seven cents for the first pound and four cents for each additional pound; in the fifth, eight cents for the first pound and six cents for each additional pound; in the sixth, nine cents for the first pound and eight cents for each additional pound. In the seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh zones there will be no change from the present rate.

There have been reports in some of the state papers to the effect that after January 1 books could be sent by parcel post. This statement, however, is incorrect, the latest bulletin sent out from Washington reading to the effect that on and after March 16, 1914, the classification of articles mailable under parcel post shall be extended to include books.

Source of His Information.

"This story of yours is all right," said the editor, "but your description of the hero's automobile is simply impossible. If there was an automobile made as perfect as the one you describe I'd buy one tomorrow. Where in the world did you get your ideas?" "That was easy," replied the author. "I got my friend Bragley to describe his new car."—Judge.

Beast by Awful Dangers.
Our friend Tom recently married. His bride, being from the Pacific coast, where thunderstorms are rare and gentle, became terrified when a genuine eastern rip-roarer broke loose, and she sought safety in a closet. Presently came a scream from the closet.
"What's the matter?" inquired her husband.
"Oh, Tom," she answered, half crying, half laughing, "I'm afraid to come out because of the lightning, and I'm afraid to stay in here because there's a mouse!"—Exchange.

TRUE HEROISM.

To stand with a smile upon your face against a stake from which you cannot get away—that, no doubt, is heroic. But true glory is not resignation to the inevitable. To stand unchained with perfect liberty to go away, held only by the higher claims of duty and let the fire creep up to the heart—this is heroism.—F. W. Robertson.

Double Barreled Retort.

Many wits shone in London society a century ago, none more brightly than George Colman, the younger. Here is one of the quips that were ever on his tongue:

A young man who had declared that he could not sing was pressed to entertain the company with a song.
"But I can't sing!" declared the young man impudently. "You just want to make a butt of me."
"Not at all, my good sir," said Colman. "We merely want to get a stare out of you."

OVER HUNDRED PLEDGES SECURED

Chautauqua Proposition Will Be a Winner for Charlevoix.

Every Citizen Should Aid Committee in Disposing of Tickets and Success of Venture.

A few hours of hustling last week by the members of the committee in whose hands has been placed the work of obtaining pledges for the Chautauqua next summer resulted in getting one hundred signatures. By this action of our citizens Charlevoix will have one week of entertainment some time the latter part of July or the first week in August.

Charlevoix needs this Chautauqua. The merchants need it because it will bring them business from buying districts; the residents and summer visitors need it for their own comfort, and the city needs it as advertising. It is one of the things that this city has needed for a number of years. It will give our summer friends a chance to see a good entertainment, as good as they will see anywhere, in their own resort town. It is the duty of every good citizen to assist the committee in charge, not only by buying season tickets when they are placed on sale but to do so, everlastingly boom, Charlevoix as a live town, the best resort in northern Michigan, and a town that will furnish entertainment to those who spend the summer here.

If this is the opening gun fired by the Committee of Twenty-one, let the good work go on. The city needs more of it.

Spirit of the North.

Sometimes upon the seashore a mystic maiden stands—
A spirit of the fabled past that haunts these Northern lands;
She hies away through the day, but when the moon is clear
In bold relief against the lake her figure will appear.
Her hair is like the silken ferns; like autumn gold her cheeks;
Her eyes are like the stars that shine; sweet music when she speaks;
She skips along the pebbled beach and beckons to the breeze;
The rustled leaves from her lips she scatters thru the trees;
She hastens to the woodland's edge as if to find a trace
Of those she loved long years ago in this sequestered place.
And all about these Northern lands this spirit roams and dwells
And casts a magic charm and spell o'er all the fields and dells.

John C. Wright,

Arrived Home.

Rev. J. G. C. Irvine, Baptist minister, lately settled in town, returned Tuesday with his horse and buggy, which he had left behind him in Deckerville. The long drive of over 250 miles took seven days to accomplish. Often it was through brush and over swamps, where for hours no person was met or house seen. Mr. Irvine came via Bay City, Standish, Frederic and East Jordan. He says though it is his first experience of such a "trek" it was most interesting and he was favored with splendid weather. Services will be held as usual in the Baptist church on Sunday.

NO BAWLING NOR HIGH BALLS.

When avert runs off of your bald top And your shirt sticks to your skin It's no use to make yourself hotter By bawling around like sin. And don't you go and drink whisky And pour down beer with the thought That booze will stop perspiration And cool you off when you're hot.

When wind whistled through your white hair—

And icicles hung from each ear—

It was you prayed loud for hot weather.

So enjoy yourself, dear; it's here.

But remember when it was below zero

That you looked a lot to get hot.

So don't get so used to cool blood heat.

Highballs can't hit the spot.

CLOSED SEASON FOR WILD TURKEYS.

Pennsylvania recently enacted a law declaring a closed season of two years for wild turkeys.

This action was watched closely by turkey raisers of the state, who are not only interested in preserving this natural species, but in the preservation and propagation of the tame turkey tribe and realize that the infusion of wild blood is now necessary to its further existence. We hope other states will follow Pennsylvania's lead with the exception to make it a perpetual closed season for wild turkeys.

A two year law is a fizzle and a lie. It will show it.

The wild turkey is nearly extinct. Two years' increase will be mighty small and gunners the first day will shoot them all.

Besides seasons are changeable. Every turkey grower knows how the weather affects small turks and makes the output see saw with the weather vane, and little wild turkeys are just as tender when first hatched.

A two year closed season with unfavorable springs may mean little in increase, not counting depredations by weasels, skunks, owls and hawks.

We are continually receiving inquiries as to where to get wild turkey blood for infusion.

The state has a responsibility to preserve its fauna as well as to help its citizens in their endeavor to produce tame turkeys for food, and we can't understand why state departments are so anxious to produce trout fry and hatch young bullfrogs for sportsmen and yet will not spend a cent to set aside a place for the propagation of wild turkeys so that turkey raisers may get wild blood to save their flocks and increase their profits. A turkey is at least as important as a bow legged bully rum. In ten years the turkey tribe has dropped from 6,504,000 to 3,098,708, and ten years more the turkey tribe will be extinct, unless breeders get back to natural methods and the state helps them.

No wild turkeys should be slain. The state should rather legislate for the producer than for the sportsman out for a frolic and to destroy.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

The fancier who sent the same string of birds to many shows the past winter may expect lots of infertile eggs, for such an experience especially affects the male birds. Watch the big showmen. They know this and try to send a new string to every show so that they may have no weak birds in their breeding pens.

English fanciers certainly get the blues. They have originated Blue Rocks, Blue Doves, Blue Leghorns, Blue Orpingtons, Blue Langshans and Blue Orpington ducks. None of these blues have been admitted to the American standard. The only blue as yet admitted is the Blue Andalusian.

If you want turkey know-how go to Texas. It's the turkey Eldorado. In one month a dealer at Corsicana shipped 10,330, weighing 122,793 pounds. When the Utility Standard is issued order it from your poultry journal. It's the first practical criterion printed and will be a big help to the utility side of the poultry business.

The floor and roof of the chick coop may be made separate from the rest

The top may thus be lifted off and the floor easily cleaned and dried in the sun. Ashland (O.) fanciers are making a great ado over a safety pin that was found inside of a hen's egg. That's nothing on the Pennsylvania hen. Pennsylvania fanciers are finding lots of good money in hens' eggs every day and not doing much hollering about it either.

A great essential to success with brooder chicks is to keep them busy. For this an exercise floor is necessary, where they should scratch their grain food out of litter. A chick starts to scratch as soon as it is able to eat, and it's a wise poultryman who encourages the trait, for exercise promotes health and growth.

The Barred Plymouth Rock, which for a time was so popular and numerous in England, according to the London Illustrated Poultry Record, "has been going somewhat downhill of late." This is ascribed to the fact that fanciers have made it a "two pen variety," using two distinct matings to get birds to meet the unnatural show requirement.

It is now a misdemeanor in Pennsylvania to publish false statements in advertisements. Tree agents who advertise certain varieties and then sell trees untrue to name and fanciers who sell eggs that hatch a variety different from that described are among those to whom this law applies, and they should be prosecuted to the full extent.

Those who open an egg a day before the chicks are due will find the chick all complete and ready to emerge with the exception of the absorption of the yolk. That is the last act, and that yolk taken into the chick's digestive apparatus should have thirty hours to digest before the chick is fed.

Good Plant Protector.

To be made from bottomless barrel, especially for onion squash or the main crop in the far north.

Two covers are made from one barrel, which is slanted in two, with a slant through the blige of the barrel extending to upper and lower hoops. Tie a string about the barrel and mark with a pencil for a guide to saw by.

Cover each half with a piece of muslin, which is held in place by the top hoop if easily removed, otherwise by tying a string about the barrel.

Its usefulness may be prolonged by putting on a bay wire for a bottomless hoop.

Fasten near the bottom with double pointed carpet tacks or small wire nails.

Any sized cask may be used suited to the plant from a paint keg to a puncheon—American Cultivator.

What Makes a Good Cow?

Professor W. I. Kennedy of the Iowa station recommends the following in reference to the selection of breeding stock for the dairy:

In selecting dairy cattle the real test must be the udder and the Babcock tester. The cow is a machine to convert food into milk. This she must have a large udder and a strong constitution to insure the best results. She must also have a large udder, large milk veins, large crooked milk veins and good sized teats.

What Makes the Good Bacon.

Of course you like the big juicy, red and white streaked strips of bacon but you may not know that this kind of bacon is produced by feeding ground barley mixed with skimmilk. Soaked barley alone is an excellent hog feed. Barley also is good for sheep and as a feed for horses and cattle is nearly equal to corn.

FRESH HUCKLEBERRIES.

Huckleberries are meat fruit for pies or puddings. The acid of the fruit promotes digestion and thus counteracts the richness of the puff paste. The huckleberry is variously known as the whortleberry and blueberry.

A nice homemade pie may be made with the fruit as follows:

A Simple Pie.

Huckleberry Pie.—Cover a deep pie dish with rolled puff paste; then fill with berries, to which add a cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of molasses and a little salt and cinnamon. Bake in the oven until done.

Batter Cakes.

Huckleberry Muffins.—Cream a third of a cupful of butter and a fourth of a cupful of sugar; then add an egg well beaten mixed with three-fourths of a cupful of milk and two cupfuls of flour sifted with a saltspoonful of salt and four teaspoonfuls of baking powder. After the batter is beaten smooth add a heaping cupful of huckleberries. Bake in hot buttered muffin rings.

Made With Stale Crumbs.

Huckleberry Pudding.—A bread and huckleberry pudding is made in this way: Soak a cupful and a half of stale breadcrumbs in two cupfuls of milk. When the crumbs are soaked soft mash them. Add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, a pinch of salt, a well beaten egg and some grated nutmeg. Mix two cupfuls of berries thoroughly with the batter and pour it in a buttered dish. Bake slowly for an hour and serve with cream and sugar or hard sauce.

An Attractive Ice.

Huckleberry Ice Cream.—Allow one pound of sugar and a cupful of water to come to the boiling point; then add a quart of huckleberries and let them cook for fifteen or twenty minutes, taking care that they do not burn. Cool the mixture and strain it. Clear the liquid and add a quart of cream. Put the whole into the freezer and freeze until stiff. In freezing it becomes a pale lavender.

TEACH PURITY TO CHILDREN

Proper Instruction Would Eliminate Much Sorrow.

SEX HYGIENE A NECESSITY

False Modesty Ruins Many Young People Every Day.

It is the Duty of Mother to Know All About the Human Body Says Expert in the Field of Eugenics.

The following article was written by Lady Cook (nee Tennessee Claflin) for the United Press:

We have been taught for ages to disregard our bodies as things vile and unclean by nature. A general ignorance of them, has in the past been strenuously encouraged and fastidiously repressed. Our civilization, any youth or girl attempting to learn the mysteries of their physique would be accounted forward or indecent. A study of their real origin would be held as grossly indecent. Yet man is the most beautiful and most wonderful piece of animal mechanism, in all nature most worthy and most profitable of study. All his faculties and powers, his thoughts and emotions, are governed by the structure and state of his body. It should be his duty, then, to know all he can about it and as early as possible. This should form a chief part of the education of every child according to its age and capacity, and enter into the curriculum of every school. Physiological works should be studied as well as the Bible because of their greater utility.

In our old family Bible there is a picture of Eve rising as a complete and mature woman out of the side of man as he reclines in sleep. We have seen the same monstrous idea similarly treated elsewhere. Children may view these false delineations without hesitation because they are sanctioned by "authorities," but were a mother in puritification exhibited to the young, even in the most proper manner, it would be pounced upon by the police.

The theological fable is preferred to the physiological fact. Our backwardness in this is partly due to the medical profession, members of which may not want trade secrets to be too freely divulged to "outsiders." The general teaching that we are concerned in sin and born in iniquity is as false as it is blasphemous, and an insult to every parent. To tell sober people that a pure-minded couple are defiled by their own carnal embraces is at once to vilify Nature and its Author. I say to parents: Do not believe in this disgusting doctrine.

Our young men and young women are imperfectly instructed—if instructed at all. Countless thousands are grossly ignorant of the most elementary circumstances pertaining to married life, even after they have chosen their mate. The sexual side of our being has been so stigmatized that our other natural appetites have shared in its degradation. We boast of our love of art, literature and science, but are ashamed of our bodily organs and functions, and shun the knowledge of our own physiology. These beautiful structures, which it should be our pride to improve and preserve untainted, are accounted vile and not to be discussed. The nauseous "purity" which produces all this should be scouted as a cravenly filthy and reckless foolishness.

We should then, as propagators of the race, take the only course and teach our children what is their birthright to know and not give them the opportunity to learn it from the whisperings of older and evil companions on the street corners and in cloakrooms.

AFTER SHORT MEASURE USERS

All Half Bushels in the State are Said to be Short Measure.

All the half bushel measures in the State of Michigan are short measures. The standard measure, which has been in use for more than fifty years and is made of brass, was sent to Washington a few days ago to be passed on by the government bureau of standards. After a careful examination the bureau refused to O. K. it, returning it to State Dairy and Food Commissioner Helme with the information that it was short weight. Mr. Helme declares a new measure will be ready in a short time. All persons using the present half bushel measure in Michigan for commercial purposes will be forced to discard them at a date to be determined by Commissioner Helme and purchase full measures. The change necessitated will cost in excess of $100,000 to the grocers and merchants of the state, it is estimated. All quart and two quart measures are also short measure, according to the United States bureau of standards.

PILE DRIVER BURNS

Fire Thought to Have Started from a Spark from Stack.

Monday night at 7:30 a fire alarm was sent in for a serious blaze on the pile-driver owned by L. C. Monroe of East Jordan. The fire is supposed to have originated from a spark flying from the stack. The extent of the damage incurred is about $1000.

The complete structure of the pile-driver was burned except the scow and derrick. The boiler and machinery was quite badly damaged. Work of rebuilding and repairing was started at once. Mr. Monroe rigged up his land-driver and work will still go ahead on the Chicago Club docks and boat-houses while the steam driver is being repaired for temporary use. After the work is completed on the resort Mr. Monroe will rebuild the driver in up-to-date shape. The damage is a total loss to the owner, there being no insurance carried on the pile-driver. The crew had been employed on the boat-houses and docks of the Chicago Club resort for two weeks, making considerable headway. Mr. Monroe expects to have the steam driver in shape for use in four or five days.

Have you considered fire protection? Talk it over with us?—Myrtle Young & Son. Adv. 521t.

Captain Albert Miller Loses His Life While Lifting Nets.

500 Reaches Shore Safely—Had Been a Fisherman Over Forty Years.

Captain Albert Miller, one of Petoskey's oldest residents and for almost forty years an operator of fish tugs out of that port, was drowned about 8:45 Friday forenoon, when the small boat which he and his son Lloyd were using while attempting to lift a fish net was upset on the Arlington Reef.

Captain Miller and his son had gone out to the reef and were progressing rapidly with their work, when a huge wave literally lifted their boat into the air and turned it upside down. Lloyd was thrown some distance from the bow of the boat and Captain Miller near the stern. Both managed to get hold of the boat and clung to it until they could touch bottom, when they let go and started to wade to shore over the rocks. Lloyd reached shore safely, but his father was caught by a huge wave and washed under. The undertow, which is very strong at this point, caught him and apparently carried him out into deep water.

The undertow across the reef is unbelievably strong and Lloyd declares he had a hard fight to reach the shore. In the excitement of the upset and being terribly chilled by the cold water and wind, he did not notice that his father was not following him ashore. Robert and Harry Miller attempted to take the fishing boat out across the reef, but they were compelled to turn back by the high waves which broke over their boat nearly swamping it.

Captain Miller had been a sailor practically all his life, but, despite this fact, could not swim. A stroke. He had oftentimes been wrecked in his fishing boats but had always managed to escape drowning. His friends and his family feel that neither he nor his son realized just how rough it was out on the reef or they would not have attempted to lift the net until the wind had gone down.

Capt. Albert Miller went to Petoskey about forty years ago and took up the business of operating fish tugs. During his early life he had been a sailor and knew no other life except that of a life on the water. He had always enjoyed a good trade and his catches had been fair. He leaves to mourn his sad drowning the widow and four children—Harry, Robert and Lloyd, all of whom live in Petoskey, and Miss Pansy Miller, who for some time has been located at Bay City.

NEW PARCEL RATES

Increases Weight of Packages and Admits Books to Fourth Class.

After March 16 of the new year books will be admitted to the post-office as fourth class matter at the rate of one cent for each two ounces. This innovation will be welcomed by many people, as the classification permits of the use of the parcel post.

Another announcement which is of great interest to the jobber, retailer and wholesaler as well as the consumer is the raising of the weight limit for the different zones. After January 1st, 1914, packages weighing 20 pounds can be sent to any of the zones, while the limit in the first and second zones has been advanced to 50 pounds.

For example, a package weighing 11 pounds can be sent to the sixth zone for 80 cents, where formerly the rate was $1. An 11 pound package sent to the third zone, a distance of 300 miles, costs but 20 cents after the first of the year, where the rate is now 57 cents. In the fourth zone, which calls for a limit of distance of 600 miles, an 11 pound package can be carried for 47 cents.

HEAVY FIRE LOSS AT EAST JORDAN

Mill B Owned by East Jordan Lumber Co. Burned to Ground.

Will Be Rebuilt on the Same Foundation—Loss a Heavy One to East Jordan.

The East-Jordan Lumber Company's mill B caught fire and was burned to the ground, a total loss, about six o'clock last Wednesday evening.

The flames when the alarm was given were in the roof of the boiler and engine room, on the northwest side of the structure, and a strong northwest wind fanned it and drove it into the mill, quickly getting beyond hope of control.

The mill was equipped with a large circular saw and band re-saw driven by a large Corliss engine. There was one battery of three boilers for running the mill proper and a smaller battery of two boilers furnishing steam for the dressing machinery engine. There was also a lath mill attached.

The original mill was built on this site in 1882 by Martin & Wooden. Two years later it was purchased by Stoepple & Co., who ran it for a few years. In 1890 it was purchased and has since been owned by the East Jordan Lumber Company.

In March 1892 its battery of three boilers exploded, wrecking the mill and fatally injuring seven men. It was rebuilt and enlarged and new equipment put in at different times, the last about four years ago.

The northwest wind brought and scattered the burning brands over the lower business part of the city and three times fires started from these were put out by the lumber company's mill A, located half a mile from the fire. Also a farmer's rig standing in the street had caught fire in the same way, but was discovered in time and put out.

The mill destroyed was worth $30,000, with insurance about one half of that sum.

On Thursday morning, before the ashes were cold, work was begun to dig out what salvage was possible from the ruins and things gotten in shape that there will be no delay in adjusting the insurance.

As soon as needed repairs on mill A are completed this mill will start day and night shifts, so that as many of the employees of mill B as possible can be given work.

In the meantime, as soon as possible, the debris from the fire will be removed and a new mill built upon the same foundation to take its place.

The new mill will be the same size as was the burned structure and will be equipped with new machinery and it will weather permits the new mill B will be ready to start sawing in three months time.

The disaster is not only a big loss to the lumber company and to the fifty or more laborers employed there, but it is a loss that will be felt by the entire community. All had expected a very active season for the mill and now it is ashes and junk.

COBBLING SHOP FIRE

Loss Will Reach $125—Eleven Pairs of Shoes Burned and Ruined.

Thursday morning at 1:30 a.m. the firemen responded to an alarm for fire in the cobbling shop of Thomas Zverina, near Baker's inn. The fire, which started in the rear and side of the building, is thought to have been of an incendiary origin, as gasoline was very evident on the arrival of the fire department. The state fire marshal was notified and has been making an investigation this week.

Mr. Zverina states that his loss of stock, which he had just received to run him through the rest of the winter and is destroyed, will amount to about $125. He carried no insurance. The machinery used in this up-to-date shop was not injured except being smoked up considerably and the motor was not damaged.

Eleven pairs of shoes which Mr. Zverina had just completed and were ready for polishing and finishing with the machine were either damaged or burned up.

Is your property insured? If not, see Myrtle Young & Son. Adv. 521t.

HOME BADLY DAMAGED

By Fire Tuesday Noon—Loss on House and Contents Covered by Insurance.

The third fire in the city within a week was at the home of Mrs. Will Allard, 112 E. Lincoln street, Tuesday at 12:30. Fire which originated near the stovepipe upstairs did considerable damage to the house. Clothing and bedding and all the furniture upstairs was either destroyed by fire or ruined by smoke and water. Doors were seriously damaged and ruined.

The fire department responded but did not turn on the water from the city hydrants. Neighbors and friends carried out the household effects from the lower floors and with the aid of the garden hose and buckets of water the blaze was checked and quickly extinguished by the firemen upon their arrival. Considerable new clothing and shoes just bought for the children were totally destroyed, while other effects were ruined by smoke or water. If the upstairs windows had not been opened undoubtedly the fire would have gained a prolonged headway and the result would have been a total loss of the house and contents.

The sound of something falling attracted Mrs. Allard's attention while eating dinner and in trying to ascertain what the noise was the fire was discovered. The upstairs was then full of smoke and the fire was rapidly eating its way through the rooms. The damage is fully covered by insurance.

Fire insurance is not a burden, but a friend in need. See Myrtle Young & Son about your insurance. Adv. 521t.

LOST THUMB FINGER AND EYE

Donald McLain Pounds a Cartridge With a Stone.

Son of William McLain Seriously Injured in Explosion of Shot Gun Cartridge.

Donald, the ten year-old son of William McLain, was the victim of an accident last Sunday that cost him his thumb, a finger and probably the loss of an eye.

One of his playmates at the school house had given him a shotgun cartridge the day previous to the accident. Sunday afternoon Donald took the cartridge and began to pound it to get, as he says, the shot to use in his airgun. The consequence was that the shell exploded, tearing off the thumb and first finger of his left hand and otherwise injuring it. One of the shot also struck him in the right eye, totally destroying it.

He was immediately taken to Dr. Armstrong's office, where his wounds were dressed, and is getting along as nicely as could be expected.

SPLENDID WORK BY SUFFRAGISTS

Recent Campaign Excited Admiration of Whole Civilized World.

100,300 WOMEN TAX PAYERS

Women of State Pay Almost $4,000,000 Every Year in Taxes.

Senator Townsend Urges a Campaign of Education—Says Equal Suffrage is Here to Stay.

The 28th annual convention of the Michigan Equal Suffrage Association was held at the Masonic Temple in Jackson, Mich., November 5, 6 and 7. The convention was called to order by Mrs. Clara B. Arthur, president. After the preliminary work of seating the delegates the convention took up as the first business the proposed amendments to the by-laws.

There was a fine spirit of loyalty and optimism manifested from the very first, and Mrs. Arthur, in speaking of the splendid work done by the suffragists, said that there was not a discouraged suffragist in Michigan; that the campaign excited the admiration of the whole civilized world, and that wherever they honor pluck and courage we are honored.

A league has recently been formed in Detroit, called the Women Taxpayers League of Michigan, to utilize the tax-paying franchise which this state has given to women. The idea of this league is to make it a state organization; to use such franchise as we have and try and bring about better conditions for women and give us better ideas of the distribution of the money for which we are taxed. There are now 100,300 women in Michigan paying taxes, amounting every year to almost $4,000,000. We were asked to take this matter home to our counties and look into it.

The chairman of the literature committee reported that 50,400 pieces of literature and 5000 "Votes for Women" were printed by Detroit firms. An immense amount of work was done on a very small outlay, but the opinion was that another campaign would be much more expensive.

Wednesday evening a splendid banquet was served in the dining room of the Masonic Temple. About 150 were seated and after the inner man was satisfied he listened to some fine addresses. Senator Chas. M. Townsend gave a delightful talk. He urged a campaign of education. He said that equal suffrage was bound to come and that he should do his part for it by voting for the Sixteenth Amendment granting this right to women when it came up in Congress.

Thursday morning there were several good papers. "What We Have Learned From Two Campaigns," by Mrs. Ida R. Macpherson of Saginaw, told quite in detail of the frauds and irregularities practiced in Saginaw county.

Considerable discussion followed these papers. We know now where we stand and whom we are fighting and it was the opinion that we cannot advertise too much. On motion it was decided that a leaflet embodying all the illegalities in Michigan which we know be prepared for distribution. It will make good campaign literature.

DAYS AND DAYS

I thought of you last Fourth of July
And I thought of you Thanksgiving Day,
Wishing 'twas Christmas so that I Could send you a greeting right away.

And now it's here! So a full-sized pack
Of Christmas wishes to you I send.
Keep 'em a year, then send 'em back,
For a fair exchange is no robbery friend!

EV'RY TIME!

Ev'ry time that Christmas comes,
I sorter, somehow think o' you Because you're such a Cheerful chap,
An' jest won't Let your friends git blue.

So here's a handshake, an' a wish:
May Christmas bring you half th' joy
That ev'ry day you bring your friends—
Then you'll be loaded down, my boy!

DISINFECT THE SCHOOLS

Proper Precautions Against Disease Epidemics are Advised for Schools.

The proper disinfecting of school property is a most important health consideration both in districts threatened with contagious disease epidemics and other districts. The burning of sulphur and formaldehyde is now regarded as only partially effective, so the State Board of Health recommends a thorough washing of the floors, furniture, woodwork and, if possible, the walls with water in which is placed a disinfectant of high phenol efficiency. Some of the widely advertised disinfectants on the market are declared worthless by the government, but those guaranteed to be effective are:

Self-Reliance of Farmers.

A farm life is a great educator in self-reliance. There is an astonishing difference between boys brought up on farms and those brought up in cities in the matter of self-reliance.

The farm boy learns to do things as he goes along. The city boy learns to do things generally after he has finished his school work. In the cities are to be found many men who are able to do nothing for themselves.

But the farm boy has been accustomed to attempting to do whatever is necessary. So he learns to do carpenter work, for that is required on the farm. The farm house and the outbuildings have to be painted and the farm boy is told to take a brush, get some paint and begin painting. He has never done any work of this kind, but he is not surprised at the order. He thinks he can do everything and he begins.

He makes a poor painter at first, but as he generally has enough sense to begin on an unimportant building it does not matter much. He learns by practice and in due time becomes proficient.

Then the rooms in the house have to be papered and he helps the other novices do it. He makes mistakes and learns by them.

An eleven-year-old farmer boy was given a horse and told to go down to the mountain pasture and bring back a certain mare. The boy and the mare were not on good terms and the mare had learned that he was afraid of her. When the boy approached her on this day the mare turned on him and ran at him with mouth open. The boy outran the mare to a stone wall and got over it. The mare, satisfied with her victory, went to grazing. The boy hovered behind the wall, ashamed to go home and report that he was afraid of the mare. After a time his courage returned and he decided to try strategy. He crept away to the further end of the wall, so that he might approach the mare from another direction. Then he turned his coat wrong side out, showing a different color. He did the same thing with his cap, which had a white lining. When he had his cap pulled down over his ears and his coat buttoned up to his chin he had entirely changed his appearance. The remaining thing to do was to disguise his voice. This he did, trying to make it sound as much like the voice of a man as possible. Then he climbed over the wall and started with resolute strides toward the animal. When she looked up he spoke to her in a heavy gruff voice and, walking up to her, slipped the bridle over her head. She did not discover the deception and he led her home in triumph.

This incident illustrates how the farm boy is developed in self-reliance, which proves of great help to him as long as he lives. The faith that he can do things helps him to do them.

BILL NYE'S COW

Was One-Fourth Shorthorn and Three-Fourths Hysena and Her Name was Rosa.

Once upon a time Bill Nye advertised his cow for sale as follows: "Owing to ill-health I will sell at my residence in town 29, range 15 west, according to government survey, one crushed raspberry colored cow, aged eight years. She is a good milker, not afraid of cars or anything else. She is a cow of undiminished courage and gives milk frequently. To a man who does not fear death in any form she would be a great boon. She is very much attached to her home at present by means of a trace chain, but she will be sold to anyone who will agree to treat her right. She is one-fourth Shorthorn and three-fourths Hysena. I will also throw in a double-barreled shotgun, which goes with her. In May she generally goes a way somewhere for a week or two and returns with a tall red calf with wobbly legs. Her name is Rosa and I prefer to sell her to a non-resident."

Curious Marriage Customs. Among the East Indian Gonds a bride is carried on her brother-in-law's back to the house of her friends and is made to weep with each of them, while they give her small presents of money. When the ceremony is about to be performed at the bridegroom's house the bride hides in another house and calls "Cool" and the bridegroom's brother-in-law searches for her. As she enters the bridegroom's house two spears are planted before the door to make an arch, and the bridegroom pushes her through, the girl hanging back.

On the day after the wedding the bride and bridegroom throw mud at each other for sport.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

"CHOOSE YE THIS DAY."

John 3:16—Dec. 28.

"For God so loved the world that His only begotten Son, who should not perish, but have everlasting life."

THE closing of the year is properly considered an opportune time for balancing books, carrying forward profits and losses, and determining for the future. We may safely say, however, that no human soul can strike a thoroughly satisfactory balance of accounts unless Jesus has been partner and counselor. And every one finding himself perplexed and discouraged, we would have known how to begin the new year aright, by entering into covenant relationship with the Redeemer, who declares, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden; and I will give you rest."

Today's Study is full of helpful instructions. The very first lesson is that "God so loved the world." The difficulty in the past has been that we have not emphasized the love of God. How could we, when our eyes of understanding were dimmed by our creeds away from the God of the Bible to a creedal image picturing the Heavenly Father in most Satanic colors—more loveless than any demon we can possibly imagine.

But while we have gotten away from the doctrine of demons, as St. Paul calls them (1 Timothy 4:1), Christendom still holds up those horribly distorted creeds before the world, hindering them from getting even a glimpse of "the Love of God, which passeth understanding," and giving them, instead, terrible misrepresentations of Divine justice.

But God's people are awakening to the Truth, and gradually gaining courage to assert it. We are now met with the difficulty that the world has so thoroughly believed on the authority of the Divine character that they can scarcely believe the gracious Message of the Bible—the Message of Divine Love.

Our text illustrates our former blind-ness. It does not say, as once we supposed, that God gave His Son to save us from eternal torture. Quite to the contrary, it declares that His mission was to save from perishing. When brute beasts die, they perish. God has made no provision for their resurrection. Mankind would have likewise perished, had it not been for God's Mercy and provision in Christ.

Because of Jesus' death there is to be a resurrection, not only of the just, now in harmony with God through faith, but also of the unjust—the unjustified, whose eyes of understanding have not yet opened to see the glory of God. Thus we read, "As all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive."

Since by man came death, by a man also (Christ Jesus) came the resurrection of the dead. "Every man in his own order."

"The Better Resurrection." The chief resurrection to glory, for or immortality is only for those called during this Gospel Age, who lay aside every weight and run the race with patience. These saintly ones will constitute the Royal Priesthood, who with Jesus as Royal Chief Priest, will bless the world, resurrecting mankind from sin and death conditions during His Messianic Reign.

The Divine Plan is purposely so arranged that none can obtain everlasting life except through personal relationship to Christ.

GOD'S BLESSINGS are the Redeemer, and faith in His redeeming blood and obedience to His counsels. This being true, the best then are yet unsaved. None living before Jesus' death have been saved. The great mass of the world are saved.

The great mass of the world are saved. The great mass of the world are saved. The great mass of the world are saved.

"Testified In Due Time." St. Paul, commenting upon the fact that Jesus died in ransom-price for all, declares that this will be testified in due time (for the testimony to reach the world evidently has not yet arrived. The testimony began when Jesus "brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." "So great salvation began to be spoken by our Lord."—Hebrews 2:3.

God has permitted this blindness, but declares that under the blessed influences of the Kingdom the true light shall shine everywhere. What a blessed vista this opens before us as on behalf of the poor world! We thus see that God has special grace and blessing for His faithful Church, the saints; and we also perceive that He has a blessing for the world, although a different blessing from that provided for the Church. The latter are to have life on the Divine plane, shiners of the glory, honor and immortality of the Master, while the world, by faith and obedience during the Messianic Kingdom, may retain earthly life and perfection, lost by Adam, but redeemed by Jesus at Calvary.

High Mountains of Wyoming.

The highest summation in Wyoming is Gannett Peak, whose elevation, according to a chart published by the United States Geological Survey, is 13,785 feet above sea level. The Grand Teton is a close second at 13,747 feet and Fremont Peak is only seventeen feet lower. There are six additional mountains higher than 13,000 feet, their elevations ranging from 13,007 feet for Knoll Point Mountain to 13,000 feet for Mount Helen. But these are not all the lofty mountains in the state, for there are an additional twenty-one named peaks and about forty unnamed peaks whose altitudes are above 12,000 feet. Wyoming has, therefore, some seventy mountain peaks that rise more than 12,000 feet above sea level.

Japanese paper umbrellas and binoculars are waterproofed with an oil extracted from rubber plant seeds.

Honeybees.

In the year 1628 the first hive bees or honeybees were brought across the ocean to this country. They were black bees, sometimes called brown bees and also German bees. These gradually spread over the land, aided by later importations to different parts, and held imperious possession for more than 200 years, when in 1824 the first Italians were introduced. Since then a number of other races have come, but the great majority of bees owned in this country are at the present time Italians of a cross between Italian and blacks, with perhaps a few of unimixed black blood.—Country Gentleman.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

CHAPTER IX. A Bridegroom Spurned.

"You know—Aggie told you that Cassidy was up here from headquarters. He didn't put a name to it, but I'm on it."

It was Garson speaking. Mary regarded him inquiringly, and he continued, putting the fact with a certain bluntness after the habit of his class. "I guess you'll have to quit seeing young Gilder. The bulls are wise. His father has made a boller."

"Don't let that worry you, Joe," she said tranquilly. She allowed a few seconds to go by, then added as if quite indifferent, "I was married to Dick Gilder this morning." There came a sequel of amazement from Aggie, a start of incredulity from Garson.

"Yes," Mary repeated evenly, "I was married to him this morning. That was my important engagement," she added with a smile toward Aggie.

Aggie sat erect, her baby face alive with worldly gleam. "Oh, now, what luck!" she exclaimed nodding. "Why, he's a kine fish, he is. Gee, but I'm glad you landed him!"

"Thank you," Mary said with a smile that was the result of her sense of humor rather than from any tenderness. "It was then that Garson spoke. He put a question of vital significance. 'Do you love him?'"

The question caught Mary all unprepared, but she retained her self control sufficiently to make her answer in a voice that to the ordinary ear would have revealed no least tremor. "No," she said. She offered no explanation, no excuse; merely stated the fact in all its finality.

"Then you won't leave us?" Garson asked. "We're going on as we were before?" The hint of dejection in his manner had vanished. "And you won't live with him?"

"Live with him?" Mary exclaimed emphatically. "Certainly not!" Garson was still patient in his determination to apprehend just what had come to pass.

"Does he understand the arrangement?" was his question. "No, not yet," Mary admitted, with out sign of embarrassment. Garson was intently considering another phase of the situation, one suggested perhaps out of his own deep-seated sentiments.

"He must think a lot of you," he said gravely. "Don't he?" "I—I suppose so," Garson spoke very softly, but with an intensity that left no doubt as to the honesty of his purpose.

"I'd say throw up the whole game and go to him, if you really care." There fell a tense silence. It was broken by Mary.

"I married him to get even with his father," she said. "That's all there is to it. By the way, I expect Dick will be here in a minute or two. When he comes just remember not to enlighten him."

"Mr. Gilder," Fannie announced. "Any one with him?" "No, Miss Turner," the maid answered.

"Have him come in," Mary ordered. Garson made hasty excuses and went out on the heels of the maid. Aggie, however, consulting only her own wishes in the matter, had no thought of flight, and, if the truth be told, Mary was glad of the sustaining presence of another woman. She got up slowly and stood silent, while Aggie regarded her curiously. A moment later the bridegroom entered. He was still clean-cut and wholesome. Some- sons of wealthy fathers are not after four years' experience of the white lights of town. And the lines of his face were firmer, better in every way. It seemed, indeed, that here was some- one of a resolute character, not to be wasted on the trivial and gross things he caught Mary in his arms with "Hello, dear!" smothered in the kiss he implanted on her lips.

Mary strove vainly to free herself. "Don't, oh, don't!" she gasped. Dick released his wife and smiled the beatific smile of the newly wed.

"Why not?" he demanded, with a smile. "Agnes!" It was the sole pretext by which Mary could turn for a momentary relief.

The bridegroom faced about and perceived Agnes. He made a forced bow and spoke politely.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Lytle, but—a smile of perfect happiness shone on his face. "You could hardly expect me to see any one but Mary under the circumstances. We were married this morning.

"Just one," Dick pleaded.

Aggie accepted the news with fitting excitement. "Goodness gracious! How perfectly lovely!"

"You bet it's lovely!" Dick declared. He turned to Mary; his face glowing with satisfaction.

"Mary," he said, "I have the honey moon trip all fixed. The Mauretania sails at 5 in the morning, so we will."

"Where is your father?" the bride asked, without any trace of emotion.

"O Lord! I had forgotten all about that. I'll tell you what we'll do. We'll send dad a wireless from the ship, then write him from Paris."

"What was your promise? I told you that I wouldn't go with you until you had brought your father to me and he had wished us happiness."

"Mary," Dick said reproachfully, "you are not going to hold me to that promise?"

"I am going to hold you to that promise, Dick."

"All right. You pack up what things you need, girls—just a few, because they sell clothes in Paris. And mean- time I'll run down to dad's office and have him back here in half an hour. You will be all ready, won't you?"

"Yes, yes, I'll be ready. Go and bring your father."

"You bet I will!" Dick cried heartily. He would have taken her in his arms again, but she evaded the caress. "Just one," Dick pleaded.

"No," the bride replied with deter- mination.

There was silence in the drawing room until the two women heard the closing of the outer door of the apart- ment. Then, at last, Aggie relieved her pent-up emotions in a sigh that was near a groan.

"Oh, gosh!" she gasped. "The poor alump!"

Garson, learning from the maid that Dick Gilder had left, returned just as Mary was glancing over the release- with which General Hastings was to be compensated, along with the return of his letters, for his payment of $10,000 to Miss Agnes Lynch.

Mary spoke crisply to Agnes. "And now you must get ready. You are to be at Harris' office with this document at 4 o'clock, and remember that you are to let the lawyer manage every thing."

"I don't see the use of all this non- key business," she protested. "All I want is the ruin."

Meanwhile Garson had expi-rienced Mary.

"It's English Eddie. You met him once. I wonder what he wants? Prob- ably got a trick for me. We often used to work together."

"Nothing without my consent," Mary warned.

"Oh, no, no, sure not?" Garson agreed.

Further discussion was cut short by the appearance of English Eddie him- self, a tall, handsome man in the early thirties, who paused just within the doorway and delivered to Mary a bow that was the perfection of elegance. Mary made no effort to restrain the smile caused by the costume of Mr. Griggs. Yet there was no violation of the canons of good taste, except in the aggregate. From spats to hat, from walking coat to gloves, every- thing was perfect of its kind. Only there was an overelaboration, so that the ensemble was thimboyan. And the man's manners precisely harmonized with his clothes, whereby the whole effect was emphasized and rendered bizarre. Garson took one amazed look, and then rocked with laughter.

Griggs regarded his former associate reproachfully for a moment and then grinned in frank sympathy.

"From your costume," Mary sug- gested, "one might judge that this is purely a social call. Is it?"

"Well, not exactly," Griggs answered with a smile.

"So I fancied," his hostess replied. "So, sit down, please, and tell us all about it."

English Eddie wasted no time. "Now, look here," he said rapidly. "I've got the greatest game in the world. Two years ago a set of Gothic tapestries worth $300,000 and a set of Fragonard panels, worth nearly as much more were picked from a cha- teau in France and smuggled into this country."

"Are there things really worth that much?" Garson exclaimed.

"Sometimes more," Mary answered. "Morgan has a set of Gothic tapestries worth half a million dollars."

Griggs went on with his account. "About a month ago the things I was telling you of were hung in the library of a millionaire in this city. He attached his chair a little closer to the desk and leaned forward, lowering his voice almost to a whisper as he stated his plan."

"Let's go after them. They were smuggled, mind you, and no matter what happens he can't speak. What do you say?"

Garson shot a piercing glance at Mary. "It's up to her," he said. Griggs re- garded Mary eagerly as she sat with eyes downcast.

Mary shook her head decisively. "It's out of our line," she declared. "I don't see any easier way to get half a million." Griggs said aggressive- ly.

"If it were fifty millions it would make no difference. It's against the law."

"Oh, I know all that, of course," Griggs returned impatiently. "But if you can—"

"My friends and I never do anything that's illegal. Thank you for coming to us, Mr. Griggs, but we can't go in and there's an end of the matter."

"But wait a minute," English Eddie expostulated. "You see, this chap Gil- der?"

"Gilder?" Mary exclaimed question- ingly.

"Yes. You know who he is—the dry goods man."

Mary, however, had regained her self control, and her voice was tran- quil again as she replied. "I know; but, just the same, it's the gal, and I won't touch it. That's all there is to it."

"But half a million!" Griggs exclaim- ed disconsolately. "There's a stake worth playing for. Think of it!" He turned pleadingly to Garson. "Half a million, Joe!"

"But a chance like this! Anyhow come around to the back room at Rilu."

"English Eddie" Griggs. Let's tought and we'll have a talk. Will you? "What time?" (Continued on page 6)

OLD BROAD CREEK CHURCH.

It is in Ruins Now, Yet Washington
Once Worshipped There.

Within eight miles from the national capitol at Washington is an old church which was built in 1834. Its parish which was built in 1834. Its parish which was built in 1834. Its parish

It is a famous church, and in the early days it was a well known parish for it was the first that was founded near the city of Washington. Of late years the old families have all moved away, and their children have had interests elsewhere. They have all re-gotten the little old church where their ancestors worshipped.

It was this church of St. John's that George Washington attended on his frequent visits to his side of the river.
A few years back those old parishioners who could remember their father's stories of having seen Washington rowed by his slaves over from Mount Vernon to service there, put on Washington town's new in the old church a silver plate as a memorial to him.

The old graveyard is overgrown with honey-suckle, but beneath the masses of vine there are many famous old Maryland people buried.

The church itself is a curious old structure. It is nearly square and the bricks, which are of exceptional size were imported from England. The hardware was also imported.

There is no chance at all in the church. There is a place where the altar should be that is set apart from the church by a small rail. At one time there was a great high pulpit, and this was taken out by some rector who thought that it was unnecessary.

EXPENSIVE DINING.

Prices Soar Sky High at the Hotel de Roches Noires.

Trouville is in the season one of the most expensive spots in Europe. It contains what is assuredly one of the most expensive hotels in Europe. The individual who takes his wife and family to the Hotel des Roches Noires for say, a month in the high season and does them really well that is, after then the best with the hotel has to offer when he comes away. If it is said he has not a small fortune behind him.

The idea that an Englishman because he is being charged a high price is being cheated is absurd. Now that winter is at hand it is not a really good time to go to Trouville. In a really good hotel in Trouville is looked at as one of the best places to go to in the world.
Then if people are present a hotel of such high standard than any other.
They do not seem to care with the spend.

For a further dining place at Trouville when a lot of old-fashioned was ed by the room. They are quite nice nectarines, but that has water wanted 25 francs apiece. Five dollars for two or three mouthfuls seemed to me too much, but those interests all went. There was a score a Frenchman in the room who did not treat himself to one. At the next table to mine was a man with his wife and his daughter. They had three apiece $45 for dessert as a windup to an extremely expensive dinner! — Richard Marsh in Strand Magazine.

Changing Lead to Gold.

Professor Sully makes the assertion boldly that it is only a question of application to change lead into gold. He says that while now we can only work with electricity at 100,000 volts it is only a matter of perfecting the method to be able to work at ten times the voltage when the laser metals can be changed into the more precious.
Other words, electricity, when brought to its highest efficiency and application is the real philosopher's stone, for which the alchemists of the middle ages searched so long.—New York World.

Interest Computing Device.

A Hungarian citizen has invented an instrument which shows instantly the amount of interest due on any given sum for any period at any given rate of interest. The instrument which is made in the size and shape of a watch, has a very simple construction, and all that is necessary to operate it is to place the hands in the proper position on the dial, and the exact amount of interest in such case is indicated on the face of the instrument. The instrument is inexpensive and its usefulness is apparent. — Industrial Report.

Carburetor Care.

Time and labor on the road may be avoided if the motorist will take the trouble to drain the bowl of his carburetor once in a while to rid it of oil and the possible accumulation of water, caused by condensation. Water is not apt to show itself during hot weather, but it will under other conditions and will eventually stop the flow of fuel. A little attention to such small things will make a trip on the road by appearing.

MAKING GOOD PUTTY.

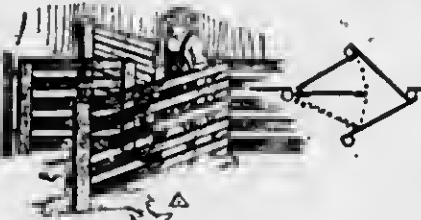

The Various Ingredients Should Be Thoroughly Kneaded.

The making of putty has very much to do with its working properties. Its capacity for staying whole it is put and its surface quality. Always mix the putty thoroughly, working all the various ingredients intimately together and into a smooth, clean, uniform mass in which there is no irregularities. Inadequate working of the pigment will result in a putty containing perhaps dry bits of lead or whiting. These dry particles of pigment which present in the putty are worked on to the surface under the knife, and when the sandpapering of the putty occurs they immediately tear out, leaving little holes in the surface, which, in order to make a good job of surface filling and smoothing, must be replaced with putty. These dry crumbles of lead or whiting should never be present in putty. Thorough kneading and mixing is a sure preventive of this bad fault. It is quicker and cheaper than any cure that can be devised. Good putty should be tough and elastic and never dry and crumbling. It should not only be tough and elastic; but, in addition, it should be adhesive, tenacious and capable of being worked down under sandpaper or with water and artificial rubbing stone—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

GATE FOR A STOCK FARM.

Permits Passage of Small Animals, but Bars Large Cattle.

It is often desired to separate the smaller stock from the larger at feeding time, and in providing a passage-way for this purpose I devised a plan to make the gateway so that I could pass through with a milk pail in each hand while the cows could not follow me, writes a correspondent of Popular Mechanics. This plan was realized as shown in the sketch. The smaller animals, such as hogs, chickens and sheep, can pass through the V shaped part, but a horse or a cow could not make the turn. The small swinging gate may be fastened to one side to make a permanent enclosure for the smaller stock.

COWS AND HORSES CANNOT PASS THROUGH.

How Sapphires Are Mined. The method of recovering the stones from the ground of the New Mines Sapphirine syndicate, Yogo, Mont., is rather unusual and interesting. The matrix containing the stones is put in trusive igneous rock weathered to a yellow clay for a depth of approximately twenty feet from the surface. From this portion the sapphires are easily separated by washing. Below this level where the rock is harder it has been found necessary to disintegrate it by exposing it in piles to the weather and wetting occasionally. The ore is placed on inclined planes and left for several months during the winter. The frequent freezing and thawing cause the lumps to crack and disintegrate. A large stream of water is then played on the piles and the material slushes down to place gold—Engineering and Mining Journal.

To Fill Pores in Stone.

Stone and brick are porous, so much so that they are not suitable as liquid containers, and if used outdoors they take up water which freezes, causing small bits to crack and fall off. It is often desirable to fill these pores, and this may be done with a solution of paraffin and aquiline. This solution is readily soaked up, and the aquiline evaporates, leaving the pores filled with the paraffin. If the rock or brick is treated with soft soap and then washed with alum an insoluble compound is formed, which also acts as a good filler. A solution of sodium silicate or water glass applied to sand stone and allowed to dry, then followed with a wash of calcium chloride, forms another insoluble protecting surface.

To Find Dew Point of Air.

To determine the air's dew point Hygrometer, a German meteorologist, fills with water a cup of silver or other good heat conducting metal and introduces an ammoniac-hypocyanite of soda or other salt that lowers the temperature in dissolving. As the salt is slowly added the mixture is gently stirred with a thermometer bulb. At the instant when the cooling causes a deposit of moisture to begin on the outside of the cup the indication on the thermometer is taken and gives the desired dew point, or temperature at which the moisture present in the air would become complete saturation, or 100 per cent of humidity.

Land Surveyors Too Generous.

The surveyors of the United States forest service are finding that the old measures of forest land in the eastern part of the country generally err on the side of safety—that is, to the advantage of the owner or buyer of the land, who ordinarily employs the surveyor. This is further evidence of the honest endeavor of the pioneer surveyors to give their employers full measure. The old idea was to be sure and include as much land as the deed called for and enough over to have a fair factor of safety—Engineering News.

NEW MOTORCAR WHEEL.

Horizontal Helical Springs Take Place of Pneumatic Tires.

On account of the unavoidable, inherent disadvantages of the ordinary type of pneumatic automobile tire designers have been striving for several years to bring forth a tire with puncture proof qualities, yet retaining the necessary resiliency to afford desirable riding qualities, says the Scientific American. To this end one wheel manufacturer in particular claims to have solved the problem. The fundamental idea of the wheel is the carrying of the load on horizontal helical springs connected alternately to the outer and inner rims with ball and socket connections. There are fourteen of these springs arranged around the periphery of the wheel rim in such a manner that each spring carries one-fourteenth of the total load on the wheel.

When the car strikes an obstruction the shock is communicated through the solid rubber and is taken up by the reaction of the helical springs. The center of the wheel is made in the same way as an ordinary automobile wheel, but its lateral strength is increased since the spokes are much shorter than in the usual construction.

Two Methods of Annealing Steel.

The first method of annealing steel consists of heating it slowly to a dull cherry red and then removing it from the fire and trying the heat with a soft stick. When the steel has cooled so that the wood ceases to char plunge the steel quickly into a bath of oil and water. When the steel is worked it will be found to be as soft as could be desired.

Another method is to heat the steel slowly to a dull red and then allow it to lie in the ashes for a few minutes until it becomes almost black. Then drop it into compounds and allow it to cool there.

"Make it early, say 9." "I'll come," Garson replied half guiltily. And in the same moment Mary re-entered. Griggs rose and spoke with an air of regret. "It's follow the leader," he said, "and since you are against it that settles it."

CHAPTER X.

Garson's Noiseless Gun.

SOMETHING what was in his mind was revealed in Garson's first speech after Griggs' going. "That's a mighty big stake he's playing for."

"And a big chance he's taking," Mary retorted. "No, Joe, we don't want any of that. We'll play a game that's safe and sure."

The words recalled to the former wild forebodings that had been troubling him throughout the day. "It's sure enough," he stated, "but is it safe?"

"What do you mean?" Garson walked to and fro nervously as he answered. "S'pose the bulls get tired of you."

Inspector Burke.

putting it over on 'em and try some rough work?"

"Don't worry, Joe. I know a way to stop it."

"Well, so far as that goes, so do I," the forger said, with significant emphasis.

"Just what do you mean by that?" Mary demanded, suspiciously.

"For rough work," he said, "I have this." He took a magazine pistol from his pocket. It was of an odd shape with a barrel longer than usual and a bell-shaped contrivance attached to the muzzle.

"No, no, Joe," Mary cried. "None of that—ever!"

"Pooh!" The forger exclaimed. "Even if I used it, they would never get on to me. See this?" He pointed at the strange contrivance on the muzzle.

"What is it? I have never seen anything like that before."

"Of course you haven't. I'm the first man in the business to get one and I'll bet on it. I keep up with the times." He was revealing that fundamental emotion which is the characteristic of all his kind. "That's one of the new Maxim silencers. With smokeless powder in the cartridges and the allencer on, I can make a shot from my coat pocket, and you wouldn't even know it had been done. And I'm none shot, believe me."

"Impossible!" Mary ejaculated.

"No, it ain't. Here, wait, I'll show you."

"Good gracious, not here!" Mary exclaimed in alarm. "We would have the whole place down on us."

Garson chuckled.

"You just watch that dinky little vase at the table across the room there. Ain't very valuable, is it?"

"No," Mary answered.

In the same instant, while still her eyes were on the vase, it fell in a cascade of shattered glass to the table and floor. She had heard no sound, she saw no smoke. Perhaps, there had been a faintest clicking noise. She stared dumfounded for a few seconds, then turned her bewildered face toward Garson, who was grinning in high enjoyment.

"Neat little thing, ain't it?" the man asked, exultantly.

"Where did you get it?" Mary asked.

"In Boston, last week. And between you and me, Mary, it's the only model, and it sure is a corker."

That night in the back room of Bill Key's—English Eddie and Garson sat with their heads close together over a table.

"A chance like this," Griggs was saying, "a chance that will make a fortune for all of us."

"It sounds good," Garson admitted, wistfully.

"Well," urged Griggs, "what do you say?"

"How would we split it?"

"Three ways would be right," Griggs answered. "One to one to you and one to be divided up among the others."

Garson brought his fist down on the table with a force that made the glasses jump.

"You're on," he said, strongly.

"Fine!" Griggs declared, and the two men shook hands. "Now, I'll get—"

"Get nothing!" Garson interrupted. "I'll get my own men. Chicago Red I. in town. So is Dacey, with perhaps a couple of others of the right sort. I'll get them and we'll turn the trick to-morrow night."

"That's the stuff," Griggs agreed, greatly pleased.

But a sudden shadow fell on the face of Garson. He bent closer to his companion and spoke with a fierce intensity that brooked no denial.

"She must never know."

Griggs nodded understandingly.

Mary had gone to her bedroom for a nap. She was not in the least surprised that Dick had not yet returned though he had mentioned half an hour at the best there were many things that might detain him—his father's absence from the office, difficulties in making arrangements for his projected honeymoon trip abroad—while, would never occur—or the like. At the worst there was a chance of finding his father promptly, and of that father as promptly taking steps to prevent the son from ever again seeing the woman who had so indiscreetly married him.

Yet somehow Mary could not believe that her husband would yield to such paternal coercion. Rather, she was sure that he would prove loyal to her whom he loved through every trouble.

At the thought a certain wistfulness pervaded her and a poignant regret that this particular man should have been the one chosen of fate to be entangled within her mesh of revenge.

There thrilled in her a heart-tormenting realization that there were in his possibilities infinitely more splendid than the joy of vengeance. She would not confess the truth even to her inmost soul, but the truth was there and set her tremble with vague fears.

She had slept, perhaps, a half hour when Fannie awakened her.

"It's a man named Burke," she explained as her mistress lay blinking.

"And there's another man with him. They said they must see you."

By this time Mary was wide-awake for the name of Burke, the police inspector, was enough to startle her out of drowsiness.

She got up, slipped into a tea-gown, bathed her eyes in cologne, dressed her hair a little and went into the drawing room, where the two men had been waiting for something more than a quarter of an hour to the violent indignation of both.

"Oh, here you are, at last!" the big burly man cried as she entered.

"Yes, Inspector," Mary replied pleasantly, as she advanced into the room. She gave a glance toward the other visitor, who was of a slenderer form with a thin, keen face, and recognized him instantly as Demarest, who had taken part against her as the lawyer for the store at the time of her trial, and who was now district attorney.

She went to the chair at the desk and seated herself in a leisurely fashion that increased the indignation of the fuming inspector. She did not use her self-invited guests to sit.

"To whom do I owe the pleasure of this visit, Inspector?" she remarked coolly. It was noticeable that she said whom and not what, as if she understood perfectly that the influence of some person brought him.

"I have come to have a few quiet words with you," the Inspector declared. "Mary disregarded him, and turned to the other man.

"How do you do, Mr. Demarest?" she said evenly. "It's four years since we met, and they've made you district attorney since then. Allow me to congratulate you."

Demarest's keen face took on an expression of perplexity.

"I'm puzzled," he confessed. "There is something familiar, somehow, about you, and yet—"

"Can't you guess?" Mary questioned. "Search your memory, Mr. Demarest."

The face of the district attorney lightened.

"Why?" he exclaimed, "you are—it can't be—yes—you are the girl, you're the Mary Turner whom I—oh, I know you now."

"I'm the girl you mean, Mr. Demarest, but for the rest, you don't know me—not at all!"

"Young woman," Burke said, peremptorily, "the Twentieth Century Limited leaves Grand Central station at 4 o'clock. It arrives in Chicago at 8:55 to-morrow morning. The pulitzer a massive gold watch from his waistcoat pocket, glanced at it, thrust it back, and concluded ponderously, "You will just about have time to catch the train."

"Working for the New York Tribune now?" Mary asked bluntly.

"You'll better be on your way."

trunk," the Inspector rumbled.

"But why? I'm not going away."

"On the Twentieth Century Limited this afternoon," the Inspector declared in a voice of growing wrath.

"Oh, dear, no!"

"I say yes!" The answer was a bellow. "I'm giving you your orders. You will either go to Chicago or you'll go up the river."

"If you can convict me, pray, no dice that little word 'if'."

"The district attorney interposed very bravely."

"I did once, I remember."

"But you can't do it again," Mary declared with an assurance that excited the astonishment of the police official.

"How do you know he can't?" he blustered.

"Because if he could he would have had me in prison some time ago."

"Huh!" Burke exclaimed, gruffly. "I've seen them go up pretty easy."

"The poor ones, not those that have money. I have money, plenty of money—now."

"Money you stole!" the Inspector returned brutally.

"Oh, dear, no!" Mary cried with a fine show of virtuous indignation.

"What about the $30,000 you got on that partnership swindle? I suppose you didn't steal that?"

"Certainly not," was the ready reply. "The man advertised for a partner in a business sure to bring big and safe returns. We formed a partnership with a capital of $30,000. We paid the money into the bank, and then at once I drew it out. It was legal for me to draw that money wasn't it, Mr. Demarest?"

The district attorney admitted the truth of her contention.

"Well, anyhow," Burke shouted, "you may stay inside the law, but you've got to get outside the city. On the level, now, do you think you could get away with that young Glider scheme you've been planning?"

"What young Glider scheme?"

"Oh, I'm wise—I'm wise!" the Inspector cried roughly. "The answer is, once for all, leave town this afternoon or you'll be in the Tombs in the morning."

"It can't be done, Inspector."

Mary opened a drawer of the desk and took out the document obtained that morning from Harris and held it forth.

"What's this?" Burke stormed, but he took the paper.

Demarest looked over the Inspector's shoulder, and his eyes grew larger as he read. When he was at an end of the reading he regarded the passive woman at the desk with a new respect.

"What's this?" Burke repeated helplessly. Mary was kind enough to make the document clear to him.

"It's a temporary restraining order from the supreme court instructing you to let me alone until you have legal proof that I have broken the law."

"But it can't be done," shouted Burke.

"You might ask Mr. Demarest," Mary suggested pleasantly, "as to whether or not it can be done. The gambler houses can do it and so keep on breaking the law. The race track men can do it and lunch at the law. The rail road can do it to restrain its employees from striking. So why shouldn't I go one too? You see, I have money. I can buy all the law I want. And there's nothing you can't do with the law if you have money enough. Ask Mr. Demarest. He knows."

"Can you beat that?" Burke rumbled. He regarded Mary with a stare of almost reverential wonder. "A crook appealing to the law?"

"Well, gentlemen, what are you going to do about it?"

"Miss Turner," the district attorney said, with an appearance of sincerity. "I'm going to appeal to your sense of fair play."

"That was killed four years ago."

But Demarest persisted. Influence had been brought to bear on him. It was for her own sake now that he urged her.

"Let young Glider alone."

Mary laughed again.

"His father sent me away for three years—three years for something I didn't do. Well, he's got to pay for it."

By this time, Burke, a man of superior intelligence, as one must be to reach such a position of authority, had come to realize that there was a case not to be carried through by blustering, by intimidation, by the rough ruses familiar to the force.

"Don't fool yourself, my girl," he said in his huge voice, which was now modulated to a degree that made it almost unrecognizable to himself. "You can't go through with this. There's always a weak link in the chain somewhere. It's up to me to find it, and I will."

"Now," she said, and there was respect in the glance she gave the stalwart man, "now you really sound dangerous."

Fannie appeared at the door.

"Mr. Edward Glider wishes to see you, Miss Turner," she said. "Shall I show him in?"

"Oh, certainly," Mary answered, with an admirable pretense of indifference, while Burke glared at Demarest, and the district attorney appeared ill at ease.

Grange Column

South Arm Grange No. 815.

Grange was called to order at 8:45 by the Worthy Master. Opening song 137. Sister Ina Burbanks presented a bill of $3.15 for supplies. Bro. James Nice presented a bill of $5.55 for oysters and crackers, the bills were allowed. Moved, supported and carried, that the Master appoint two tellers to count votes in electing officers, Sister Ina Burbanks and Brother Reuben Murphy were appointed. After recess the following officers were elected: Master—Bro. Nathan Liskum. Overseer—Bro. Herbert Olney. Lecturer—Bro. Ira Olney. Steward—Bro. Lewis Isaman. Asst. Steward—Bro. Claude Johnson. Chaplain—Sister Ina Burbank. Treasurer—Bro. James Nice. Secretary—Bro. Irwin Murphy. Gate Keeper—Bro. Reuben Murphy. Ceres—Sister Vina Olney. Pomona—Sister Laura Hellmum. Flora—Sister Desair Groenink. Lady Asst. Steward—Sister Hil-dred Liskum. The lecturer furnished a program of current events, stories, recitations and singing.

Iron-ton Grange.

Iron-ton Grange No. 707 met in regular session December 10, under head of new business, as they were about to elect new officers for the coming year. A very lively discussion took place on the incorporation of the grange, and as whether members could vote or not without signing the incorporation. After considerable discussion, the following officers were at last elected: Master—John Knudsen. Overseer—Jerry Saunders. Lecturer—Sadie Hammond. Steward—Ben Nowland. Asst. Steward—Grant Hammond. Chaplain—Mrs. Lillie Saunders. Treasurer—Matthew Saunders. Secretary—Frank Hammond. Gate Keeper—Peter Knudsen. Ceres—Clara Nowland. Pomona—Edith Nowland. Flora—Cora Hammond. Lady Asst. Steward—Fannie Knudsen. Fire Insurance Director—Robert Sherman.

As it was late there was no Lecturer's program. For good of order it was decided to hold a dance on New Years Eve. Grange closed to meet again in two weeks when we hope to have a clear understanding as to whether all are eligible to vote under the incorporation or not. All members requested to be present.

Maple Grove Grange.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1253 met in regular session with an attendance of 25 members and one visitor. After a short business session they proceeded to elect the officers for the ensuing year: Master—E. E. Stroud. Overseer—David Smith. Lecturer—Eva Scott. Steward—Lonia Roenfieldt. Asst. Steward—Robert Minier. Chaplain—Grace Smith. Treasurer—Platt Webster. Secretary—Olive Webster. Gate Keeper—William Harr. Ceres—Anna Stroud. Pomona—Anna Stroud. Flora—Irene Roenfieldt. Lady Asst. Steward—Lillian Bartholomew.

After grange closed the ladies served chicken pie, which was enjoyed by all. The next meeting will be held December 30.

Peninsula Grange.

Regular meeting December 18th. Meeting called to order by Worthy Overseer. Eleven members present. Regular routine of business was disposed of. Mrs. R. W. Mead, Lady Assistant Steward elect, resigned. Resignation accepted and Mrs. Fred Crowell elected to fill vacancy. As the next regular meeting occurs on New Year's Day it was decided to have installation at the meeting following, which will be on January 15th, and to meet at 12 o'clock noon for dinner at the hall. Arrangements are being made for a State Grange delegate to have charge of the installation. Do not forget the next regular meeting at 2 p. m. on January 1st. Pass the word along. Visitors welcome.

Marion Center Grange.

Marion Center Grange, No. 056, met in their hall Friday evening. Grange called to order by Worthy Master. Six applications were read and committees appointed. Next regular meeting Friday evening, January 2nd, when the installation of the new officers will occur. All members requested to be present. Visitors always welcome.

Gleaners Attention.

The Charlevoix County Federation of Gleaners will meet with

DEATH COMES TO ISAAC LEVINSON

Died Suddenly at El Paso, Texas, Last Friday.

GRADUATE OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Was Student of U. of M. When Health Failed Him.

Dreaded White Plague Claims One of Charlevoix's Promising Young Men—Buried at Traverse City Wednesday.

Our citizens were startled Friday by the arrival of a telegram from El Paso, Texas, announcing the death of Isaac Levinson, the second son of Mrs. C. Danto, which occurred in that city early in the day. Although it was known that he had been ill for some years with tuberculosis, no one realized his extremely delicate condition, and the news of his death came as a surprise to his many friends here.

Isaac Levinson was born in Traverse City twenty-six years ago. At the age of about seven years he came to this city with his parents, and his boyhood days were spent here. His early education was gained in the Charlevoix public schools, and he graduated with the class of 1907. Shortly after his graduation he entered the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, taking up dentistry as his future profession. After about two years of close study his health failed him and the first symptoms of the dreaded white plague were evident. He gave up his studies and spent considerable time in North Carolina and other resorts, seeking to regain his health. After a period of time he so far overcame the ravages of the disease that he again resumed his studies. After a year of close application to his work his health again became so impaired that he was forced to leave the university, and since that time has made a heroic effort to regain his former good health.

About eighteen months ago he took up his residence at Silver City, where it was thought the change of climate would be greatly beneficial to him. He lived there until some three or four months ago, when he located at El Paso, Texas. Letters received from him while in this city gave his parents and relatives here encouragement as to his condition, many containing messages that his general health showed a great improvement.

Shortly before his death he caught a severe cold, which resulted in pneumonia, and his physical energies were so far exhausted that he was unable to survive the attack and death resulted after a few days of suffering.

His long struggle for life and his eager desire to participate in its activities has been an inspiration to his many friends and acquaintances. He was of a bright, sunny disposition and made friends wherever he went. Although ill and suffering for over four years, he did not lose his cheerfulness and this fact made his condition seem less serious.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. C. Danto; three brothers—Meyer, Alec and Samuel Levinson—and four sisters—Mrs. Adam Goldman, Mrs. Arthur Cohen and Misses Elizabeth and Ida Levinson.

The remains were taken care of at El Paso by the Masonic fraternity, of which he was a member, and sent to Traverse City, where funeral services were conducted under the Jewish rites on Wednesday, burial taking place in that city.

MAP OF PANAMA CANAL

Beautiful Calendar Put Out by the State Savings Bank—Good Prizes Offered.

The Charlevoix State Savings Bank of Charlevoix, Mich., is distributing a very beautiful calendar which shows a descriptive map of the Panama Canal. The map gives an unusually clear idea of the geography of the canal and the location of the several points which have figured so largely in the written accounts of the work. There are shown the Gatun locks, the lake which is formed by the damming of the River Chagres, the location of the Culebra cut and the Pedro Miguel and Miraflores locks. It shows a bird's-eye view of the whole territory from ocean to ocean.

While these calendars are limited in number, they carry with them a very interesting feature which promises to be well embraced by the young people. These calendars will be placed in as many public places as possible and are called "The Prize Essay" calendars.

The bank will award prizes for the best essays on this subject by children under sixteen years of age. Essays must not contain over two hundred words.

Prizes will be awarded as follows: First prize, $5; second prize, $3, and the next seven best $1 each.

We believe the young people will study the much-talked-of subject well. It is worth while.

SWIFT GETS FREEDOM

Former Head of Beulah Home Served Minimum Sentence of One Year.

Herman L. Swift, former head of the Beulah home at Boyne City, has been released from the state reformatory. Swift was convicted on charges made by boy inmates of the institution and was sentenced to serve from one to five years at Ionia.

Swift did not start on his sentence at once. Governor Osborn twice having extended a delay to him in order that he might carry his case up. He served his minimum sentence, and entered an appeal for leniency.

It is stated that Swift has gone to Chicago, where his wife and child are, his wife being ill. He has been offered a position with the Illinois board of corrections and charities.

CAUGHT LIVE FROG

Petokey Farmer Had One on Exhibition Last Week—Somewhat of a Novelty.

Emiel Nichols brought to the Evening News office on Saturday morning a live frog which he caught in a swamp on the Fred Miller farm, four miles south of Petokey, on Christmas morning. The frog, Mr. Nichols says, was as lively when caught as frogs usually are in the early summer. This specimen was of the deep green variety which makes such good bass bait and Mr. Nichols may keep it for bait when fishing through the ice in Little Traverse Bay later in the winter. Frogs on Christmas are something of a novelty in Petokey and Mr. Nichols was quickly surrounded by a crowd of interested spectators wherever he showed his catch on the streets and in stores about Petokey Saturday.—Petokey Evening News.

54th Wedding Anniversary.

On January 2nd Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee will celebrate their 54th wedding anniversary. The wedding took place at Woodstock, Ontario, January 2nd, 1860. Mrs. Parmelee was the daughter of Levi Hoyt Perry, A.M., M.D., who was a cousin of Com. Oliver Hazard Perry. She has a 65-year-old sister living, also a brother aged 77 years and another sister who is 83 years of age. Both Mr. and Mrs. Parmelee, although well along in years, are enjoying the best of health, showing a family of remarkable longevity. It is the hope of their many friends that they may celebrate many occasions of the same nature in the future.

Ager-Vesburg.

Married at the Methodist parsonage Tuesday, December 23rd, Mr. Wm. Ager and Miss Rosa Vesburg. The young people are well known in the city. They have a host of well wishers. The happy couple took the morning train for Grand Rapids and other points in the state. They will be home to their friends after January 5th.

VALE, 1913!

As the old year goes out on the dark'ning tide, Give it a cheer and a ringing "Good-bye!" Wave it farewell as we all stand aside; It might have been better but now it must die.

Nineteen Thirteen! To some it has shown The sunshine of happiness, joy and success; To others it's meant a hard journey alone, And worry well mingled with bitter distress.

And yet, whether kind or cruel to you, There's this to be said—if we but understood, Like a child that is wayward, it never quite knew What to do next—and it tried to be good!

A. F. BRIDGE

AS CASHIER

Will Begin Active Duty at County Bank After First of Year.

Mon. A. Butters Resigns After Conditional Service of Twenty-Three Years.

After twenty-three years of conditional service as cashier of the Charlevoix County Bank Hon. A. Butters will turn over this responsible position after the first of the year to A. F. Bridge, who for the past ten years has ably acted as assistant cashier.

During this period Mr. Butters has worked hard to build up and conserve the interests of the institution and has won and maintained the unbounded confidence of his associates and the patrons of the bank. He was one of the organizers of the bank under its present name and has served continually in the capacity of cashier up to the present time and the success of the bank—which is one of the strongest in the state for its size—is in no small way due to his unceasing efforts. Notwithstanding his resignation from the position of cashier, Mr. Butters will give his time and energy in the future to the bank as vice-president.

Mr. Bridge will begin his duties with a well-established business and a wide acquaintance among the business interests in this community. When there is anything doing in the way of public improvements he can be counted on as a genuine booster and an effective one and is held in great esteem and confidence in both social and business circles.

H. C. Mohrman, who but recently took a position with the bank, will act as assistant cashier and Miss Florence Hancock will continue in her position as bookkeeper.

COULTER RESIGNS

Makes His Resignation to Take Effect on the First of January.

A. L. Coulter, deputy collector of internal revenue, has a handed his resignation to Internal Revenue Collector George Clapperton, to take effect January 1st.

Mr. Coulter has been in the department several years and always under service. In the urgency deficiency bill passed by the democratic congress a rider was attached removing from the civil service list all deputy collectors of internal revenue and United States marshals. This removed the protection of the civil service from Mr. Coulter. A good business offer was presented Mr. Coulter and he decided the time was ripe to beat the democratic to it, so he accepted the offer.

He has entered the service of the Prudential Casualty Company, of which A. F. Young of this city is state agent. Mr. Coulter's work will be chiefly on the road, soliciting business and inspecting agencies, and his wide acquaintance throughout the state will make him a valuable man for the company.

WENT ASHORE

AT FOX ISLAND

Gasoline Fish Boat Drake Loses Anchor in Severe Storm.

West Ashore Near Light House on South Fox—Flooded Later By Crew.

The crew of the gasoline fish boat Drake, consisting of Fred Simineau, his father Adolph Simineau, Mike Nowland and George Fay, had an experience last week that will be remembered the balance of their lives.

The boat left Charlevoix Sunday morning, December 21, for the Fox Islands, where they intended lifting and setting nets. They had made one lift and on Thursday were anchored near the light house on the south Fox. During the day a heavy storm came up, which during the night became so severe that they lost their anchor and the boat drifted ashore. The members of the crew took what estates and bedding they had and bunked in one of the houses at the light house.

Friday after the wind went down they went to work to get their boat off the rocks, and found that in the blow, besides losing their anchor, the rudder was also gone. Upon making a search in the water they found both rudder and anchor, and by Sunday afternoon, had the boat afloat. Several plank had been stove in, which they repaired and banded the boat in such shape that they could lift the nets they had set, started for this port, arriving here Monday night about 8 o'clock.

In the meantime the tug Frank P. Geiken had been gotten ready to make a search for them. Sunday morning the Geiken started for the islands, but on account of the high seas, was forced to return, and again tried to make the trip later in the day, but the sea was too rough.

Sunday morning the life savers also started for the Foxes, but were forced to return by the breaking of their gasoline engine after being out several hours.

The fishermen were about out of food when they started for this port, but were fortunate in having a warm place in which to sleep at the light house.

Over Twenty-six Years Ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jones of Levering, Michigan, are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. W. LaPeer of Antrim street, also at the home of Mr. Jones' daughter, Mrs. Williams. Mrs. Jones is a sister of Mrs. LaPeer, and it has been twenty-six years since they had seen each other.

Delightful Christmas Gathering.

There was a family gathering at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence LaPeer on Clinton Street Christmas Day. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. M. W. LaPeer, of this city, Mr. and Mrs. Cleo LaPeer of Boyne City, Miss Kathryn LaPeer of Petokey, and Mr. B. Beebman of St. Ignace.

ARE HARD HIT

Express Companies Admit Parcel Post Will Put Them Out of Business.

Express companies are now willing to admit that the expansion of the parcel post system is putting them out of business and in order to stop the flood of business that is going from them a wholesale reduction in rates is promised the first of the year. Had the companies been far-sighted they would have made this reduction before the parcel post went into effect and thereby prevented the establishment of the system. Corporations are invariably short-sighted and the express companies will stand for all time as monumental examples of lack of business foresight. The time to head off competition is before it comes, not after it arrives. Now that the parcel post has come to stay it will be a hard job for the express companies to get back their lost business because the people as a whole feel that the parcel post is their own business and will adhere to it because it is a public utility that really belongs to the public and is not created for the purpose of fattening any individual pocket-book. The people are now waiting to see if the telegraph and telephone trust will heed the warning and cater to the public instead of to the whims of their owners.

BUILD NEW BOAT

Beaver Island Fishermen Will Have New Fishing Tug Built at Once.

For some time, Frank Left, the well-known Beaver Island fisherman, has been figuring with Silas Swales, the Charlevoix marine architect and shipwright, for the building of a new tug, and this week Mr. Swales went to St. James with designs and specifications and came back with a signed contract. The tug will be 53 feet long, 13 feet beam, and six feet eight inches depth of hold. She will be driven by a 10x12 engine and a Scotch boiler of 150 pounds steam pressure. She will be used exclusively for fishing, and will have every modern requirement for boats of that class. Mr. Swales has gone to Chicago to order the engine and boiler and buy the timber and other material required. He will have the boat ready for delivery by the opening of navigation.—Evening News.

ARRESTED UNDER SERIOUS CHARGE

Former Clerk at Hotel Elston Charged With Embezzlement.

Frank T. Biosatt Systematically Robbed His Employer for About a Year.

Frank T. Biosatt, who for the past two years held the position of clerk at the Hotel Elston, was arrested in Chicago last week, charged with embezzlement and obtaining property under false pretenses.

Sheriff Ford P. Robbins, armed with extradition paper, went to Chicago the week before Christmas to get Biosatt and got his man and placed him under arrest. After the arrest was made Biosatt asked permission to communicate with his brother, stating he wanted to inform him of the trouble he was in. Robbins granted permission and shortly afterward Biosatt's brother and an officer appeared with a writ of habeas corpus and under the Illinois laws Biosatt was given a hearing and placed under $5000 bonds to appear in court January 5th.

Previous to coming to Charlevoix Biosatt was employed by Libby, McNeil & Libby as traveling salesman. It is charged that for the past year he has systematically robbed the cash register at the hotel for an amount estimated at near $5000. He will undoubtedly be brought to this city for trial.

Coming Monday, January 12th.

Monday, January 12th, is the date when J. Lenhy, the Optometrist, will be at Baker's Inn. He will remain one day. Headache and dizziness cured, crossed eyes straightened without an operation. Fitting children's eyes a specialty. 5312

THE FARMER'S BOY AND RURAL SCHOOL

Two Subjects Ably Handled By Professor W. H. French.

"BACK TO THE FARM" CRY

Which Is Going Over the Land To-day Is All Hot Air.

Says You Cannot Make Farmers Out of Boys Who Do Not Care for the Farm—Give Them a Good Education.

The farmer's boy, his advantages and his obstacles, his joys and his sorrows, his school and his home, his work and his play—in fact, everything in and about his life were discussed by Prof. W. H. French of Michigan Agricultural College at a Farmers' Institute meeting held at Cadillac last week.

"This 'back to the farm' cry which is going over the land to-day is all hot air," said Professor French. "You can't make farmers out of those boys who do not care for the farm and you can't send them to the farm when they do not want to live on a farm. The graduates from M. A. C. do not return to farms from which they came because they didn't like farm life when they were on the farm. It is up to the farmer to train his boy to be a farmer if he wants him to be one. In many cases farm life is known to have driven the lad from the farm."

The speaker asserted the farmer boy had many advantages over his city brother. He said the farmer boy has a longer youth and that his social life is not so superficial as a city boy's. The farmer boy's life develops trust and responsibility and character in him when he is fourteen and he is stable at a time when the city lad is very unstable.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," quoted Mr. French, "and the farmer should not encroach on his son's boyhood. He should allow his boy time to play. The drudgery of the farm—the long days and the like is what sends boys away from the farm—it isn't education."

That the educated farmer boy makes more money than the lad who has only passed through a few of the grades was the assertion of Professor French and he quoted statistics to prove his statements. The speaker said that every farmer should send his son through the city high school and that every city high school should give the proper training in the farmer boy should teach agriculture. He said that most cities had one more thing to do in school equipment and that was to add agriculture to its courses.

"The Rural School" was another subject which he commented on at the same meeting. He advocated two teachers for every country school and said the teaching of eight grades was an impossible task for one teacher. He suggested the combining of two districts if this was necessary to have two teachers. Mr. French also proposed that every school build an addition to its building and to divide this addition into three parts—one to serve as a boys' work and store room, one to serve as a general dining room and one as a kitchen. In the kitchen he suggested a range on which to cook. The school, he believed, should have its own dining tables, dishes, silver and the like and the noon meal should be served at school. "Each child should be required to bring so much of a certain kind of food each day," said the speaker. He said country school were dull when they were dull because they ate from their well filled dinner pails at recess in the morning, at noon and at recess in the afternoon.

INDIAN GETS LITTLE

Interior Department's Report Shows White Employee Receives Double the Indian's Share.

Lo, the poor Indian, is no very extravagant luxury for Uncle Sam in Michigan. The secretary of the interior has made public what the redman has cost the government during the past year.

The itemization for Michigan follows:

For Ottawas, Chippewas, L'Anse and Vieux de Sert Chippewas, per capita payments in money, $178.37; for salaries of employees, $3670.53; for support and civilization, $1890.68; total, $3729.58.

It is just the same in Michigan as elsewhere. The chief item of expensed maintenance of the red men consists in payments to the white man. The government servant who is set up to look after the aborigines gets the big end of the outlay. Nearly $4000 for salaries of employees and less than $2000 for support and civilization of the red man in Michigan caused a hearty laugh when the report was submitted to congress.

TO TERN, KINDNESS

School Children are to Learn Firmness and Nature Economy.

As the result of a law passed by the 1913 legislature every school in the state is required to include in its curriculum such humane education as shall include the kind and just treatment of horses, dogs, cats, birds and other animals and also the important part they fulfill in the economy of nature. It is the purpose of the law not only to have kindness inculcated in the minds of children but also to have them appreciate the worth of birds and various animals in dollars and cents. It is estimated that a toad is worth about twelve dollars annually to the farmer on account of the number of injurious insects he will destroy. Many kinds of birds are even more valuable in their active warfare against destructive insects. In order to aid the teachers in this work the Department of Public Instruction has available for distribution a bulletin concerning the common birds of Michigan.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 16 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

CHAPTER XI. Glider Meets Bride.

THERE entered the erect, heavy figure of the man whom Mary had hated through the years. He stopped abruptly just within the room, gave a glance at the two men, then his eyes went to Mary, sitting at her desk, with her face lifted inquiringly. He did not pause to take in the beauty of that face, only its strength. He stared at her silently for a moment. Then he spoke, a little tremulous from anxiety.

"Are you the woman?" he said. There was something simple and primitive, something of dignity beyond the usual conventions, in his direct address.

Mary's acknowledgment was as plain as his own question.

"I am the woman. What do you want?"

"My son."

Mary guessed that his coming was altogether of his own volition, and not the result of his son's information, as at first she had supposed.

"Have you seen him recently?"

"No."

"Then, why did you come?"

"Because I intend to save my boy from a great folly. I am informed that he is infatuated with you, and Inspector Burke tells me—why—he tells me—why—he tells me—"

He paused, unable for a moment to continue from an excess of emotion. Inspector Burke filled the halting sentence.

"I told you she had been an ex-con vict."

"Yes," Glider said, after he had regained his self control. He stared at her plendly. "Tell me, is this true?"

Here, then, was the moment for which she had longed through weary days, through weary years. Here was the man whom she hated, supplanting before her to know the truth. Her heart quickened. Truly, vengeance is sweet to one who has suffered unjustly.

"Is this true?" the man repeated with something of horror in his voice.

"It is," Mary said quietly.

For a little, there was silence in the room. At last, Glider spoke with the clasp, pressed it tenderly.

"I didn't see father," he said happily, "but I left a note on his desk at the office."

Then, somehow, the surcharged atmosphere penetrated his consciousness, and he looked around, to see his father standing grimly opposite him. But there was no change in his expression beyond a more radiant smile.

"Hello, dad!" he cried, joyously.

"Then you got my note?"

"No, Dick, I haven't had any note."

The young man spoke with simple pride.

"Dad, we're married. Mary and I were married this morning."

Mary kept her eyes steadfast on the father. There was triumph in her gaze. This was the vengeance for which she had longed, for which she had plotted, the vengeance she had at last achieved. Here was her fruit from the period of her supremacy.

Glider seemed dazed by the brief sentence.

"Say that again," he commanded.

"Dad, Mary and I were married this morning."

"I married your son this morning," Mary said in a matter of fact tone, "I married him. Do you quite understand, Mr. Glider? I married him in that—insistence—my—ultimate—compensation for untold misery. The father stood there wordless, unable to find speech against this calamity that had befallen him.

"It's a frameup!" Burke roared, glaring at the young man. "Tell your father it isn't true. Why, do you know what she is? She's done time!"

He paused for an instant, then spoke in a voice that was brutally menacing.

"And she'll do it again!"

The young man turned toward his bride. There was disbelief, hope, despair, in his face.

"It's a lie, Mary," he said. "Say it's a lie!"

"It is the truth," Mary said firmly. "I have served three years in prison."

There was a silence of a minute that was like years.

Dick turned his tortured face to his

"Are you the woman?"

sureness of a man of wealth, confidence that money will solve any wound.

"How much?" he asked, baldly.

Mary smiled an inscrutable smile.

"Oh, I don't need money," she said carelessly. "Inspector Burke will tell you how easy it is for me to get it."

"Do you want my son to learn who you are?" he said.

"Why not? I'm ready to tell him myself."

Then Glider showed his true heart in which love for his boy was buried all else.

"But I don't want him to know," he stammered. "Why, I've spared the life of all his life. If he really loves you, he will."

At that moment the son himself entered hurriedly. In his eagerness, he saw no one save the woman he loved. At his entrance, Mary rose and moved backward a step involuntarily in sheer surprise over his coming.

The young man went swiftly to him while the other three men stood there. Dick took Mary's hand in a wro-bride of a day. Then he spoke again more hesitatingly.

"Say there's a mistake."

Mary spoke with a simplicity that admitted no denial.

"It's all quite true."

The man who had so loved her trusted her, stood trembling for a moment, tottered and sunk into a chair.

The father looked at Mary with a reproach that was pathetic.

"See," he said, and his heavy voice was for once thin with passion—"see what you've done to my boy!"

"What is that compared to what you have done to me?"

"What have I done to you?" he questioned, incomprehending.

"Do you remember what I said to you the day you had me sent away?"

"I don't remember you at all."

"Perhaps you remember Mary Turner, who was arrested four years ago for robbing your store, and perhaps you remember that she asked to speak to you before they took her to prison?"

The heavy jowled man gave a start.

"Oh, you begin to remember! Yes! There was a girl who swore she was innocent—yes, she swore that she was innocent. And she would have got off—only you asked the judge to make an example of her."

"You are that girl?"

"I am that girl."

There was a little interval of silence. Then Mary spoke again remorselessly.

"You took away my good name; you smashed my life; you put me behind the bars. You owe for all that. Well, I've begun to collect."

"Say, there's a mistake."

"And that is why you married my boy?"

"It is"—Mary gave the answer coldly, unconsciously.

Convincingly, sure to one—her husband. Dick suddenly aroused and spoke with the violence of one sure.

"It's not!"

He stood up and went to Mary, and took her two hands in his, very gently, yet very firmly.

"Mary," he said softly, yet with a strength of conviction, "you married me because you love me."

"No," she said gravely. "No, I did not."

"And you love me now?" he went on insistently.

"No, no!" Mary's denial came like a cry for escape.

"You love me now?" There was a masterful quality in his declaration, which seemed to ignore her negation.

"I don't," she repeated bitterly.

"Look me in the face and say that."

There was a silence that seemed long, though it was measured in the passing of seconds. At last Mary, who had planned so long for this hour, gathered her forces and spoke callously. Her voice was low, but without any weakness of doubt.

"I do not love you."

"Just the same you are my wife, and I'm going to keep you and make you love me."

"She's a crook!" Burke said.

"I don't care what you've heard," Dick exclaimed. "From now on you'll go straight. You'll walk the straightest line a woman ever walked. You'll put all thoughts of vengeance out of your heart because I'll fill it with something bigger—I'm going to make you love me."

Burke spoke again:

"I tell you she's a crook."

Mary moved a little, and then turned her face toward Glider.

"And, if I am, who made me one? You can't send a girl to prison and have her come out anything else."

Burke swung himself around in a moment of complete disgust.

"She didn't get her time for good behavior."

"And I'm proud of it!" came her instant retort. "Do you know what goes on there behind those stone walls? Do you, Mr. District Attorney, whose business it is to send girls there? Do you know what a girl is expected to do to get time off for good behavior? If you don't, ask the keepers

"I served every minute of my time every minute of it, three full, whole years. Do you wonder that I want to get even, that some one has got to pay? Four years ago, you took away my name—and gave me a number. Now, I've given up the number—and I've got your name."

CHAPTER XII.
Aftermath of Tragedy.

THE Gliders, both father and son, endured much suffering throughout the night and day that followed the scene in Mary Turner's apartment, when she had made known the accomplishment of her revenge on the older man by her ensuring of the younger.

Dick had followed the others out of her presence at her command, emphasized by her leaving him alone when he would have pleaded further with her. Since then he had striven to obtain another interview with his bride, but she had refused him. He was denied admission to the apartment, only the maid answered the ringing of the telephone, and his notes were seemingly unheeded.

Distraught by this violent interjection of torment into a life that hitherto had known no important suffering, Dick Glider showed what mettle of man lay beneath his debonair appearance. And that mettle was of a kind

BEHOLD this joyous New Year again, with its glad spirit of friendliness, its feeling of brotherhood and its atmosphere of good will. Perhaps we force these feelings a little at times, but what of it?
Let us assume a spiritual revival and before the day is over we will have achieved it in fact.

The Courier and its publishers are holding both hands out to you to-day, wishing you, with all sincerity and no hollows, a very Happy and Prosperous New Year. May the day itself, as well as the twelve months to come, be filled with pleas-left a disagreeable impression may the big "S" of "Forgetfulness" speedily and effectively wipe it out.

Good luck, good courage and good business be with you—and here's hoping that your New Year's resolutions will be the best you ever made and stick by you.

MILLIONS OF EGG MASSES

Are Fastened on Limbs of the Fruit and Forest Trees.

Should Start Campaign at Once Against the Apple Tree Tent Caterpillar.

As a result of an inspection made of the northern part of the Western Michigan territory by Prof. Myron
A. Cobb of the Central Michigan
Normal School, located at Mount Pleasant, an active campaign is to be started against the apple tree tent caterpillar, which caterpillar was so greatly in evidence last year. Professor Cobb in traveling through the several counties of Western Michigan discovered that there were literally millions of egg masses fastened on the limbs of the fruit and forest trees. He also discovered that these egg masses could be gathered and destroyed at this season of the year with but very little trouble, thus reducing the number of caterpillars for next season. He is now at work upon a bulletin giving the life history of the caterpillar and showing pictures of the caterpillar in its various stages. This bulletin will also tell how the damage that is likely to come from the pest can be greatly reduced by burning the egg masses that are now to be seen throughout the country. The bulletin is to be circulated by means of the county school commissioners, the rural teachers and the children. In this connection it will be suggested that the teachers become familiar with the egg masses, point them out to the children and urge the school children to gather and destroy them. It is believed that by following this course the number of caterpillars scheduled for next year can be reduced by one-half or three-quarters.

Last year the caterpillars were present by the million. In some cases they nearly cleaned fruit trees of their foliage. There was hardly an orchard tree that was without a tent and many contained two, three and five and some as many as fifteen tents. A campaign was conducted by the fruit growers against the caterpillar by means of torches, the tents and contents being burned. Many farmers went from tree to tree and pulled the tents off the limbs and ground the caterpillars into the earth by means of the foot. As the caterpillar is a large animal and easily seen, it is certain that eventually the Western Michigan territory can be rid of the pest.

COW MAKES A RECORD

In Nine Months This Animal Has Produced 16,139
Pounds of Milk.

What is claimed to be a record production of butter on the Del-marva peninsula has been made by Maud H. 28 Lass, a registered Holstein cow at the Delaware College experiment farm. Although in milk for nearly ten months the record of this cow last week was 12 pounds of butter fat, equivalent to a little more than 14 pounds of butter. In nine months the cow has produced 16,139 pounds of milk and 633 pounds of butter. The farm is at Newark, New Jersey.

How to Whiten the Skin.
A simple and very fine lotion for whitening and emollient the skin and preserving its freshness after the use of creams is the following. The three benzoin, alcohol, oil of rose, the oil of ylang-ylang, two drams, rosewater, glycerine and orange flower. Mix the three and add the rosewater to prevent precipitation. If desired, it should be perfumed with a few drops of essence of sandalwood.

As a skin and complexion there is nothing better than cold water. But do not use it often more than once a day if the skin is very dry. Add to a pint of a large water half an ounce of glycerine and a quarter of an ounce of lemon juice. It is refreshing and softening to the skin and is an excellent for dissolving redness that sometimes affects the nose. It should be applied with absorbent cotton or a piece of clean cheesecloth and after drying on must be washed off with soft, clear water.

How to Treat Stair Carpets.
Every now and then, instead of allowing the stair carpets to remain in exactly the same position as first placed, the tread of the carpet should be removed a couple of inches or so either up or down. This has the effect of keeping the pile of the carpet in a uniform condition, and, besides retaining the fresh appearance of the carpet, it helps it to last much longer than if it would be left exactly as laid. It costs nothing to do this, yet saves much.

How to Patch Wall Paper.
Tear a piece of cloth larger than the portion to be covered to match the wall paper and patch with it without any doubtful effect. The patch will not be noticeable.

HOW TO ENTERTAIN FOR THANKSGIVING.

Thanksgiving is a season when the woman who delights in dispense hospitality gathers relatives and friends around her hearthstone.

If she happens to be a member of a large family she arranges to feast where young and old enjoy the delicacies associated with Thanksgiving. When her family is small, friends are invited to fill the "gaps" around the board.

The evening should be arranged for the amusement of the young people, particularly those who have returned home for the first winter holiday. A "Priscilla party" would prove most interesting to them.

To the boys send invitations decorated with a Puritan maiden and draw Puritan lads on the invitations sent to the girls.
Request them to represent the early colonial lovers, John Alden and Priscilla. These costumes are easily provided. A white kerchief and modest Puritan cap of white worn with a gray frock will transform the girls into dainty Priscillas. Broad white collars and cuffs, with knee breeches, attire the boys as John Alden.

To amuse the young people provide each with a card containing ten quotations from Longfellow's "Courtship of Miles Standish." These are written with three or more words omitted from each line. These are to be supplied, and the one being most successful in completing the quotations receives a copy of the poem.

Request them to write a linerick about the landing of the pilgrims. This will cause much enjoyment, and while the laughter is at its height invite your guests to the kitchen, where arrangements have been made for an old-fashioned candy pull.

If possible, seat your guests at the table when serving refreshments.

OF REAL INTEREST.

How to Make Your Camera Worth While.

If you have a camera and it worth while. Perhaps you cannot make it worth while so far as actual money is concerned. But you can at least learn to take pictures that are worth taking.

More money is wasted each year on films that never produce a picture probably than on the photographer by the amateur. Less in the long run for films that are productive of really good pictures. For every amateur who is careful to see that light and distance regulations are set correctly, that the pose is good and the time of day is propitious, there are two or three amateurs who just blindly "snap" their cameras at anything and everything about them.

So, if you have a camera, determine not to be a wasteful photographer.
Have a little book in which you can make entries about all the films and supplies you use. The result in black and white of a few wasted supplies and films is appalling. Try to make take this record, which might be made in any photographer's camera book.

For two cents, I have
For a little of the best of the best For paper
For other things
For the best of the best Results. Out of two dozen films were really good, three were out focus, the others, most in four, five were thin, two were too thick, and the rest were less than.

And the result of this kind of speculation is that the photographer was disposed.

A MUSICAL TREAT

Apollo Society of Albion College at the Methodist Church January 3rd.

The musical treat of the season will be given in the Methodist church Saturday, January 3rd. The Apollo Society of Albion College, with Karl Keefe as reader and Ford M. Jewell as saxophone artist, is one of the best companies on the road. A feast of high grade music and clean college fun.

An open date on Saturday made it possible to secure the company, they being in Petoskey Friday and Traverse City Monday. The public is to share the profits. The tickets are only 25 cents. Get them early at the Central Drug Store, as only a limited number can be sold.

Wood-Cutting Wanted.

Am in shape to turn wood. Com-

Falk about Florida winters! This part of Michigan is "11." On Friday forenoon a number of the train crew on the E. J. & S. Railroad reported seeing as the train passed by four kids, stripped bathing in Deer Creek! How is that for December 20, in Northern Michigan.—East Jordan Enterprise.

It is estimated that the new ruling by the interstate commerce commission that books may be sent by parcel post will save the state of Michigan about $25,000 annually and every second year, when the public acts and copies of the Michigan manual are sent out by the secretary of state, the saving will be even greater.

Mias Hazel Washburn of Detroit, daughter of A. T. Washburn of Petoskey, has again won the Eastman Kodak Company's national contest and will appear in their 1914 advertising campaign. It will be recalled that Miss Washburn was known as the "Kodak Girl" in 1909, having won the $1000 cash prize offered by the same company. She will be awarded a cash prize in the present contest.—Petoskey Evening News.

HELME SHOWS UP FAKE HAIR TONICS

Says All Dandruff Cures and Hair Growers are Fakes.

Interesting Reading to the Bald and Those Who are Near Bald.

When the Lord of Creation visits the barber shop weekly to have the hair removed from his chin and encouraged on his topknot he is confronted by a row of bottles on the barber's stand labeled "Eau De Quinine," "Herpicide," etc., all of which the barber recommends as fertilizers for the human dome to reforest the barren areas thereon.

For swatting a small handful of this on the customer's head the barber charges from 10 to 15 cents. Some mathematical sharp has figured it up that at 15 cents a swat the barber clears the tidy sum of $18 on each gallon of dope he disposes of.

Some people would think this was a fair profit, but a concern doing business under the name of The Avondale Company in Detroit has devised a scheme to give the barber even more profit. This concern advertises a series of imitations of the leading hair restorers at a much less price per gallon. They sell "O. D. Q. Nine" as an imitation of the imported "Eau De Quinine," "Herpicide" and so on through the list. Some barbers take these cheaper imitations and put them in the original bottles of the higher priced dopes, thereby increasing their profits at the expense of the customer's ignorance.

"Naturally," makers of the high priced articles complained of this system, which is a violation of the drug laws of the state. When barbers were threatened with prosecution for using these preparations for the originals the Avondale Company came back twitting out a circular which in part reads as follows:

"To begin with, as most barbers know, manufacturers of dandruff cures, hair growers, etc., are fakes. They can't grow hair nor cure dandruff—and they know it."

"They defraud the public through lying advertisements and, we are told, are now trying to force barbers to continue using their high priced fake goods through a 'bottle stand' bottle system which they say is backed up by the law."

"Are fakes backed up by law? We should say not. Laws were made to put fakers out of business and not for their protection. Hair tonic fakers are legal outcasts—the same as gamblers, quack doctors and the slot machine grafters."

"Any time hair tonic fakers talk of prosecuting barbers because they substitute lower priced products for high priced fakes they're blinding. Give them the slot machine laugh."

"Fakers dare not go to court; they are at your mercy and could be put out of business themselves by the very laws they claim protect them—and they know it. Now then! Save a couple of 'bucks' on your next order."

"Barbers are asked to patronize The Avondale Co. because we sell good stuff and sell it at a reasonable price."

This will be an interesting reading to the bald and near bald. The Avondale Company virtually says: "All hair restorers and dandruff cures are fakes. We will sell you something equally as good in a less price."

We are inclined to think this statement is correct. If there was any medicine that would cure bald heads would we smooth paties endure the shots of the girls at the burlesque shows when we sit on the front seats? Never! Not if $10 worth of hairgrower would produce a second growth pasture on the top of our cerebrullums. The Avondale dopes are probably as efficient as any in getting a man's money without delivering the goods. Barbers are warned, however, that if Avondale or other goods are placed in bottles of other manufacturers they invite prosecution under the drug laws.

To be sure, the "Avondale Co." agrees to protect their customers, but the secretary of state's office shows there is no such company as the "Avondale Co." Such a company was incorporated on June 12th, 1911, but it filed a dissolution notice on November 20th, 1911, and has not had a legal existence since that time. Its guarantee, therefore, is as worthless as it admits its products to be.

There is just one sure cure for bald heads and that is to wear a wig or be a woman.

D. B. U.

(Detroit Business University)

The oldest and most influential business training school in Michigan is giving today the most modern and thorough course which fully qualify its graduates for high grade positions.

Tuition costs more in this school than in many others, but the results prove it to be the cheapest in the end. Low grade work and cheap instruction are found in cheap schools. The D. B. U. is not in that class.

We invite you to write for our curriculum and to spend six months with us during the present school season.

worth while. He did not for an instant believe that she was guilty of the crime with which she had been charged and for which she had served a sentence in prison. For the first time he could understand in some degree how the venom of the wrong inflicted on her had poisoned her nature through the years, till she had worked out its evil through the scheme of which he was the innocent victim. He cared little for the fact that recently she had devoted herself to devious devices for making money, to ingenious schemes for legal plunder.

So, in the face of this catastrophe where a less love must have been destroyed utterly, Dick remained loyal. His passionate regard did not falter for a moment. It never even occurred to him that he might cast her off might yield to his father's prayers, and abandon her.

The father suffered with the son. He was a proud man, intensely gratified over the commanding position to which he had achieved in the commercial world, proud of his business integrity, of his standing in the community as a leader, proud of his social position. Proud most of all of the son whom he so loved. Now, this hideous disaster, threatened his pride at every turn, worse, it threatened the one person in the world whom he really loved.

He realized that his son loved the woman—nor could he wonder much at that. His keen eyes had perceived Mary Turner's graces of form, her loveliness of face. He had appreciated, too, in some measure at least, the fineness of her mental character and the capriciousness of her heart. Deep within him, denied any outlet, he knew here linked a curious, subtle sympathy for the girl in her scheme of revenge against himself.

Gilder, in his library this night, was pacing impatiently to and fro, eagerly listening for the sound of his son's return to the house. He was anxious for the coming of Dick to whom he would make one more appeal. If that should fail—well, he must use the influence at his command to secure the forcible parting of the adventuress from his son.

Finally the son entered the room and went at once to his father, who was standing waiting facing the door. "I'm awfully sorry I'm so late, dad," he said simply.

"Where have you been?" the father demanded gravely. But there was great affection in the flash of his gray eyes as he scanned the young man's face, and the touch of the hand that he put on Dick's shoulder was very tender. "With that woman again?"

"No, father, not with her. She won't see me."

"Naturally! She's got all she wants from you my name."

"It's mine too, you know, sir."

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect.

"Dick," he cried, "you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow. You owe me that much."

"I owe something to her, too, dad."

"What can you owe her?" She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. We must get you out of the scrape."

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

"You want to stay married to this jail bird?"

"I'm very fond of her."

"Now that you know?"

"Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. "Don't you see, father? Why she is justified in a way—in her own mind anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison."

"Don't talk to me about her innocence. There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up. If you don't want her you're going to do this day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters, for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the rogues' gallery, but they will take another view and the imprint of her fingers and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. Yet every word had in it the piercing, horrible sting of truth.

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly. "To the woman who bears your name and mine. What are you going to do about it?"

"It will never happen. She will be straight, dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her a little."

Gilder was in despair. What argument could avail him? He cried out sharply in desperation.

"Do you realize what you're doing? Don't go to smash, Dick. Just at the beginning of your life. Oh, I beg you, boy, stop! Put this girl out of your thoughts and start fresh. You're all I have, my boy."

"Yes, dad," came the answer. "If I could avoid it I wouldn't hurt you for anything in the world. I'm sorry, dad, awfully sorry." He hesitated, then his voice rang out clearly: "But I must fight this out by myself—fight it out in my own way. And I'm going to do it!"

The butler entered.

"A man to see you, sir," he said.

The master took the card. "Very well," he said, "show him up." The glimmer met the wondering gaze of his son.

"It's Burke," he explained.

"What on earth can he want at this time of night?" Dick exclaimed.

"You may as well get used to visits from the police."

A moment later Inspector Burke entered the room.

"She's shipped!" he said triumphantly.

Dick made a step forward. His eyes flashed, and there was anger in his voice as he replied:

"I don't believe it."

"She left this morning for Chicago," Burke said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go."

He turned to the father and spoke with an air of boastful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape and you'll be all right."

"If we only could!" The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

"I guess we can find a way to have the marriage annulled or whatever they do to marriages that don't take," said Burke.

The brutal assurance of the man in thus referring to things that were sacred moved Dick to wrath.

"Don't you interfere," he said.

Nevertheless Burke held to the topic. "Interfere! Huh! he ejaculated grinning broadly. "Why, that's what I'm paid to do. Listen to me, son. The minute you begin mixing up with crooks you ain't in a position to give orders to any one. The crooks have got no rights in the eyes of the police just remember that."

But Dick was not listening. His thoughts were again wholly with the woman he loved, who, as the inspector declared, had fled from him.

"Where's she gone in Chicago?"

Burke answered in his usual gruff fashion, but with a note of kindness that was not without its effect on Dick.

"I'm no mind reader," he said. "But she'll probably stop at the Blackstone—that is, until the Chicago police are tipped off that she is in town."

The face of the young man took on a totally different expression. He went close to the inspector and spoke with intense seriousness.

"Burke," he said pleadingly, "give me a chance. I'll leave for Chicago in the morning. Give me twenty-four hours start before you begin hounding her."

The inspector smiled acquiescence. "Seems reasonable," he admitted.

"No, no, Dick!" the father cried. "You shall not go. You shall not go!"

The inspector shot a word of warning to Gilder in an aside that Dick could not hear.

"Keep still," he replied. "It's all right."

"You give me your word, Inspector," Dick said, "that you won't notify the police in Chicago until I've been twenty-four hours?"

"You're on," Burke replied, gently. "They won't get a whisper out of me until the time is up."

"Then I'll go," Dick smiled rather wanly at his father. "You know, dad, I'm sorry, but I've got to do what I think is the right thing."

It was not until the door was closed after Dick that Burke spoke.

"He'll go to Chicago in the morning, you think, don't you?" he asked.

"Certainly," Gilder answered. "But I don't like it."

"Best thing that could have happened," Burke said. "You see, he won't find her there."

"Where did she go then?" Gilder asked, looking at a loss.

"Nowhere yet. But just about the time she's starting for the west I'll have her down at the Blackstone. Then arrest her, take her out of the room, and to-morrow morning she'll be sleeping up the river. That's where she is going."

Gilder stood motionless for a moment. "But," he said wonderingly, "you can't do that."

"Well, perhaps I can't, but I will! Suddenly his face grew hard. His heavy jaw shot forward aggressively as he spoke.

"Think I'm going to let that girl make a joke of the police department? Why, I'm here to get her, to stop her anyhow. Her gang is going to break into your house tonight."

"What?" Gilder demanded. "You mean she's coming here as a thief?"

"Not exactly," Inspector Burke confessed, "but her pals are coming to try to pull off something right here. She wouldn't come, not if I know her. She's too clever for that. Why, if she knew what Gilder was planning to do, she'd stop him."

The inspector paused suddenly. For a long minute his face was scanned with thought. Then he snatched his hat with a blow strong enough to kill an ox. His face was radiant.

"I've got her!" he cried. He went to the desk where the telephone was and took up the receiver.

"Give me 3100 Spring," he said. As he waited for the connection he smiled widely on the astonished Gilder.

"Headquarters?" he called. "Inspector Burke speaking. Who's in my office? I want him quick!" He smiled as he listened, and he spoke again to Gilder. "It's Smith, the best man I have. That's luck, if you ask me. Then again he spoke into the mouth piece of the telephone.

"Oh, Ed, send some one up to that Turner woman. You have the address just see that she is tipped off that Joe Gilder and some pals are going to break into Edward Gilder's house tonight. Get some stool pigeon to bring her the information. You'd better get to work quick, I understand."

The inspector hung up the receiver and faced his host with a contented smile.

"What good will all that do?" Gilder demanded impatiently.

"She'll come to stop 'em. When we get the rest of the gang well grab her too. Just call your man for a minute will you, Mr. Gilder?"

Gilder pressed the electric button on his desk. At the same moment through the octagonal window, came a blinding flash of light that lasted for seconds, then vanished. Burke was startled by the mysterious radiance.

"What's that?" he demanded sharply.

"It's the flashlight from the Metropolitan police," Gilder explained. "The swine's probe is away about every fifteen minutes. The servant told me to look out for it."

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WAYS WITH MINT.

Mint has many medicinal qualities.

The leaves pulled from the stems, slightly washed and with boiling water poured over them, provide a remedy for nervous as well as stomach troubles. Served in a thin glass with cracked ice and a little sugar in it, it cools and quiets the system generally.

In preparing the mint tea the bowl is kept closely covered until the contents are cool; then it is strained and poured into a bottle that can be closely corked and set on the ice. When used, ice should be pounded very fine and a little sugar added if liked.

To Serve With Lamb.

Mint Sauce.—To two tablespoonfuls of chopped mint add a tablespoonful of white sugar and nearly two-thirds of a cupful of vinegar. Let them stand together ten minutes in a cool place before sending to table.

Mint Punch.—Take the leaves from twelve sprigs of mint chopped fine, put in a mortar with four or five tablespoonfuls of sugar and grind to a paste. Add together for five minutes a pound of sugar and a quart of water. Add the juice of three lemons and the mint. When the mixture is cold freeze. Serve in punch glasses.

A Toothsome Confection.

Handful Mint Leaves.—The leaves are first washed clean and dried by patting with a soft cloth, then dipped in a sirup made of one pound of loaf sugar and one-half cupful of water, boiled until a thread. After dipping place on marble slab or waxed paper and with a hot pick carefully spread out the leaves and leave to dry. When sealed from the air will keep a long time.

A Jelly With Meat.

Mint Jelly.—Mint jelly or mint sherbet is nice to serve with lamb or mutton. To make the jelly, pour two cupfuls of boiling water over a bunch of freshly bruised mint leaves and then simmer gently for ten or fifteen minutes. Strain and to a pint of the liquid add one-half a package of gelatin that has been soaked in a little cold water. Add sugar to sweeten and lemon juice to make as acid as desired. Stir until dissolved and set away to cool. As it begins to thicken, stir in two tablespoonfuls of capers, then pour into one good sized mold or tiny individual molds and set away to harden. When cold turn out and garnish with tiny sprigs of fresh mint.

After the Money.

"Does the count intend to contest his wife's suit for divorce?" "No, in his credulous do," Judge.

"OLD BALDY" BACK

Big Eagle Arrives for His Twenty-First Consecutive Winter.

"Old Baldy," the Little Traverse Bay eagle, so-called because of a white spot on his head, has appeared at the head of the bay, half way between Harbor Springs and Petoskey, for his twenty-first consecutive winter.
Baldy generally waits till the first snow, but because of late ground so late this year many persons predicted that the eagle would not appear. The aged bird evidently could not stay away over Christmas and bright and early one morning last week the crew of the Petoskey-Harbor Springs train spied the eagle in his haunts.
Baldy appeared to recognize the trainmen as his friends, for as the train approached he flew over the track, circling about and uttering shrill cries.

Bank Commissioner Doyle says 15 banks in Michigan are charging their patrons as high as 40 per cent interest on loans, and suggests that they hang out a three-half sign. Our county's banks are not compelled to resort to this kind of robbery, and good feeling exists between these institutions and the borrowing public.

A Kalamazoo boy who has bagged nearly 800 sparrows this winter for the two cents bounty was found to have fed the birds on wheat soaked in whiskey, after which they were easy prey. The attention of city officials was called to the practice, but they can find no law prohibiting the getting of a bird drunk, and will leave him alone.

Running automobiles about the streets of Charlevoix on the 31st day of December and almost every day since the beginning of spring prior to this time may not be a usual thing in the north country but it is an actual fact this year and goes to prove that this section of the country is not one glacial mountain, as many people in the southern part of the state seem to think.

BIBLE STUDY ON

JESUS AND THE CHILDREN.

Mark 9:30-41; 10:13-16—Jan. 4.

"And ye shall be with him, to serve one another; for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble."—1 Peter 5:5.

THE Master knew that the time of His death drew near. He passed hastily through Galilee, en route for Capernaum. He desired this opportunity for breaking gently to His disciples the news of His approaching death. While He had previously declared that none could touch Him because His hour had not yet come, now He declared that He would be delivered into the hands of men, that they would kill Him, and that on the third day He would rise from the dead.

But the disciples understood not and feared to ask an explanation. As Jews, they had the thought of the Messianic Kingdom uppermost. They even disputed among themselves respecting the honorable positions they would occupy, and as to which would be the greatest. Little did they understand the great trials and disappointments only a few days ahead!

Jesus inquired respecting their dispute; but they were ashamed to tell Him. Then He advised them that the selfishly ambitious, seeking honor rather than service, would be disappointed.

In His Kingdom self-seekers would find lowest place.

Then He took a child and set it in their midst, saying:

"Whoever shall receive one such little child, receiveth Me." The Master sought to show His disciples that the humblest among them, if favored by God, would have a high position in His Kingdom.

Blessing the Children.

The Master loved children, though so far as the record shows, He did not generally give them His time. When some fond parents brought their children, desiring Him to bless them, the disciples rebuked them. As the subject of the Kingdom was uppermost in His teachings and in their minds, Jesus took this opportunity of teaching the disciples a lesson. They had, perhaps, felt too sure of being members of the Kingdom class.

When Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not; for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven," we do not understand Him to mean that all in the Kingdom would be children. On the contrary, no little children will be in the Kingdom. Only developed, tried, perfected characters will constitute the overcomers who will sit with the Master in His Throne during the blessing of the world.

The thought which the Lord would impress is that even His twelve Apostles would not be in the Kingdom unless they became childlike, teachable, trustful.

The proper child, unsullied by its elders, is disposed to be trustful. All who become God's children must reach this condition of heart as respects the Heavenly Father. Only such will participate in the Kingdom.

Manifestly none can receive a Kingdom until it has been offered. With the Jews this offer came at the close of Jesus' ministry, when He rode into Jerusalem on the ass. The worldly scribes and Pharisees were too wise to receive Jesus, and plotted His death. His disciples fully believed God's Word that there would be a Kingdom, and that Jesus was the appointed King, to reign in due time.

The multitude cried, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!" The wise scribes and Pharisees called out that the multitude be silenced. But Jesus replied that the shout had been foretold (Zechariah 9:9), and that if the people did not shout, the very stones would cry out; that the prophecy be fulfilled.

Mistaken Kingdom Views.

It seems remarkable that after all the Bible has said respecting Messiah's Kingdom and its work of blessing all mankind, so few believe the Message. The majority today, like the scribes and Pharisees of old, are too wise to believe in the possibility of its establishment. They realize the need of the Kingdom, but have certain theories which blind them to the Truth.

Some mistakenly hold that Christ's Kingdom was set up at Pentecost, and that Christ has reigned ever since, conquering the world. How unreasonable this seems, when we know that the heathen double every century. How strange that Christians have so long prayed, "Thy Kingdom, come!" and yet have not really believed that it is to be established at Jesus' Second Coming and the resurrection change of His Church!

Another large body of Christians hold that Jesus' coming is a second time to establish His Kingdom; that in the meantime He has established His Kingdom in a Kingdom, and made the Pope at Rome His representative, to reign in His stead.

These views are neither satisfactory nor Scriptural. Well did the Apostle warn us that many would depart from the faith, giving heed to seductive spirits and doctrines of demons, quite unlike the glorious Gospel of God's Love and His ever-enduring Mercy.

PETOSKEY POULTRY SHOW

Over a Thousand Birds on Exhibition in That City—Show Open Four Days.

The big Petoskey Poultry Show of the Emmet County Poultry Association is now on in full blast in that city. The show promises to be the best held in the state so far this season.

Birds as far south as Grand Rapids have been entered and the show room is practically filled with exhibition pens. It is estimated that over one thousand birds will be on exhibition.

E. J. Miller, Dr. J. A. And, L. E. Benton and R. C. Korth of this city have entered several prize pens.

The show will be open four days, closing Friday evening.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage licenses issued this week were in James Black, age 22, of Charlevoix and Sybil Cook, age 19, of Marquette. Jessie E. Jupp, age 26 and Grace Parks, age 23, both of East Jordan. Harry Hayes, age 22, and Joella Kenny, age 21, both of East Jordan. Fred A. Bahling, age 31 and Jennie White, age 27, both of Boyne City. Albert Fisher, age 21, of Engadine and Rosy Hayes, age 18 of Boyne City. Clinton Bowen, age 19, of Boyne township and Sadie Mae Hammond, age 18, of Ironton. Geo. V. Anderson, age 20, of East Jordan and Josephine N. Warren, age 19, of Boyne City.

Entertained at Christmas Dinner.

Mrs. George Haghton entertained at Christmas dinner Mrs. Ellsworth, aged 84 years; Mrs. Moore, aged 80 years, and Mrs. Cook, aged 75 years. The three congenial old ladies are known to this vicinity as the "sisters," seldom going anywhere. The turkey dinner prepared by the hostess was greatly relished and the old ladies enjoyed many reminiscences of the past.

Littlefield Township Farmer Displayed His Money Too Freely at Petoskey.

Warren W. Whitney, a farmer aged 70 years, living in Littlefield township, near Petoskey, was held up and robbed in that city on Monday night.

Whitney went to Petoskey for a time and displayed his roll of bills on the street. Later in the evening he was waylaid near the McNamons bridge and relieved of his money. The robber hit him on the back of the head with a club, cutting a gash nearly two inches long. B. W. Updegraff, a local character, later got into a fight with a friend, who retaliated by accusing him of holding up Whitney. He was arrested and placed in jail, but none of the missing money was found upon him.

PREVENT SPREAD OF DISEASE

Orders That Will Govern Importation of Foreign Potatoes.

All Tubers Shipped Into United States Must Be Free from Disease.

The Secretary of Agriculture has issued two orders relating to the admission of foreign potatoes into the United States. One of these orders provides for the admission of disease-free potatoes from unfested foreign districts under proper regulation and inspection.

The other order, to protect American potatoes from the powdery scab and other diseases, temporarily extends the quarantine effective since September 20, 1912, against the importation of potatoes from Newfoundland, the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, Great Britain, including England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, Germany, and Austria-Hungary, to include also the rest of continental Europe and the Dominion of Canada. This quarantine became effective December 21, 1913, except that shipments covered by consular invoices issued on or prior to December 21, 1913, will be admitted up to January 15, 1914.

As soon as any country or district can be shown to be free from potato diseases, the quarantine will be lifted, and potatoes will be admitted under proper regulation and inspection, as provided in the other order. It is impossible that, in the case of certain provinces in Canada, and certain countries and districts in Europe, the absolute quarantine can be lifted in time to allow the later movement of the present year's crop under regulation and inspection.

The order relating to the admission of potatoes under inspection extends to potatoes, the nursery stock regulations of the plant quarantine act. This means that in the future no potatoes can be imported until the importers have secured permits from the federal horticultural board similar to those now issued to importers of nursery stock. Potatoes, to be admitted, must be certified by the government of the country of origin to be free from dangerous diseases and insect pests new to or not widely prevalent in the United States, and must have been grown in a district free from wart disease and powdery scab. Regulations governing these importations will soon be issued, and steps will at once be taken to complete arrangements with foreign governments for the survey and designation of disease-free districts.

The powdery scab disease is fully as injurious as the potato scab, which reduces the value of the affected potato in the American market three-fourths. No means of control are known, whereas the potato scab is controllable. Powdery scab affects the soil for an indefinite time and may be introduced by the use of diseased seed potatoes and may be transmitted by contaminated sacks or other containers or garbage waste used as fertilizer. It has invaded large potato areas in Eastern Canada from European seed stock.

Diseased potatoes are now coming to the United States in shipments from Canada, Belgium and Holland, as shown by repeated examinations at the ports of Boston, New York and Philadelphia. Nearly fifty per cent infestation has been found in some of these shipments. The disease occurs also in France, Norway, Sweden and Germany.

All experts—foreign as well as of this country—agree that no inspection of potatoes from a district known to be infested will be of any real value whatever in excluding diseases. The necessary conditions governing importations are, therefore, (1) freedom of the country or well defined district from the diseases quarantined against, such freedom to be determined by adequate field inspections conducted by recognized experts of the countries concerned; (2) agreement of the country or district to maintain yearly such field inspection and to examine and certify all potatoes offered for export in compliance with the regulations of the department of agriculture.

CHILD EATS MEDICINE

Wilma Nowland, Age 3, Gave Mother and Friends a Serious Scare.

Wilma Nowland, the 3 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will Nowland of this city created a serious scare Saturday morning by eating some medicine in the sick room at the home of George Brown. Mrs. Nowland with her daughter, were calling on Mrs. Brown, who is seriously ill, and the child climbing up to the dresser, discovered the tablets and ate several thinking they were candy.

A physician was summoned who gave first aid to the child. Afterwards, on close examination it was discovered the little girl had only eaten several cathartic tablets and the coating of some strychnine tablets.

The child is none the worse for her experience, even though she sent a scare throughout the neighborhood.

FOR SECRETARY OF STATE

C. C. Vaughan of St. Johns, Will Run for Election at Coming Primary.

Coleman C. Vaughan of St. Johns, will run for nomination for secretary of state at the next election on the Republican ticket. Mr. Vaughan has served in the state senate twice, once representing the old Gratiot-Clinton districts, afterwards the present fifteenth district. WILL PAY ALL ITS DEPOSITORS

Boyer Falls Banker Thinks He Can Weather the Storm.

Business Men and Merchants Withdrew Capital Long Before Crash Came.

An investigation of the causes leading up to the failure of the W. C. Walsh private bank of Boyer Falls makes it appear that Walsh expects to pay back depositors dollar for dollar. The banking business has been adjudicated bankrupt in federal court in Grand Rapids.

The beginning of the trouble is traced by citizens of Boyer Falls as far back as last June, when Walsh took personal charge of an employee who was popular, especially with the foreign-speaking people, principally Polish, who comprised the bulk of the bank's depositors.

From other sources it is claimed the rate of interest charged for loans and the consequent trouble led the township, village and school authorities to withdraw their funds from the institution and place them in a national bank.

This withdrawal naturally was talked about and a gradual withdrawal by the heavier depositors followed. A failure to realize on paper which ordinarily would be considered a good risk by individuals, but was not considered a good risk by national banks added to the difficulties, so that when the final crash came Walsh was unable to turn over this paper for ready money.

The business interests of the village are all secured, having taken out their capital before the final crash, so that the depositors who are now waiting for settlement are Polish farmers and the lumbermen who work in the camps in the surrounding woods.

Walsh has repeatedly assured them he will be able to pay them dollar for dollar, but they will have to wait until the papers he holds can be properly handled. While the bank has now been closed for several weeks, there is every probability that the banking firm will open its doors within a couple of weeks.

MEET CUSTOMERS WITH A SMILE

People Like to Do Business with a Public-Spirited Man.

Proprietor Who Wears a Long Face and Predicts Disaster Invariably Hurts Business.

Achievements of a city or community depend entirely upon the ideals of the people who make up the population. If these ideals are high the results will be good and lasting, but if on the contrary they are based upon the standard of getting money alone it proves a hard proposition to arrive at a definite goal. The man who is engrossed solely in the work of making money and ignores the fact that there are others besides himself in the town is bound sooner or later to come to grief. Every citizen who deserves that title can find some time outside of his business to devote to public welfare work and the efforts which he devotes in this direction always prove a good business investment.

The people like to do business with a public-spirited man and investigation will show that the ones who are doing something for the town are doing a better business than the ones who are standing around with long faces and wondering why their trade is not up to the standard they expect. The proprietor or employee who wears a long face and predicts hard times and disaster to the town is a poor advertisement for the firm. This condition is a recognized business principle and cannot be controverted. A customer likes to be met with a cheerful face and optimistic conversation when he enters a store, and the places where this rule is enforced are the ones that are getting the trade. People have troubles enough of their own and do not relish the idea of listening to the woes of others in their everyday routine. If a man's business appears to be going backward instead of forward it is a good idea to take an inventory of the dispositions of those in the place, and the chances are ten to one that the cause will be found without going any further. Cheerfulness and optimism are real business getters and unless they are in evidence to the trade the trade will seek the places where they are met with a smile and the conversation is along the hopeful line. Sunshine is the greatest purifier in the world and it is just as potent in business as in sanitation. Be an optimist. It is a duty you owe to yourself and to your fellow men.

DEMOCRATS TO HOLD BANQUET

Big Time Expected to be Had at Petoskey Next Monday Evening.

Leading Democrats of New Eleventh District Will Hold Conference and Talk Politics.

Monday of next week Petoskey will be the scene of a big gathering of Democrats from all over the new eleventh congressional district. The leaders from the various counties will meet there for a conference and banquet. The affairs of the party in the new district will be thoroughly gone over at the conference, which is to be the first "get together" meeting of democrats in the new district.

Governor Ferris is expected to be there, also National Committeeman E. H. Wood and State Chairman E. C. Shields. Plans will be made for the coming congressional campaign and Gov. Ferris may discuss the coming state campaign. W. E. Preston of Mackinac Island and Messrs. Comstock of Alpena and McDonald of the Soo will be among the well known men in attendance.

The banquet will be held at the Chautauk and practically all the democrats of this city are planning to attend.

Notice.

Hunting and trapping on the grounds of the Charlevoix Summer Home Association are strictly forbidden. All permits for hunting and trapping are hereby revoked.

BUREAU WORK SHOWS RESULTS

Successful Work Done by the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

Five-Year Period Marks Wonderful Advance of Western Michigan Industry.

The year 1913, which is practically the fifth in the history of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, has been a very exceptional and active one from a development standpoint. Much of the work that was started during the early years of the bureau has sufficiently developed to show results and the Western Michigan country is rapidly becoming the influential and prosperous section that it was intended it should be. The development bureau since it began work in February of 1909 has put on twelve big exhibits and two apple shows. These exhibits and apple shows have been for the purpose of convincing the Western Michigan people and their neighbors in the surrounding states that the rolling lands of Western Michigan produce farm and orchard products of superior merit and in few places can the agricultural industry be pursued with greater satisfaction than here.

Besides the big exhibits there have been more than a score of smaller shows.

During the past five years the bureau has put out three issues of its illustrated magazine, "Western Michigan," with a total circulation of 450,000. It now has the fourth edition of the magazine in press. During the same time 107 regular and about 35 special bulletins have been issued with a total circulation of 150,000. During the year 1913 fifteen regular and 11 special bulletins with a circulation of over 32,000 have been distributed. In addition many thousands of leaflets and folders printed by various organizations have been sent out.

There have been better than forty illustrated lectures in the past year. Some of these in Western Michigan in behalf of higher standards of agriculture and some in outside territory for the purpose of advertising this region as a desirable one in which to live.

All-alfa campaigns have been conducted in eight of the twenty counties and 82 clubs formed. Many road meetings have also been held and agriculturists have given orchard demonstrations.

During the bureau's five years of life it has collected over 300 photographs and 332 lantern slides. It now has 340 original cuts in its loaning collection. The correspondence has been so vast that 514 folders have been installed to take care of the more important correspondents.

This vast amount of activity has been carried on with less than $75,000 of actual money, which is a showing that is most creditable.

NOTHING LIKE IT

Frogs; Mosquitoes and Robins Not Afraid of Northern Michigan Climate.

The glorious climate of Northern Michigan is being commented on from one end of the country to the other, and up to the second day of January, people rode about the country in their automobiles and the sprinkler was necessary to lay the dust. The croak of the bullfrog was heard and the mosquitoes buzzed around quite familiarly. Only last week a farmer caught a large bullfrog in a swamp on his farm and exhibited it in the city, and on the second day of January W. R. McDermott, the well known blacksmith of the west side, caught a mosquito, which he now has on exhibition—Petoskey Evening News.

New Year's day a party of hunters ran across a live frog at the edge of the swamp south of the old sugar factory. Only last week several of our citizens claim they saw a robin near the Belvedere hotel. Sure, there's nothing like this northern climate.

Monday Charles Voeborg brought to the Courier office a live frog, which he picked up in Sutton's Swamp while hunting. The frog was found lying in the middle of the road, and the nail where he had come out of the grass was plainly visible. The frog is now on exhibition in the window at H. E. McHugh's store.

BAD FIRE AT BOYNE

Family of Eight Nearly Cremated in a Fire Which Destroys Home.

Fire completely destroyed the home and contents of Del Davis at Boyne City Saturday. The cause of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to have originated from the kitchen stove.

The family—which consisted of the father and mother, two young children, a married daughter and her baby, also another daughter and her husband, bride and groom of but a few days—had retired for the night in the upper story of the house. About two o'clock in the morning the family were awakened by the smoke and intense heat from the rooms below. The young bridegroom jumped from the upstairs window and secured a ladder, by which means the balance of the family escaped, clad only in their nightclothes. As the last person left the building the floor of the rooms in which they had been sleeping caved in.

LECTURE POSTPONED

Date of Doctor Peterson's Lecture Changed to April 9th.

Dr. Reuben Peterson, professor in the medical department of the University of Michigan, will give his lecture on "The Rights of the Unborn Child" on Thursday, April 9th, in the high school building, instead of in January, as was previously announced in these columns.

Dr. Peterson's lecture will be given under the auspices of the Parents and Teachers' Association.

CLEANED UP MANY PRIZES

Charlevoix Birds Very Conspicuous at Petoskey Poultry Show.

E. I. Miller Winner of Silver Cup for Best Banded Rock Breeding Pen.

Charlevoix birds were very conspicuous at the Petoskey Poultry Show last week. E. I. Miller took everything in sight with his R. C. brown leghorns. The showing of banded rocks was exceptionally strong and Charlevoix birds won most of the prizes offered. Following are the winnings of the various exhibitors from this city:

Kinglet Banded Rocks—E. I. Miller, 1, 2, 3, cock; 2, 4, cockerels; 1, 2, hens, cockerel bred; 1, 2, 3, 4, pullets, cockerel bred; 1 and 2, cockerel bred breeding pens. Also winner of the silver cup offered by the association for the best breeding pen in this class.

Banded Rocks—Dr. J. A. Auld, 1, 2, cockerel, pullet bred; 1, cock, 1, hen; 1, cock, cockerel bred; 2, pullet; 2, breeding pen.

R. C. Rhode Island Reds—Dr. J. A. Auld, 3, pullet.

White Wyandotte—R. C. Korth, 3, hen; 2, cockerel.

R. C. Brown Leghorns—L. E. Benton, 1, 2, 3, hen; 1, 2, cockerels; 1, 2, 3, pullets; 1st pen.

White Plymouth Rocks—R. C. Korth, 2, cock; 2, cockerel; 1, 2, hens; 3, 4, pullets; 1st pen.

Concert Was Fine.

The concert Saturday night in the M. E. Church by the Apollo Sextet of Albion College was the juiciest squeezed from the cluster of the ages. Every number was dreamy sweet and rested the heart like a rare day in June.

The audience was large, but the monetary consideration dwindled in the dark when measured by the inspiration these young men imparted.

Not a Legal Holiday.

The conversation ran like this: One member of a party of three was speaking of legal holidays and mentioned several, including the Fourth of July. One member contradicted the statement that the Fourth was a legal holiday. The party who originally made the statement insisted that it certainly was. The other retorted by saying that "maybe it was, but you could not show him where it was mentioned in the Bible."

MISS PUTNAM NEW YEAR BRIDE

Daughter of Former Congregational Pastor Married by Her Father.

Unique and Impressive Service and Exquisite Surroundings Made Wedding Beautiful.

The following from the Ludington Daily News gives in detail the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Putnam, the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Halden A. Putnam, former pastor of the Congregational church in this city. Miss Putnam has a host of friends in Charlevoix who wish her a happy journey through life.

"In the presence of a large crowd of assembled friends the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Putnam, the lovely and talented daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. A. Putnam, and Ed. Malcolm Edward Miller was solemnized at five o'clock to the afternoon of New Year's Day at the Congregational church.

"The church had been made beautiful with decorations of white and green by the ladies of the congregation. The altar rail was almost completely hidden behind a profusion of ferns, white tuberoses and lilies, white a bank of ferns and evergreens tastefully arranged at the rear of the rostrum formed a most artistic altar before which the vows were pledged.

"As the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin pealed forth from the organ the groom, preceded by the bride's father, approached the altar from the rear entrance of the auditorium, while the other members of the bridal party advanced from the front of the church.

"The bride, a lovely vision in white, was matted save by the ring-bearer and the ushers, who carried white ribbons entwined with smilax and grouped themselves so that the bride and her little ring-bearer were surrounded as in a charmed circle by the ribbon wreath.

"The words of a marriage service composed by the bride and groom, yet in conformity with the church service, were pronounced by the bride's father with a double ring ceremony, uniting these 'twain' with a service of once impressive and unique.

"Following the ceremony an informal reception was held in the church parlors, where the friends awaited themselves of the opportunity to express their congratulations and good wishes. Mr. and Mrs. Miller left on the evening train for Grand Rapids. Mr. Miller is engaged as efficiency expert for the Stearns Salt & Lumber Company and has acquired an enviable position in the social and business circles of the city. Both he and his bride have exceptional musical talent finely trained. Mrs. Miller is a graduate of the musical conservatory of Oberlin and after serving for some time as musical instructor in the public high school of Saginaw was director of the musical department of Benzonia academy. Dedicating health compelled her, to rest for a time, so that since her father accepted the pastorate in Ludington she has been at home and the people of Ludington have thus had opportunity to learn to know and love her. Upon their return from a brief wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Miller will be at home at 233 North Harrison street.

LESS RED TAPE

New Election Law Now in Effect—Voters Should Remember Dates.

From now the red tape concerning the election has been practically done away with, having been changed at the last session of the legislature. The enrollment features are discontinued entirely.

The dates that every voter should know are as follows:

April 4—Registration day.

April 6—Election day.

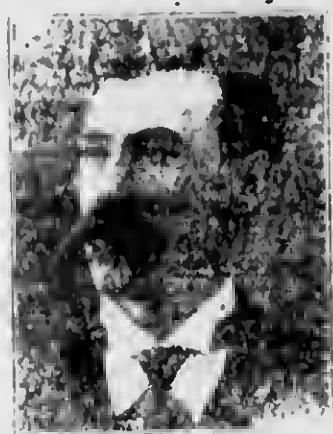

August 25—General fall primaries. Within ten days of primaries the county candidates elect chairman and secretary of county committee of which their party is affiliated.

Within fifteen days from primary the county conventions are held.

Within forty days from primary the state convention must be held.

October 4—Fall registration day.

November 3—Fall election.

CHAPTER XIII The Burglary at Gilder's.

THE entrance of the butler brought the inspector's thoughts back to the matter in hand.

"My man," he said authoritatively, "I want you to go up to the roof and open the scuttle. You'll find some men waiting in there. Bring them down here. They're police officers. You get 'em down here, and then you go to bed and stay there till morning. Understand?"

The butler looked at his master for guidance. Receiving a nod, he said, "Very well, sir."

"How do you know they're going to break into the house tonight?" Gilder demanded of Burke. "For do you only think they're going to break into the house?"

"I know they are. I fixed it."

"You did?"

"Sure; did it through a stool pigeon."

"Oh, an informer?" Gilder interrupted, a little dubiously.

"Yes," Burke agreed; "stool pigeon is the police name for him. Really he's the vilest thing that crawls."

"But if you think that," Gilder expostulated, "why do you have any thing to do with that sort of person?"

"Because it's good business," the inspector replied. "We know he's a spy and a traitor and that every time he comes near us we ought to use a disinfectant. But we deal with him just the same because we have to. Now the stool pigeon in this trick is a swab."

"English crook," he went on to Gilder yesterday with a scheme to rob your house. He tried out Mary Turner, too, but she told Carson to leave it alone. But he met Griggs afterward and agreed to pull it off. Griggs got word to me that it's coming off tonight, and so, you see, Mr. Gilder, that's how I know."

"I see," Gilder admitted without any enthusiasm. "But why do you have your men come down over the roof?"

"It wasn't safe to bring them in the front way. It's a cinch the house is being watched. I wish you would let me have your latch key. I want to come back and make this collar my self."

"But why not stay, now that you are here?"

"Suppose some of them saw me coming in? There wouldn't be anything doing until after they saw me go out again."

The hall door opened, and the butler entered the room. Behind him came Cassidy and two other detectives in plain clothes. At a word from his master the disturbed Thomas with drew.

"Now," Burke went on briskly as the door closed behind the servant, "where could these men stay out of sight until they're needed?"

There followed a little discussion which ended in the selection of a storeroom at the end of the passage on the ground floor.

"And now, Mr. Gilder," the inspector said energetically, "I'm going to give you the same tip I gave your man. Go to bed and stay there."

"But the boy," Gilder protested. "What about him? He's the one thing of importance to me."

"If he says anything more about going to Chicago just you let him go. That's all. It's the best place for him for the next few days."

"You're in charge here," Burke said to Cassidy, "and I hold you responsible. I'm coming back to get him myself, and I'll call you when you're wanted. You'll wait in the storeroom out there and don't make a move till you hear from me, unless I get a call from Griggs. He's got a whistle, and he'll use it if necessary. Got that straight?" Cassidy nodded an emphatic understanding of the directions.

As the men left the room Burke turned again to Gilder.

"Just one thing more," he said. "After I've gone I want you to stay up for a half hour anyhow, with the lights burning. Do you see? I want to be sure to give the Turner woman time to get here while that gang is at work."

Gilder scrupulously followed the directions of the police inspector. He easily had remained in the library until the allotted time was elapsed. He hidged from place to place, his mind heavy with distress under the shadow that threatened to blight the life of his cherished son. Finally, with a sense of relief he put out the light and went to his chamber.

His thoughts were most with his son and ever as he thought of Dick in fury waxed against the woman who had ensnared the boy in her plotting.

Mary Was Utterly Wretched.

for vengeance on himself. And into his thoughts now crept a doubt, one that alarmed his sense of justice. A horrible suspicion that he had misjudged Mary Turner crept into his brain and would not go out. He fought it with all the strength of him, and that was much, but ever it abode there.

Mary Turner herself, too, was in a condition utterly wretched, and for the same cause. Dick Gilder. That some of the father's suffering was hers as well. She had won her ambition of years, revenge on the man who had sent her to prison. And now the price of it was a torture for the puppet of her plan, the son had suddenly become the chief thing in her life.

She had given it for granted that he would leave her after he came to know that her marriage to him was only a device to bring shame on his father. Instead he loved her. That fact soon of the secret of her distress. He loved her. More, he dared believe, and to assert boldly that she loved him. Had he acted otherwise the matter would have been simple enough. But he loved her—loved her still, though he knew the shame that had clouded her life, knew the motive that had led her to accept him as a husband. More by a sublime audacity he declared that she loved him.

There came a thrill in her heart each time she thought of that—that she loved him. The idea was monstrous, of course, and yet—here as always, she broke off, a hot flush blazing in her cheeks.

Mary Turner was just ready for bed when a note came by a messenger who waited for no answer, as he told the yawning maid. As Mary read the roughly scrawled message, she was caught in the grip of terror. The man who had saved her from death had yielded to temptation. As he had saved her so she must save him. She hurried into the gown she had just put off. Then she went to the telephone book and searched for the number of Gilder's house.

A few moments before Mary Turner received the note from the hands of the sleepy maid one of the leaves of the occasional window in the library of Richard Gilder's town house swung open under the persuasive influence of a thin rod of steel, cunningly used and the dark room stepped confidently into the dark room.

For a space he rested motionless, listening intently. Reassured, he drew out an electric torch and set it glowing. A little disk of light touched here and there about the room, traveling very swiftly and in methodical circles. Satisfied by the survey, Garson crossed to the hall doorway, where he listened for any sound of life without and found none. The door into the passage that led to the storeroom where the detectives waited next engaged his businesslike attention. And here again there was naught to provoke his suspicion.

It seemed to him that everything was in readiness for the coming of his associates. There remained only to give them the signal in the room around the corner where they waited at a telephone. He seated himself in Gilder's chair at the desk and drew the telephone to him. "Give me 333 Bryant," he said. There was a little wait. Then an answer in a voice he knew came over the wire.

Garson picked up a penholder from the desk and began tapping lightly on the rim of the transmitter. It was a code message in Morse. In the room around the corner the tapping sounded clearly, ticking out the message that the way was free for the thieves' company.

For a final safeguard Garson searched for and found the telephone bell box and unscrewed the bells, which he placed on the desk. He then took his pistol from his hip pocket and thrust it into the right-side pocket of his coat. Once again, now, he produced the electric torch and lighted it as he extinguished the lamp on the table.

He then went to the door into the hall, opened it and leaving it ajar made his way in silence to the outer doorway. The doors there were freed of their bolts, and one of them swung wide. So slowly had the affair been timed that hardly was the door open before the three men slipped in and stood mute and motionless in the hall while Garson refastened the doors. Then Garson waited quietly back to the library. Behind him, with steps as noiseless as his own, came the three men.

When all were gathered in the library Garson shut the hall door, touched the button in the wall beside it, and the handbell threw its radiant light on the group.

Griggs was in evening clothes, seeming a very elegant young gentleman. Indeed, but his two companions were of grosser type as far as appearances went. One, Dacey, thin and wiry, with a ferret face; the other, Chicago Red, a burly ruffian, whose stolid features nevertheless exhibited something of half-sullen good nature.

"Everything all right so far," Garson said rapidly. He turned to Griggs and pointed toward the heavy hangings that shaded the occasional window. "Are those the things we want?" he demanded.

Dacey With a Ferret Face.

"Yes," was the answer. "Well, then, we've got to get busy." Before he could add a direction he was halted by a soft buzzing from the telephone. For an instant he hesitated while the others regarded him doubtfully.

"We've got to take a chance," Garson went to the desk and put the receiver to his ear.

There came again the faint tapping of some one at the other end of the line, signaling a message in the Morse code. An expression of blank amazement, which grew in a flash to deep concern, showed on Garson's face as he listened tensely.

"Why, this is Mary calling," he muttered.

"Mary?" Griggs cried.

"Yes, she's on," Garson interpreted a moment later as the tapping ceased for a little. He translated in a loud whisper as the irregular ticking noise sounded again.

"I shall be there almost at once. I am sending this message from the drug store around the corner. Have some one open the door for me immediately."

"She's coming over?" Griggs cried incredulously.

"No, I'll stop her," Garson declared firmly.

But when after tapping a few words the finger paused for the reply to sound again.

"She don't answer," he exclaimed.

"On her way already," Griggs suggested. "I'll let her in." He drew a small torch from the skirt pocket of his coat and crossed to the hall doorway.

Garson nodded assent.

"Why did she have to come?" Garson muttered, filled with forebodings. "If anything should go wrong now."

He turned back toward the door just as it opened, and Mary started into the room, with Griggs following closely in her heels.

"What do you want here?" he demanded, with peremptory sarcasm.

In his voice, which was a tone he had never hitherto used in addressing her.

There was only tender pleading in Mary's voice, though her words were an arraignment.

Boyer City Grants 10 Year Franchise to Electric Company.

By a vote of 327 to 96 Boyne City at an election held Saturday granted the Boyne City Electric Company a 10 year franchise. Only 60 per cent of the votes cast was needed to carry the election.

The terms of the new privilege are most favorable to the city, both for public and private lighting. A meter rental of 25 cents per month has been done away with, the rates somewhat lowered and the city will have more street lights with a higher power for less money than formerly.

The company gets its power from several big generator dynamos which are operated by water power two miles east of the city.

NEW YEAR WEDDINGS

Rev. C. E. Taggart Officiates at Two During the Past Week.

Mr. Clinton Bowen and Miss Sadie Hammond of Ironton were married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Hammond, Ironton, on New Year's night, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating. Miss Fannie Knudsen was bridesmaid, and Claud Bowen, brother of the groom, was best man. Little Miss Cleora Smith was ring-bearer and her sister Lenora was flower girl. The ceremony was witnessed by a large company of friends and relatives, who united in cordial wishes for the future happiness and prosperity of the young couple.

Mr. Day A. Ward of Maple Creek, Saskatchewan, Canada, and Miss Edith Gemmill of East Jordan were married at the Congregational parsonage in this city on Saturday, Jan. 3rd, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating.

Shoes repaired on the corner of State street and Mason. 523-pd.

Nearly Lost Finger.

Monday while sawing wood on a buzz saw, Swain Smith nearly lost his little finger on his left hand. In some manner the saw caught his mitten, drawing his hand onto the saw. The finger was badly cut, and would undoubtedly been taken off had it not been for the fact that a heavy ring deflected the course of the saw. The wound is a painful one.

Professors Were Approved.

At a meeting of the county road commissioners held at the court house January 2nd the profiles of the new East Jordan and Charlevoix, Boyne Falls and East, and Boyne City and Deer Lake roads, as made by County Engineer Winters, were approved by the commission and have been sent to the highway department at Lansing for their approval.

The commissioners also bought five wheel road scrapers, which had been used but a short time, for $110.

THE WASTE OF COAL.

Economists Say Fuel Should Be Coked Instead of Burned Whole.

If British engineers know what they are talking about, as presumably they do or they wouldn't be given so much space in the London Times, there are few more wasteful things than the ordinary whole coal fire. Made in the range, the open grate or the furnace, it results in a literal throwing away of money. The cheerful grate fire, says Henry Cunningham, multiplies the household coal bill by three, and the daily grist of 100 pounds now poured into the kitchen range might, under proper conditions, serve ten ranges instead of one.

Naturally one is curious as to these so called proper conditions. Well, the gist of the engineer's complaint is this: Coal is full of valuable things besides heat. Among these are tar, ammonia and benzol. There are a dozen commercial uses for tar, to say nothing of the so called coal tar products. The ammonia is invaluable for fertilizer, and benzol is a first class substitute for gasoline. Each ton of coal will yield about three gallons of benzol, one gallon of naphtha, two gallons of heavy oil, suitable for fuel, eighty pounds of pitch and twenty pounds of sulphate of ammonia. After all this has been extracted there will be left about three-fifths of a ton of semicoke, almost as good for heating purposes as the original coal.

The present popular method of coal disposal, in which this whole group of substances is burned up—and most of the virtually wasted—in household and factory, has at last excited the ire of engineers and economists. Apparently what they want us to do is to turn coke instead of coal for household heating and steam making.

A MIGHTY GUN LATHE.

Huge Machine For Turning and Boring Seacoast Cannon.

Those who live inland and, in fact, all who are not fairly familiar with the large guns used for seacoast defense can hardly appreciate the huge size of the lathe necessary to turn and bore them, says the American Machinist. The lathe being designed and built for the United States naval gunship at Washington by the Ames-Benson-Pond company at the Bureau works is the largest made. The lathe is so long that the preparations for its installation include the construction of a tunnel, extending out under a highway, as there was not room for it between the walls of the shop.

The lathe bed itself is 175 feet long and is made of five sections, but the total over all length, including projections at the end of the bed, brings it up to 187 feet. The middle portion of the bed on which the carriages travel has three broad shears, the total width being 108 inches, or nine feet, and the length 160 feet. The rest of the bed extends under what is called the turning bench, which has two shears. The total width of this is sixty-two inches and the length seventy-five feet. The weight of the machine complete with electrical equipment is 500,000 pounds, or 400 tons.

Floating Repair Shop.

A floating factory for ship repair work is planned by the British admiralty, and bids for its construction have been asked from shipbuilders. It is proposed to build a rectangular hull 450 feet in length and ninety feet broad, with square ends. This hull will support a superstructure containing a foundry, machine shop, boiler shop, electrical shop, blacksmith shop, pattern shop and other departments. The hull will be divided into water tight compartments which will be used for coal storage and for a steam power station, the whole current will be generated, supplying power to the various parts of the factory. Above the factory living accommodations will be provided for about 150 officers and men.—Engineering News.

The Charlevoix State Savings Bank made its stockholders happy on New Year's day by sending them dividend checks in the sum of $7.00 per share on their holdings. This seems a very satisfactory rate and shows well the prosperous condition of the bank. Besides this, the bank added considerable to its surplus which further strengthens the responsibility of the institution. The State bank now has over a quarter of a million dollars in resources.

NEW LAW FIRM

F. R. Williams of Elk Rapids Forms Partnership with E. N. Clink.

F. R. Williams has formed a partnership for the practice of law with E. N. Clink of East Jordan, one of the best known and strongest attorneys of Charlevoix county—certainly one who has a legal patronage as great as any other attorney of the county. Rob has for several years been regarded as a counsellor without a superior in all Northern Michigan and he has been retained by most of the strong companies of this and the adjoining counties. Surely they will make a strong team. Mr. Williams plans to be at his Elk Rapids office Monday and Saturday of each week. On other days he will be in East Jordan. He will continue his residence in Elk Rapids.—Elk Rapids Progress.

No State Aid For Her.

The relative value of a woman and a hog was illustrated in Wisconsin recently. A woman wrote to the governor that she had a large family to support and was suffering with tuberculosis and decided state aid. About the same time a letter was received from a man who desired aid for a hog which showed symptoms of cholera. The governor sent word to the woman that no appropriation had been made for tuberculosis victims, and at the same time the man was hurriedly dispatched with a supply of cholera serum to the rescue of his hog. This incident tells its own story without further comment.

JOIN BANKING ASSOCIATION

First National Bank of Petoskey Makes Application For Membership.

At a special meeting held last week, the First National Bank of Petoskey made formal application to become a member of the new federal reserve banking system.

The bank is the only national bank in the county, and being a member of the association will be of great benefit to surrounding small cities and towns. The bank will be permitted to make loans on farm property on five years time, with a proper margin of safety, but its notes must be 90 days time in order to give the paper that the reserve bank will accept for redemption, and its cash reserve—requirements are reduced from 15 to 12 per cent, thus allowing every member bank to loan up more closely than before.

Under the new arrangement the bank will have no fear but that it can get all the currency it may need as $700,000,000 of currency is being printed in Washington providing the necessary currency for any emergency that may arise.

CAN SECURE LIBRARY

School Districts are Able to Have Good Books for Nothing.

Any school district which does not have an excellent library in its schoolhouse for the use of the boys and girls can lay the blame to an unprogressive teacher or school board, as the Michigan State Library will send a library of fifty volumes to any school district which will pay the freight and cartage from Lansing and return. As the cost to the most distant district is not more than $1.25 the traveling libraries are available to all. The books may be kept for six months and then returned and a new set secured. As the books are well selected and of a type which appeal to children they make an important equipment for the schools.

Framed copies of the best masterpieces will also be loaned by the State Library under similar conditions. Applications for both the libraries and the pictures should be addressed to Mrs. Mary C. Spencer, State Librarian, Lansing.

BROKE HIS NECK

John Flickinger of Central Lake Struck by a Flying Bolt While Sawing Lath.

A tragedy was enacted near Central Lake Christmas Day that has caused widespread sympathy and touched the hearts of many people. John Flickinger, who lives about three miles east of that city, was sawing lath with a circular saw and was running a rock elm bolt through, when the saw pinched. He tried to loosen it, but as he freed it it caught on the teeth of the saw and was thrown with great force. The bolt struck him in the throat, directly over the Adam's apple. He died instantly, as his neck was broken by the blow.

His son, who was with him at the time of the accident, summoned medical assistance, but nothing could be done. Mr. Flickinger was an honored and respected member of the community and leaves a wife and eleven children.

DROWNED WHILE SKATING

Breaking Through Thin Ice Cause of Death of Two Small Boys.

The first drowning accident from breaking through thin ice while skating occurred last week in Echo township, Antrim county.

Walter Migne, aged 11, and Leroy Ferec, aged 7, were skating on what is known as Fontain or Echo lake. Leroy did not return at supper time and his mother became anxious about him. The alarm was given and a search instituted. Nothing was found but a mitten and a cap belonging to one of the missing boys. The next morning the search was resumed and the bodies were found in ten feet of water.

It is supposed that the younger lad was skating too near open water and broke through and the other boy tried to rescue him.

WITHIN THE LAW

"Joe, you lied to me!"
"That can be settled later!" the man snapped. His jaw was thrust forward obstinately, and his clear eyes sparkled defiantly.

"You are fools, all of you!" Mary cried. "Yes, fools! This is burglary. I can't protect you if you are caught. How can I? Oh, come!" She held out her hands pleadingly toward Garson and her voice dropped to a whispering "Joe, Joe, you must get away from this house at once, all of you! Joe, make them go!"

"It's too late," was the stern answer. "We're here now, and we'll stay till the business is done."

"Joe, for my sake!"
"I can't quit now until we've got what we came here after," he declared roughly.

"Boys, let's get away! Please, oh, please!"

"This is Mary calling," Garson muttered.

please! Joe, for God's sake!" Her tone was a sob.

"I'm going to see this through," said Garson doggedly.

With a gesture of despair she turned away toward the door by which she had entered.

"You can't go," Garson said sharply. "You might be caught."

"And if I were," Mary demanded in a flash of indignation, "do you think I'd tell?"

"Of course not, Mary. I know you would go up for life first. Just the same, you can't take any chances. We'll all get away in a minute and you'll come with us." He turned to the men and spoke with swift authority.

"Come," he said to Dorey, "you get to the light switch there by the hall door. If you hear me snap my fingers, turn 'em off. Understand?"

With instant obedience the man went to his station by the hall door. "Red," Garson ordered, "you get to that door." He pointed to the one that gave on the passageway against which he had set the chair tilted. As the man obeyed Garson gave further instructions.

"If any one comes in that way get him and get him quick. You understand? Don't let him cry out or make a sound."

Chicago Red held up his huge hand, widely open.

"Not a chance," he declared proudly, "with that over his mug."

"Now, let's get to work," Garson continued eagerly.

Mary spoke with the hitherness of defeat.

"Listen, Joe! If you do this I'm through with you, I quit!"

"If this goes through," he countered, "we'll all quit. That's why I'm doing it. I'm sick of the game!"

CHAPTER XIV.

The Noiseless Death.

RED suddenly made a slight hissing noise that arrested the attention of the others and held them in motionless silence.

"I hear something," he whispered. He went to the keyhole of the door leading into the passage. Then he whispered again, "and it's coming this way."

At the words Garson snapped his fingers. The room was plunged in darkness.

There was absolute silence in the library after the turning of the switch that brought darkness. Long seconds passed, then a little noise—the knob of the passage door turning. As the door swung open there came a gasping breath from Mary, for she saw framed in the faint light that came from the single burner in the corridor the slender form of her husband, Dick Gilder.

The next instant he had stepped within the room and Chicago Red had pounced on his victim, the huge hand clapped tight over the young man's mouth. There came a sound of scuffling feet, and that was all. Finally the big man's voice came triumphantly:

"I've got him!"

"I hear something," whispered Chicago Red.

"It's Dick!" The cry came as a wave of despair from the girl.

At the same moment Garson flashed his torch, and the light fell swiftly on young Gilder, bowed to a kneeling posture before the couch, half throttled by Chicago Red. Close beside him, Mary looked down in wordless despair over this final disaster of the night.

Garson retired a step farther before he spoke his command, so that, though he held the torch still, he, like the others, was in shadow.

"Get away, Red!"

The fellow let go his grip.

Freed of that strangling embrace Dick stumbled blindly to his feet. Then, mechanically, his hand went to the lamp on the table back of the couch. When the mellow light streamed forth he uttered an ejaculation of stark amazement, for his gaze was riveted on the face of the woman he loved.

"Good God!" It was a cry of torture wrung from his soul of souls.

Mary swayed toward him a little, palpitant with fear—fear for herself, for all of them, most of all for him.

"Hush, hush!" she panted warningly. "Oh, Dick, you don't understand!"

"I understand this," he said brokenly at last. "Whether you ever did it before or not, this time you have broken the law." A sudden inspiration came to him.

"But now you do realize," the young man said quietly, "the thing is done. If we make a mistake it is for us to bring happiness out of that error."

"Oh, can't you see?" came the stricken lament. "I'm a jailbird!"

"But you love me—you do love me, I know!" The young man spoke with joyous certainty, for some indication of her voice had told the truth to his heart. "Nothing else mattered. 'But now, to come back to this hole we're in here. Don't you understand at last that you can't beat the law? If you've caught here tonight, where would you get off caught here with a gang of burglars? Why didn't you go to Chicago, as you planned?"

"Planned? With whom?"

"Why, with Burke."

"Who told you that I had arranged any such thing?"

"Burke himself did."

"When?" Mary was standing rigid now, and the rare color flamed in her cheeks. Her eyes were blazing.

"Less than an hour ago."

"Where?"

"In this room."

"What was he doing here?"

"Talking to my father."

The seemingly simple answer appeared the last straw to the girl's burden of frenzied suspicion. Her voice cut fiercely into the quiet of the room.

"Joe, turn on that light! I want to see the face of every man in this room."

"The blaze of the chandelier flamed brilliantly over all. Griggs moved stealthily a little nearer the door into the passage.

But Mary's next words came wholly as a surprise.

the wall.

worth while? Don't you see that?"

There was no word from the girl. Her breast was moving convulsively.

"Mary, Mary!" he cried. "You've got to change. Don't be so hard. Give the woman in you a chance."

The girl's form became rigid as she fought for self control.

"I am what I am," she said sharply. "I can't change. Keep your promise now, and let's get out of this."

"You can change," Dick went on impetuously. "Mary, haven't you ever wanted the things that other women have—shelter and care and the big things of life, the things worth while? They're all ready for you now, Mary. And what about me? After all, you've married me. Now, it's up to you to give me my chance to make good. I've never amounted to much. I've never tried much. I shall, now, if you will have it so. Mary—if you'll help me, I'll still come out all right. I know that, so do you, Mary. Only you must help me. I need you, and you need me. Come away with me!"

"No, no!" cried Mary. "I married you not because I loved you, but to repay your father the wrong he had done me. I wouldn't let myself even think of you, and then—I realized that I had spoiled your life!"

"No, not spoiled it, Mary! Blessed it! We must prove that yet."

"Yes, spoiled it," the wife went on passionately. "If I had understood, if I could have dreamed that I could ever care—Oh, Dick, I would never have married you for anything in the world!"

"But now you do realize," the young man said quietly, "the thing is done. If we make a mistake it is for us to bring happiness out of that error."

Mary's word came with accusing, rebuke.

There was another single step made by Griggs toward the door.

Mary's eye caught the movement, and her lips soundlessly formed the name.

"Griggs!"

The man strove to carry off the situation, though he knew well that he stood in mortal peril. He came a little toward the girl who had accused him of treachery.

"He's lying to you," he cried fiercely, with a scornful gesture toward Dick Gilder. "I tell you those tapes are worth a million dollars."

Mary's answer was virulent in its sudden burst of hate.

"You stool pigeon! You did this for Burke!"

"I swear I didn't! I swear it!"

"It's a frameup!" Garson broke in furiously. His tones came in a deadened roar of wrath.

On the instant, aware that further altercation could be of no avail, Griggs awaraged defiance.

"And what if it is true?" he drawled with a resumption of his aristocratic manner. He plucked the police whistle from his waistcoat pocket and raised it to his lips.

He moved too slowly. Garson had pulled the pistol from his pocket, had pressed the trigger. There came a spurt of flame. There was no sound—save perhaps a faint clicking noise.

But the man with the whistle at his lips suddenly ceased movement, trembled horribly and in the next instant crashed to the floor, dead.

In the first second of the tragedy Dick had not understood. But the falling of Griggs before the leveled weapon of the other man, there to lie in that ghastly immobility, made him understand. He leaped toward Garson, would have wrested the pistol from the other's grasp. In the struggle he fell to the floor.

Before either could pick it up Chicago Red called his warning.

"Somebody's opening the front door!"

Garson sprang to the octagonal window as Dick took possession of the pistol.

"The street's empty! We must jump for it, come on, Mary," he cried.

Already Chicago Red had snatched off the lights of the chandelier, had sprung to the window, thrown open a pane of it and had vanished into the night, with Mary at his heels.

A Garson would have called out to the girl again he was interrupted by Dick.

"She couldn't make it, Garson!" he declared coolly and resolutely. "You go. I'll take care of her!"

"If she's caught!"—There was an indescribable menace in the forger's half uttered threat.

"She won't be."

"If she is! I'll get you, that's all!"

Garson said as he dropped out of sight.

MINISTERIAL ordination has for centuries been a bone of contention. Indirectly it has led to bloody persecutions. Thank God; those days are gone, so far as the majority of Christians are concerned. And yet, because the masses do not clearly understand the subject of ordination, there is always danger of a recurrence of persecution along this line. All denominations have shared in persecutions based upon misconceptions of ministerial ordination.

Ordination does not relate to a ceremony, or form, as many suppose. It signifies an authorization, a commission, to preach

Clyde Conner, travelling salesman out of Chicago, is spending a short time in the city.

Frank Hinton of Rock Island is visiting at the home of R. A. Emrey on Clinton street.

John Cheney of Traverse City, formerly of Charlevoix, was in the city Tuesday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenben Pearl and son of Marion, were visitors at the home of Ed. Cook Sunday.

Jimmy Gallagher, aged 49 years, of St. James, died Tuesday evening at his home on the island.

Miss Mary Kiretiner, who has been a guest at the home of H. Cooper, left for her home in Saginaw Saturday.

Mrs. O. Mayhew of Greenville, Michigan, spent the past week at the home of Mose Bowdish, returning home Friday.

Clare Conner, Hugo Hampton and Cleland Mayne returned to Ann Arbor where they attend the U. of M. Monday morning.

J. J. Hatlett returned Friday from Ottawa, Ohio, where he has been employed at the sugar factory since the second of October.

Allen Campbell left Friday for Detroit where he has employment for the winter. Mrs. Campbell and little daughter will join him soon.

The home of Mose Bowdish was the scene of a home gathering New Years day, when he entertained four sisters and a brother at dinner.

In next week's issue of the Courier will be published in full the paper read by Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, on his recent trip to Washington, D. C., as one of the 1000 delegates to the local option convention. The paper is a lengthy one, and will be of great interest to our readers.

The corner stone of the handsome new postoffice at Potosky was laid Monday with impressive ceremonies. The new building will be one of the most beautiful in the country, and the ornamental parts will surpass in beauty those of other buildings of its kind in the state. The services were held under the auspices of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Michigan, and a number of our local Masons attended.

Oil For the Springs.

There is a little tool made and sold at a small figure which is designed to spread the leaves so that oil may be inserted between them. It will also permit of enough spread to allow a strip of emery cloth to be inserted so that the rust that has accumulated may be taken off. This should be done before the oil is applied. In case the rust is heavy it is a good plan to inject a liberal supply of kerosene to cut the rust somewhat. When oiling endeavor to force in a little graphite as well, as this will find its way into the small pores and uneven spots and will at the same time not only serve to keep out dirt and water, but is a splendid lubricant as well.

Carbonic Acid Snow.

Carbonic acid snow (solid carbon dioxide) is now being used successfully at the West London hospital by Dr. Reginald Atkinson in the treatment of many diseases. Moles are eradicated by it, warts removed by two or three applications, and birthmarks—except the so-called "port wine stains"—yield to it. Chronic, localized patches of eczema are healed by it; it is useful in many cases of rodent ulcer; in trachoma it is about twice as rapid as any other cure, not nearly so painful and can be used without risk.

A Forge Clay Mixture.

Mix thoroughly together in a dry state ten pounds of the clay, ten pounds of cast iron turnings, half a pound of horse salt and one-quarter pound of sal ammoniac. Make this into a mortar by adding water, constantly stirring in the meantime. The mixture dries hard and will outlast any material for a forge.

Laws Against Beggars.

Begging was a capital offense in England in the days of Henry VIII., when the laws were very severe against beggars, and under a statute passed in that reign any one caught begging for the first time, being neither aged nor infirm, was whipped at the cart's tail. If caught a second time his ear was slit or bored through with a hot iron. If caught a third time he suffered death as a felon unless some honest person having £10 in goods or 10 shillings in land or some householder approved by the justices would take the offender into his service for two years, entering into a bond of £10. So the law of England remained for sixty years.

Neatly Managed.

"Are you sure your husband will stay awake and look after the baby?" asked one woman.
"Oh, yes," replied the other. "I gave him a Welsh rabbit for dinner; that won't let him sleep a wink."—Washington Star.

Bearded Women in France.

According to a French law passed in the eighteenth century, any woman growing a beard has, ipso facto, the right to dress like a man.

SHOULD CORRECT ASSESSMENT ROLL

Errors are Growing More Costly to City and County Each Year.

UP TO THE CITY ASSESSOR

Committee of Twenty-One Urged to Take Up Matter At Once.

Delinquent and Charged Back Taxes in 1913 Amount to $1143.48—Disputed Road in Hayes Township Endorsed.

The meeting of the Committee of Twenty-One last Friday evening was one of the most interesting of many that have been held and brought out the fact more apparent than ever that this organization was planned to be the clearing house of ideas and suggestions from all those who have ideas to present, no matter on which side they stand. No question comes up concerning city or business affairs but at least has two sides. A good majority of the members were present and after the minutes had been approved J. L. Crane was chosen to preside.

Several of the committees reported on questions that had been assigned to them and some discussion followed. One of the actions of the committee was to endorse the building of the much fought over road in Hayes township running almost parallel with the Pere Marquette railroad. Members of the committee individually pledged themselves to support the project by either financial support or labor.

A committee was also appointed to devise ways and means for the publication of a booklet for Charlevoix to be distributed throughout the country for advertising purposes. The committee will gather data for the booklet and report at some future meeting.

Other important subjects were discussed. County Treasurer D. S. Payton called the attention of the committee to the condition of the assessment rolls of the city of Charlevoix and the county in general.

According to a statement made by Mr. Payton, the city assessment roll is in a deplorable condition and growing worse every year. For the year 1910 the total amount of returned taxes amounted to $93.12; in 1911, $987.86; in 1912, $730.01; and in 1913, $1143.48. These figures cover the entire county and show a large percentage of increase each year. Of this amount the city of Charlevoix is credited her share, not more than the other cities of the county but more by far than should be if the roll was in proper shape.

Mr. Payton states that the taxes are rejected on the 30th day of June each year. He also reminds all taxpayers to the auditor general of the state in four quarterly settlements. The county has to pay interest on all charged back taxes and in many instances they run back for a number of years. Upon being asked the reason for the large number of returned taxes he states that there are various reasons and named as the leading ones that descriptions are wrong, number of blocks where property is located are not given, caption wrong, and various other reasons.

In the city of Charlevoix errors have been made on lots in Mason's addition. Some located in Mason's addition were listed as being in Mason's second addition, and those in Mason's second addition were listed on the roll as being in Mason's addition. Some were even listed in Mason's first addition, an addition that is not in existence. Conditions likewise exist in the various additions and plots of other cities in the county.

The county treasurer each year is obliged to list all rejected and charged back taxes to the townships and cities to whom they belong and present them to the board of supervisors, where they are ordered re-assessed if possible. In some cases it is found that descriptions have been assessed more than once and cannot be re-assessed, in which case the city loses all local taxes and must pay to the county treasurer state and county tax with added interest and expense.

The condition of the assessment rolls over the entire county are in bad condition at present and are growing worse as each year rolls by. A glance at the figures given above will show the increase of delinquent and charged back taxes.

Something must be done immediately regarding the matter, and Mr. Payton suggests that the only remedy is to have the roll corrected by some competent person who has access to the records and enough knowledge of them to make an absolutely correct roll. At present the city of Charlevoix has an extra blank tax roll. Take this blank roll and hire a competent man who will go through it and correct every description thereon. When this work is completed and the correct roll is made place it in the hands of the city treasurer for safe keeping. He also makes this suggestion: When the city assessor is appointed by the mayor, make him go before the council and swear that he is qualified to do the work and will give his personal attention to it, do the work himself and not employ incompetent help to copy the roll after the assessments have been made. If he will not do this do not appoint him, as there plenty of men in the city who are willing and able to do the work themselves and not depend upon employing help to do the copying.

Then after the roll is made let the assessor take it and copy the corrected descriptions in the regular assessment roll for the coming year and at the same time make all changes that have taken place since the roll was first corrected. After the roll has been copied by the assessor again place it into the hands of the city treasurer for safe keeping until the board of review meets. The board of review will then have a correct roll to work from and can compare the roll as made by the city assessor with the certified correct roll and practically eliminate all mistakes that may have been made in copying descriptions. In other words, one roll will act as a check on the other and the result will be a correct assessment roll, consequently no charged back nor disputed taxes.

The condition of assessment rolls for both cities and townships throughout the county have been a source of trouble and annoyance for many years and it is time some steps should be taken regarding them. Let the city of Charlevoix take the lead in this county and for the first time in years turn over to the treasurer a correct tax roll this spring.

A. M. BURDICK SELLS HIS STORE

C. S. Dodge Takes Possession This Week—Formerly In Business Here.

Mr. Burdick Remains in This City for the Present—Mr. Dodge Takes Over an Established Trade.

Monday morning C. S. Dodge, a former business man in this city, purchased the store, building, lot and stock of groceries of A. M. Burdick. Mr. Dodge will take possession this week. The deal has been hanging fire for some time.

Mr. Burdick has been in business in this city for the past ten years and has established a good trade. The cessation of business activities is regretted by his many friends.

Mr. Dodge, who was formerly in the tailoring business, is well known and his success is assured in this new undertaking. Mr. Burdick will assist Mr. Dodge for the present until the latter becomes more thoroughly acquainted with the business and customers.

Will Hold Recital.

Friday, January 16th, at four p. m. Miss Laura Brown and Florence Meggison will give a studio recital at Saint Mary's School of Music, the occasion being their promotion from the second to the third grade. An interesting program has been arranged, to which all the music pupils of Saint Mary's and their parents are cordially invited.

Coming Thursday, January 29th.

Thursday, January 29th, is the date when J. Leahy the Optometrist will be at Baker's Inn. He will remain one day. Headache and dizziness cured. Crossed eyes straightened without an operation. Fitting children's eyes a specialty.

LOCAL OPTIONITES PREDICT A SALOONLESS NATION IN 1920

In United States Today There Are Nine States Wholly Dry, Ten Nearly So, and Six With Fifty Per Cent of Their Population Living in Prohibition Territory and Many Ready for National Prohibition.

The following report was given at a union temperance mass-meeting of all the churches of Charlevoix, by Dr. A. M. Williamson, Sunday evening, Dec. 23, 1913, at the Congregational church. The house was packed and the greatest interest manifested. Dr. Taggart, pastor of the church, in introducing the speaker, remarked on the interest that is being taken in the subject of the evening—National Prohibition—which would not have been thought of but a few years ago.

Dr. Williamson then spoke as follows: Notes of my trip to Washington as a member of the committee of one thousand appointed by the Anti-Saloon League of America.

The splendid audience I see before me tonight reminds me of one of Sam Small's stories. He told of a small boy, someone, being the only child in the family, heard to remark that he wished he was two small dogs so that he could go in the yard and play with himself. This is not true of the temperance hosts of today—they have lots of company.

All things must have a beginning. The epoch-making event which you came here tonight to learn more about, took its inception in the mind and heart of one who is conceded to be the founder of the Anti-Saloon League. This consecrated man made it his life work to coalesce the moral forces of this country to one federal movement against the saloon.

It is well within the memory of most of us here, when "Rags" (Rosenbaum) twenty years ago, began this movement twenty years ago. He said he borrowed money on his watch for his first printing bill. The tremendous onward march of the cause has astonished its own followers. Today we have more than six million within fifty percent of their population, living in prohibition territory, twenty-seven states now ready for National Prohibition.

We all heard four or five years ago after our own county went dry with a majority that surprised everybody, that this reform movement was but a ripple on the surface of the sea, but today the liquor forces are heaving to white for mercy, with knees knocking together and the "handwriting on the wall" spelling out their doom. It happened that 1913 marked the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the Anti-Saloon League of America, so as you all know now a grand jubilee convention was held at Columbus, Ohio, only a few weeks ago. Those of you who were fortunate enough to hear the report of that famous meeting delivered by our own Charlevoix delegate, Dr. Walker, caught something of the inspiring vision he brought back to us from that galaxy of grand climaxes.

It was determined at this jubilee convention to take another big forward step into a larger field. The prohibition cohorts were not satisfied with merely making townships and villages, cities, counties and states dry, making rapid progress with all of these units, so they decided to take for their motto, "On to Washington." So a committee of one thousand was appointed by this convention to carry out this commission. They were picked from every state and territory in the Union, with the idea of bringing to the attention of our leading legislators our tremendous earnestness. December 10 became the County as Dry as we have organized Congress in behalf of the Nation the day set to march on to the capitol.

We all met in Detroit December 9th, where we took a special Pullman sleeper to the M. C. station at 11:55 a. m.

I must tell you something of the men who went from Michigan and the time we had on our way. Our State Superintendent, J. P. Burke, chartered the crowd and a better fellow never breathed, wholesome and enthusiastic. State Senator Lugeters of Holland, a big good-natured business man with a slight Holland accent of whom his district may feel proud in our state senate. Mr. Woodworth, banker at Iron River. On account of annual meeting of stockholders. Mr. Scott, one of the committee and head of the Iron Motor Co., of Lansing, could not go, so no seat in his place Mr. A. R. Hardy, a real estate man of large business interests from the Capitol city.

Rev. Dr. Joffries, pastor of the largest Presbyterian church in Detroit, and with him Dr. J. A. Vance, another noted Detroit Divine, best known for his controversy with Ed. Barnett, the Detroit Alderman saloon keeper politician.

Mr. J. C. Merriam of Deckerville, a prosperous business man. Dr. C. A. Parmelee of Petoskey, a dry dentist, backbone of the "Drys" of Petoskey which reminds me that we have three good dry dentists in this town. (Wonder why dentists are so dry, or so many dry dentists probably because they look down in the mouth so much they don't like getting beer and whiskey second-hand.)

A Mr. Parish, merchant of Sandusky, Mich. F. E. Cowan of Flint, manager of one of the big Buick shops and superintendent of the court street Methodist Sunday school.

We couldn't lose Rev. Geo. Morrow because he is so well known in Michigan for his breezy enthusiasm for the Anti-Saloon League. He was the author of our yell which the Michigan delegation made mighty good use of which which we punctuated the atmosphere at frequent intervals all the way to Washington, and many times after we got there. This was our yell:

"Who's here, we're here, we're here, we can; Michigan; M. A. S. L. Followed by two song choruses, Glory, Glory, Hallelujah—last line of Michigan's marching song. Then "We love her, the State of Michigan, and when we're through, we'll march right back to Michigan."

Mr. Brooks of Lima joined us at Toledo. We also had with us A. C. Ginnham, state salt inspector. F. J. Poole, head of a lumbering firm at Poplar. Grant Hudson, assistant state supt. of the S. L. Dr. A. R. Johns of Flint. Merritt Chandler of Presque Isle county. A. Laflue, merchant of Zeeland. Mr. Bonreum of Newberry. Dr. Christian of Owasco. Several others joined us in Washington.

After we left Toledo we all got together at one end of our Pullman and started a round table discussion, each giving some pertinent facts concerning the liquor traffic in his territory. While we were getting under way with this the conductor passed through our car looking after tickets and getting our reservations straightened out. During our discussion, he took up the subject in telling us "No liquor sold out the Pennsylvania line," which pleased us so we raised our yell.

Rev. Morrow quoted to us from Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Review in which a writer advised the liquor interests to get together and demand that the government shall set a time when the traffic shall be exterminated as those who were engaged in it were tired of slow death, dying by inches as it were.

Mr. Cowan of Flint, told us of the healthy local option organization they had there. Their plan was to admit as many as wanted to join and charge the membership $1 per annum. One delegate from San Jacinto gave the best report of all when he said that San Jacinto had the banner for the largest dry majority of any county in the state, 2,300 at their last election.

We all agreed with one of our speakers who said we must keep everlastingly on it, and one way to make telling hits at the enemy was by keeping up a steady stream at literature into their camp. It was suggested also that in counties like our own where we have access to the names of those who signed wet petitions to have these names all sorted out by our leaders in their respective localities who know the signers and then direct our publicity campaign in the shape of regular mailing of literature at those who are not hopelessly wet. So, if any of you who are here signed the wet petition last fall, you are sure to get some interesting (Continued on page 7)

Will Have Lecture.

HELD ANNUAL MEETING

Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company Met at Petoskey Last Week Tuesday.

The board of directors of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company held their annual meeting at the office of the company, Petoskey, last week Tuesday and transacted the routine business of the closing up of the year's affairs. The report of the auditors showed good business for 1913, with all expenses and losses paid before January 1st, as required by law.

The collection of the liability assessment spread in 1912 has not progressed as fast as was desired and demanded by the Commissioner of Insurance and, pursuant to his demands that the old indebtedness of the company should be wiped out at an early date, a resolution was adopted instructing the secretary to bring suit at once against any and all parties that may owe any assessments or other obligations to the company.

The present Insurance Commissioner is determined to bring all mutual companies doing business in this state strictly under the provisions of the law. This seems to mean "Pay up or expect the sheriff to visit us."

FIVE GOLDEN WEDDINGS

Have Been Celebrated in the Parmelee Family in Two Generations.

The following published in the Grand Rapids Evening News under date of January 8 will be of interest to a great number of residents of this city:

"Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee of Charlevoix have just celebrated their fifty-fourth wedding anniversary. Mr. Parmelee's parents celebrated their golden wedding many years ago and Mrs. Parmelee's parents celebrated their golden wedding. Mr. Parmelee's parents lived together 58 years and her parents 52 years."

Mrs. Parmelee also has a brother who has been married fifty years and a sister in good health who last year at Woodstock, Ontario, celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of her marriage. This is among the family ties there has been five golden weddings in two generations.

New Meat Market.

Frank Cheney of this city purchased the meat market of the Mrs. B. W. Miller store Monday and took possession Tuesday morning.

Mr. Cheney is well known in this city and has worked at the meat business for several years. The market will be maintained in the same up to date manner as before and a cordial invitation is extended to the old as well as new customers.

PLAIN TALKS TO YOUNG MEN

Dr. A. S. Warthin Giving Lectures for Men in High Schools of State.

Illustrated by Lantern Slides—Warns Young Men Not to Sow Wild Oats.

To young men who think they must sow their wild oats let me say don't. The idea that a boy cannot come to healthy manhood without running every chance of wrecking his life is false. It is not based on any mental, moral or physical fact and he is much more liable to suffer from the error of his ways to the time of his death, says Doctor A. S. Warthin, head of the pathological department of the University of Michigan. The doctor makes a plea for right living as a safeguard for future generation and shows the probable effects of a wild life in youth.

Parents should teach their children sex hygiene as soon as they are old enough to go to school. A few quiet words properly spoken to a young child will save him from false ideas which will always prove a detriment, for if he is not educated properly in these matters at home he will learn them the wrong way from companions at school. Dr. Warthin touches upon many subjects which are to be seriously considered by those who hear him and his lecture is illustrated with lantern slides prepared in his own laboratory at Ann Arbor.

He does not deplore the love for dancing and tells the students that the exercise is beneficial when not overdone. He declares, however, that the old-fashioned waltz is much more sensible and healthful than the tango and quite as enjoyable. "I want to see the boys and girls get all the joy there is in life," says Dr. Warthin. "There cannot be too many outside activities for the students. I believe they should go into hobbies as well as athletics. Football, baseball, basketball, boy scout hikes, vocational work, camp-fire girls' work, all go to make life more enjoyable for those who participate in them and they all help in general school work by building up the bodies of the students to withstand the more serious work."

LIME-SULPHUR SPRAY IN LEAD

Combination Proves Favorite Among Fruit Growers as Insect Destroyer.

TAKE PLACE OF OTHER SPRAYS

Both Are Active Agents in the Destruction of Fungus and Insects.

No Substitute for Arsenate of Lead Has Been Found Which Will Give as Good Results.

There are probably no two materials which are of more importance in the production of good fruit than lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead. They are the only materials needed, with the exception of water in the spraying solutions for most all fruits; exceptions to this are the peach and grape. In spraying for peaches the materials are the same but the lime-sulphur is in different form. In the case of grapes, Bordeaux mixture must substitute lime-sulphur as a fungicide.

Both lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead are of quite recent introduction in fruit work, having come to notice at about the same time. In 1892 arsenate of lead was first used for spraying purposes, the Gypsy Moth Commission of Massachusetts using it in the control of the gypsy and brown-tail moths. Shortly before this time lime-sulphur, a sheep dip, was first used as a spray by M. E. Disney, of Fresno, Cal. But it was not until recent years after lime-sulphur was shown valuable as a fungicide by western investigators that the two were combined; then, by the efficient work they did they speedily took the place held by the once popular combination, Bordeaux mixture and Paris green.

"As with many new things, the combination of lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead was thought to be impossible for spraying purposes by many authorities. Some were sure that the chemical action which resulted when they were mixed would be harmful, and recommended anything but the addition of arsenate of lead to lime-sulphur. It may be recalled that the introduction of lime-sulphur as a spray was also received in the same way. Eastern authorities stated that while it worked well in the west it was out of all suited to eastern conditions. But now there is an unanimous vote in favor of both these."

Everyone who has used the materials has noticed the color change when arsenate of lead and lime-sulphur were mixed. At first the color is a reddish yellow, then a gradually turning darker until the color is a chocolate brown. If there is an excess of lime-sulphur the mixture will turn black. This is due to chemical action and the blackish substance is the precipitate of this action. Often after the tank has been sprayed out the black material will be found in the bottom of the tank. This can be prevented to a great extent by adding the arsenate of lead after it is thoroughly worked into high d form and by keeping the dilute lime-sulphur thoroughly agitated when the arsenate of lead is being added.

According to the chemists, the addition of arsenate of lead to lime-sulphur decreases the sulphur and calcium in solution and increases the thiosulfate and sulfate in solution. The latter two are thought to be the active agents in killing insects and are also the parts of the solution which add fungicidal value to the lime-sulphur.

Regardless of the chemical action actual experimentation has shown that the addition of arsenate of lead adds greatly to the fungicidal value of lime-sulphur and it has also shown that the arsenate of lead has slight fungicidal value when sprayed alone.

There is a vast amount of work being done by the experts in the endeavor to improve lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead or to find something better. No substitute for arsenate of lead has been found which will give as good results. A few get discouraged with lime-sulphur and go back to the Bordeaux mixture in a short time they are advising lime-sulphur again. —Michigan Farmer.

WHEAT HAS NOT SUFFERED

Such is the Opinion of Correspondents Throughout Entire State.

Conditions of Crops and Stock in State of Michigan as Given by Secretary of State.

Wheat.—In answer to the question "Has wheat during December suffered injury from any cause?" 129 correspondents in the state answer "yes" and 297 "no" and in answer to the question "Has the ground been well covered with snow during December?" all correspondents throughout the state answer "no."

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in December at 80 flour mills was 146,392 and at 55 elevators and to grain dealers $9,438, or a total of 235,510 bushels. Of this amount 173,126 bushels were marketed in the four southern tiers of counties, 49,922 in the central counties and 12,292 in the northern counties and the Upper Peninsula. The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the five months August-December was 3,500,000.

Sixty-two flour mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in December.

The average condition of live stock in the state is reported as follows, comparison being made with stock in good, healthy and thrifty condition: Horses and sheep, 95; cattle, 97; swine, 95.

The average prices January 1st of some of the principal farm products were as follows:

The average price of wheat per bushel was 91 cents; rye, 62 cents; corn, 69 cents; oats, 41 cents. The average price of hay per ton was $13.18. The average price of fat cattle was $6.40 per cwt.; of fat hogs, $7.25 per cwt.; of dressed pork, $9.68 per cwt.

The average price of each class of horses was as follows: Under one year old, $56.69; between one and two years old, $60.86; between two and three years old, $114.37; three years old and over, $174.15.

Milk cows were worth $93.31 per head. Cattle other than milk cows, under one year old, $17.77; between one and two years old, $30.14; between two and three years old, $15.09; three years old and over, $35.40.

Sheep under one year old, $14.07; one year old and over, $17.90.

Hogs not fattened, $6.11 per cwt. The prices given are for the state.

The price of wheat is 6 cents lower than one year ago; rye the same; shelled corn, 14 cents; oats, 6 cents.

For May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

The above letter should reach you before this letter is sent. I have been suffering from indigestion and constipation for some time. I have tried many remedies but have not found any relief. I have heard of May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and I have decided to try it. I have just received it and I am sure it will do me good. I will write you again when I have had some more experience with it.

HOW FAR IS PETOSKEY?

Not So Far That the Statements of Its Residents Cannot Be Verified.

Rather an interesting case has been developed in Petoskey. Being so near by, it is well worth publishing here. The statement is sincere—the proof convincing:

S. L. Wixson, 509 Wachtel avenue, Petoskey, Mich., says: "A few months ago I had an extremely lame back and severe pains across my loins. I could hardly get around. I could not stoop or lift or rest well, and mornings I was stiff and lame. My kidneys were sluggish and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I got a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me. I don't have any backaches or pains in my kidneys now."

and hay, 58 cents higher.

The average price of horses etc., one year ago was as follows: Under one year old, $53.52; between one and two years old, $56.26; between two and three years old, $129.26; three years old and over, $168.

Milk cows were worth $16.85 per head. Cattle other than milk cows, under one year old, $14.02; between one and two years old, $23.73; between two and three years old, $35.10; three years old and over, $11.76.

Sheep under one year old, $17.61; one year old and over, $14.30.

Hogs not fattened, $6.20 per cwt.

On January 1st, 1914, the average price of wheat was 80 cents; shelled corn, 47 cents; oats, 35 cents per bushel; hay, $8.35 per ton; fat cattle, $3.11; fat hogs, $1.19; dressed pork, $5.31 per cwt. Horses under one year old, $33.21; between one and two years old, $52.73; between two and three years old, $58.66; three years old and over, $108.23.

Milk cows were worth $14.32 per head. Cattle other than milk cows, under one year old, $10.26; between one and two years old, $17.35; between two and three years old, $26.39; three years old and over, $31.21.

Sheep under one year old, $28.21; one year old and over, $44.3.

Hogs not fat $7.78 per cwt.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. met in the Congregational church Friday afternoon, January 10th, for its first meeting in the new year, and held a reception to the girls of the normal class, high school, eighth grade and others. Mrs. Taggart was in charge. The meeting opened with singing, followed by an earnest prayer for the girls by Miss Agnes Rodger and another song. A few introductory remarks were given by Mrs. Taggart when she introduced Miss Adams of Ironton, who gave a very interesting talk to the girls on the topic "The Girl of Today and the Woman of Tomorrow."

There was a goodly number of members present, thirty or more, and a large group of girls. After the address by Miss Adams, the girls presented into the audit account, where they were served with home made candy and listened to several addresses on the program by Miss M. M. M. M.

C. T. U. at Astbury Park, New Jersey, November 1st, 1914. The local union, in accordance with this plan, decided to call a meeting Thursday afternoon, to be held in the Baptist church, notice of which will appear in another column. Mrs. R. Lewis was instructed to write a message of love and sympathy to Mrs. Alcox, the president of the union, who is still ill. After prayer by Miss Himes the meeting was adjourned.

CHAPTER XV. Within the Toils.

THE going of Garson left the room deathly still. Dick turned to Mary and took her hand in his. His arm swept about her in a protecting embrace—just at that time she would have fallen. A whisper came from her quivering lips. Her face was close to his, as he could not have caught the unspoken murmuring. The muscles of her face twitched. She rested suddenly against him as if bereft of any strength—body or of soul. Yet, in the intense of her utterance, the feeble whisper struck like a shriek of horror.

"I—I never saw any one killed before!"

Before he could utter the soothing words that rose to his lips, Dick was interrupted by a slight sound at the door. Instantly he was all alert to meet the exigencies of the situation. He stood by the couch, bending forward a little as if in a posture of intimate fondness. He heard the noise again presently, now so near that he made sure of being overheard, so he once he spoke with a forced cheerfulness in his intonation.

"I tell you, Mary," he declared, "everything's going to be all right for you and me. It was only of you to come here to me like this."

The girl made no response. Dick, in nervous apprehension as to the issue, sought to bring her to realization of the new need that had come upon them.

"Talk to me," he commanded very softly. "They'll be here in a minute. When they come in pretend you just came here in order to meet me. 'Tis Mary. You must, dearest!'"

Then, again his voice rose to loudness as he continued: "Why, I've been trying all day to see you. And now here we are together, just as I was beginning to get really discouraged. I know my father will eventually."

He was interrupted by the swift swinging open of the hallway door. Burke stood just within the library, a revolver pointed menacingly.

"Hands up, all of you!" The inspector's voice fairly roared the command.

The belligerent expression of his face vanished abruptly as his eyes fell on Dick standing by the couch and Mary reclining there in helpless distress.

"What are you doing in this house at this time of night?" Dick demanded.

"I recognize you, Inspector Burke. But you must understand that there are limits even to what you can do."

"It seems to me, sir, that you exceed your authority by such an intrusion as this."

Burke waved his revolver toward Mary.

"What's she doing here?" he asked.

"You forget yourself, Inspector. This is my wife. She has the right to be with me—her husband!"

"Where's your father?" he questioned roughly.

"In bed, naturally," was the answer.

"I ask you again. What are you doing here at this time of night?"

"Oh, call your father," Burke directed.

"It's late," Dick objected. "I'd rather not disturb him, if you don't mind."

Suddenly he smiled very winningly and spoke with a good assumption of ingenuousness.

"Inspector," he said briskly, "I see I'll have to tell you the truth. It's this: I've persuaded my wife to go away with me. She's going to give all that other sort of thing up. Yes, we're going away together. So, you see, we've got to talk it over. Now then, Inspector, if you'll come back in the morning—"

As he spoke the white beam of the flashing searchlight from the door fell between the under a draperies of the octagonal window. The light startled the Inspector again, as it had done once before that same night. His gaze followed it instinctively. So within the second he saw the still form lying there on the floor.

There was no mistaking that motionless, crumpled posture. The Inspector leaped to the switch by the door and turned on the lights of the chandelier. In the next moment he had reached the door of the passage across the room, and with the sound of shrill whistle he followed forward to the last.

"Casidy! Casidy!"

Casidy came rushing in with the other detectives.

"Why, what's it all mean, chief?" he questioned.

"They've got Griggs!" Burke answered. There was exceedingly rage in his "Hands up! All of you!"

voice as he spoke from his kneeling posture beside the body, to which he had hurried after the summons to his aids. "I'll break you for this, Casidy," he declared fiercely. "Why didn't you get here on the run when you heard the shot?"

"But there wasn't any shot. I tell you, chief, there wasn't been a sound!"

Burke rose to his feet. His face was set in its sternest mold.

"You could drive a horse through the hole they made in him," said Casidy.

Burke wheeled on Mary and Dick.

"Well, hand it over. Where's the gun?"

He nodded toward Dick and he gave his order. "Search him!"

Dick took the revolver from his pocket and held it out.

At this incriminating crisis for the son the father hastily strode into the library. He had been aroused by the Inspector's shouting and was evidently greatly perturbed.

"What's all this?" he exclaimed.

Burke in a moment like this was no respecter of persons.

"You can see for yourself," he said grimly to the dumfounded magnate.

"So," he went on, with somber menace in his voice, "you did it, you man!"

He nodded toward the detective. "Well, Casidy, you can take 'em both downtown. That's all!"

The command aroused Dick to remonstrance against such indignity toward the woman he loved.

"Not her!" he cried imploringly.

"You don't want her, Inspector. This is all wrong!"

"Dick," Mary advised quietly, "don't talk, please."

"What do you expect?" Burke inquired tranquilly. "As a matter of fact, the thing's simple enough, you man. Either you killed Griggs or you didn't."

The Inspector with his charge made a careless gesture toward the corpse of the murdered stood pigeon. Edward Gilder looked and saw the elasticity in the animate heap of flesh and bone that had once been a man. He fairly reeled back.

"You could drive a horse through the hole they made in him."

at the spectacle, then faintly with an outstretched hand until he laid hold of a chair, into which he sank helplessly.

"Either you killed him," the voice repeated gruffly, "or she did. Well then, young man, did she kill him?"

"Good God, no!" Dick shouted against.

"Then it was you?"

"No, no! He didn't!" Mary's words came frantically.

Burke reiterated the accusation.

"One of you killed Griggs. Who is one of you did it?" He scowled at Dick. "Did she kill him?"

"I told you no!"

"Well, then," he listened to the girl and he laid him."

The nod of his head was toward Dick. Then as she remained silent "I'm talking to you!" he snarled. "Did he kill him?"

The reply came with a soft distinctness that was like a crash of destiny.

"Yes."

Dick turned to his wife in repressed amazement.

"Mary?" he cried incredulously.

"You'll swear he killed him?" Burke asked hoarsely.

"Why not?" she responded listlessly.

At this intolerable assertion he deemed it Edward Gilder sat rigidly erect in his chair.

"God!" he cried despairingly. "That's your vengeance!"

"I don't want vengeance—now!" she said.

"But they'll try my boy for murder—the magnate remonstrated, distracted. "Oh, no, they can't!" came the rejoinder.

"What's the reason we can't?" Burke stormed.

"Because my husband merely killed a burglar. He shot him in defense of his house!"

In his office next morning Inspector Burke was fuming over the failure of his conspiracy. He had been through this plot to violate his authority, so readily flouted by Garson and Mary Turner. Instead of the much to be desired result from his scheming the outcome had been nothing less than disastrous.

Some one had murdered Griggs, the stood pigeon. The murder could not go unpunished. The slayer's identity must be determined. To the discovery of this identity, the Inspector was at the present moment devoting himself by adroit questioning of Dacey and Chicago Red, who had been arrested in one of their acrimonious bantams.

"Come across now!" he admonished. His voice rolled forth like that of a bull of Bashan. He was on his feet, facing the two thieves. His hand was thrust forward menacingly, and his eyes were savage.

"I don't know nothing!" Chicago Red's voice was between a snarl and a whine. "Ain't I keep telling you that for over an hour?"

Burke gave Dacey, who chanced to be the meiter of the two, a shove that sent the fellow staggering halfway across the room under his impetus.

"Dacey, how long have you been out?"

"A week."

"Want to go back for another stretch?"

"God, no!"

"Who shot Griggs?"

The reply was a chorus from the two.

"I don't know, honest, I don't!"

In his exasperation Chicago Red moved toward his companion.

"Honest to Gawd, I don't know nothing about it!"

The Inspector's fist shot out toward Chicago Red's jaw. The thief went to his knees under the blow.

"Now, get up and talk!" Burke's voice came with unrelenting poignancy against the ari-ken man.

Critically Chicago Red obeyed as far as the getting to his feet was concerned. "While he got slowly to his feet he took care to keep at a respectful distance from the official."

Casidy entered the Inspector's office to announce the arrival of the district attorney.

"Send 'em in," Burke directed. He made a gesture toward the doorman and added "Take 'em back!"

"I came as soon as I got your message," the district attorney said as he seated himself in a chair by the desk. "And I've sent word to Mr. Gilder. Now, then, Burke, let's have this thing quickly!"

The Inspector's explanation was concise.

APPLES OVER A YEAR OLD

Exhibit Samples That Have Been Kept in Storage for a Long Time.

Western Michigan Product Noted for Color and Good Keeping Qualities.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau is in receipt of nine apples which were picked October 21, 1912, which means a year ago. These apples were grown on North Manitou Island in the famous Newhall orchard. They have been in storage since, as an experiment to discover how long under favorable conditions the Western Michigan apples can be kept.

It has been known among fruit growers for years that the apples grown in Northern Michigan have exceptional keeping qualities. A prominent Michigan fruit grower said some years since: "Apples grown in the upper part of the lower peninsula of Michigan on high elevations from 900 to 1000 feet above the Great Lakes are usually highly colored, of good quality and excellent keepers. The sunnier apple here becomes a fall apple and the fall apple an early winter apple. Winter apples have been kept in solid condition in a common cellar for a period of two years. The home of the apple is in the northern states and parts of Southern Canada."

The orchards on North Manitou Island while not having a high elevation still are favored with climatic conditions which are much the same as prevail where the ground is high above the sea level. The water entirely surrounding the island modifies the climatic conditions to such an extent that the winters are less severe than on the mainland and the summers less scorching.

A sample of these apples was brought to this city last July by Captain William Finnan and at that time was in splendid condition. The apples mentioned above are evidently some that were picked and placed in storage at the same time.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.
Luke 10:25-37—Jan. 18.
"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."
Mark 12:31.

OUR studies since the first of the year relate to the last six months of our Lord's ministry. Jesus knew that His death was approaching; that He must, as the antitypical Passover Lamb, be put to death the following Spring, on the fourteenth day of the first month. His ministry had only begun to awaken the people.

The seventy, whose ordination, or commission, we considered a week ago, were sent across the Jordan into Perea. Shortly afterward, Jesus Himself went thither. The purpose of His ministry was to thoroughly awaken the Jews to the fact that the time of their visitation had come. This witness bore fruit—after Pentecost.

Later, the seventy returned, expressing joy and confidence, remarking that even the demons were subject to them in the Father's name. The Master took occasion to tell them that they overlooked their chief cause of joy, saying, "Rejoice, rather, that your names are written to Heaven"—than that demons are subject to your command.

So it is with us. Salvation is a personal matter, and works and preaching are merely incidentals connected with it. The great time for works is future. Then, if faithful, we shall be associated with the Redeemer in His work of regenerating humanity.

Who Is My Neighbor?

At this point today's study opens a lawyer thought to entrap the Master by asking, "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" In those days, when Israel's only law was God's Law, a lawyer was one well versed in Moses' teachings. Jesus, therefore, said, "How do you understand the matter? You know what is written in the Law."

The lawyer replied, "We are to love the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our soul, with all our strength, with all our mind; and our neighbor as ourselves." Jesus approved, saying, "Do this, and you shall live. You will never die."

The lawyer was caught. He knew that the people of Israel had been dying for centuries, notwithstanding the Law; yet himself and others were outwardly claiming to keep the Law. Out of his own testimony Jesus showed him that he was not keeping the Law, as he and the Pharisees in general pretended to do. No fallen man can keep God's perfect Law; for it is so comprehensive that only a perfect man could keep it thoroughly.

The lawyer sought to make the best of a bad argument. Instead of acknowledging his defeat, he asked, "Who is my neighbor?" This was one of the points which Jesus had particularly made against the Pharisees—that they were outwardly pious, religious—prayed, fasted, etc.; yet in heart they were unjust, and took advantage of widows and orphans, not loving these as themselves. The lawyer sought to imply that according to God's law only certain special ones were neighbors.

Should Do Good to All as We Have Opportunity.

Jesus again outwitted him, saying, "I will give you a parable. A man going down to Jericho was met by thieves, who wounded him and left him half dead. There happened that way a priest, one of the highest representatives of the Law. When he saw the man, he passed by on the other side. Likewise a Levite passed by, next in relationship to God's service. He went near, looked at the man, but did nothing. Then came along a Samaritan, who bound up the wounds, took the man to an inn, cared for him at the sacrifice of time and strength, and finally paid for his keep until his own return from Jerusalem."

Now, said Jesus, which man acted the neighbor's part? The lawyer answered that it was the one who showed mercy. Jesus replied that this should be an example to the lawyer—that he should be kind, thoughtful, generous to whoever needed help.

We do well to remember God's object in giving commandments. He does not take pleasure in the number of times we bow knee or bend in tender formal worship. He especially delights to see us cultivate His own spirit of love, kindness and generosity. Well does the Apostle tell us that love is the fulfilling of the Law, and that love is the principal thing in character, in Divine estimation. All else counts for nothing in God's sight.

Evidently the great lesson for Christians to learn is to put away all anger, malice, envy, hatred, strife, and to put on meekness, gentleness, long-suffering, brotherly kindness, etc. St. Peter tells us that if we do these things we shall never fall, but that an abundant entrance shall be granted to us into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.—2 Peter 1:10, 11.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.
Benjamin Franklin

How to Practice Stocking Economy.
"SIR stockings are a necessity in these days of the silk shirt. The man who has little to spend on his clothes can have them without any loss of extravagance if he does as I do—wash them herself," says a woman who has to economize strictly.

"It's perspiration and dust that wear out stockings more than actual foot wear. I have a pair of my son's supply of silk stockings for the street more than a few times, and if I wear a pair on a warm, dusty walk I change for a fresh pair, just as soon as I can. You cannot think how long I have made a set of three pairs of not expensive quality last by doing this."

"Stockings tucked into the soles of the shoes to wait there for the week's wash suffer from the corroding effects of dust and perspiration."

"It just takes a minute to wash out your stockings. I do it now without even regarding it a chore. It has become second nature. I find that the personal care of one's stockings saves them in another way, for one is more careful to mend the wee holes that soon become big ones, which are a prime to disregard if the stockings go to the general wash."

"The silk stockings with cotton soles are a boon to comforters like myself. These I use for street wear. One can get them very reasonable now."

"I find that silk undersocks are also not an extravagance if dealt with the way I deal with my silk hosiery."

Egg Soup Is Cheap.

Egg soup is most nourishing, and those who do not care to eat eggs cooked in any of the usual ways may benefit by having them in soup. Three eggs, three pints of stock, one tablespoonful of flour, pepper and salt.

Mix the flour to a smooth paste, add it to the stock, leaving it to boil for a quarter of an hour. Beat up the eggs and mix them gradually with a little stock; then add them to the soup, stirring carefully for a few minutes, but taking care that the soup does not boil as this would curdle it. Serve with little snippets of fried bread.

Vandelin Slaneck, a local meat man at Traverse City, was arrested by State Food Inspector William J. Mickel last week. He was fined $27.75 for selling hamburger steak which upon analysis was found to contain 78,100 of one per cent of sulphides, a material which is the chief element of embalming fluid. His arrest was the first step in the campaign which is being conducted for pure food in northern Michigan.

It is seldom that anybody hears the merchant who conducts a systematic advertising campaign complain about business conditions. The man who does the heavy kicking is the one who through perverted ideas of economy has allowed his name to drop out of the public prints and thereby been forgotten by the purchasing public.
